COURT.

Wednesday's Daily.

The first witness was Harry Greenberg, himself. He told his story about as already given in the DAILY and was a lively witness. The defense often got him excited, but in the main he stuck to his story and seemed to be telling the truth. Once in a while he got hot and fired answers back in a way to cause a little merriment. Mrs. Patterson from the north part of town was put on the stand, but there was a good deal of objecting, and she was told to stand aside for awhile. Jonas Dilgard came next. It was in the road near him that the trouble took place. He was hoeing corn in a field by the road when the coffee sellers came along. They got out and tried to sell him some coffee at 10 cents a package. He asked if they could afford to sell at that price. They said they lost on every pound they sold. But he would not buy that kind of coffee and they started away, telling him he was "a d—d fool and didn't know a good thing when he saw it." After they left him, he went on hoeing back away from the road, but noticed that they met another person and tried to sell coffee. After that person went on they met Greenberg. He remembered Greenburg by his cap, as he had seen him go north, Stopped about twenty-five rods off in the field, as he heard loud quarreling. Saw Greenberg drop off his seat and out at the rear end of his wagon Heard loud quarreling. Finally heard Greenberg screaming, and just then the party jumped into their wagon and flew north, whipping their team. Greenberg got his horse, which seemed frightened, under control and went south.

AFTERNOON.

The first witness was Mr. Dilgard's son, Karl, a lad of thirteen He saw the first of the trouble, but when the men jumped down out of their wagon, and finally caught Greenberg's horse by the bit, he was behind the house.

Deputy Sheriff Platter sworn. Greenberg came to him about 4 p. m. was some blood on his clothes and he was looking as if he had a scuffle. Was detained in Waterloo about half an hour getting the affidavit.

Karl Dilgard, recalled and cross examined. Was close to the parties, but saw no dust or blood on Greenberg's clothes. (He saw the first and last of the trouble. Had been out riding his bicycle, and came back just as the trouble began. He did not see the striking, as he had gone back of the house to put away his wheel. When he came back, it seems the worst of the trouble was over.)

The defense here began, Link making the statement of what they wanted to show.

The first witness called by defense was Charles Studley. Am one of the defendants. Live in Fort Wayne. Have been in junk business several years. Going from here to Waterloo met Greenbung, tried to sell him coffeyette, traded him some for an old copper boiler, but later, he wanted to trade back. Stopped about 10 or 15 minutes. Did not strike Greenberg nor think of such a thing No one got out of the wagon but me. Smead did not get out of the wagon and take Greenberg's horse by the bits. The girl did not say a word to Greenberg at any time. Cross examined by Welsheimer. I am working for myself.

We left the holdup case yesterday, with Steadley, their leading man testifying. He denied everything that Harry Greenberg had told. He says he owns a greater part of the rig, but took Smead along as a partner. Smead claims he once lived in DeKalb county. Then they invited Bowers to go with them, as he was not doing anything They left Ft. Wayne for burn Sunday evening, with about fifty packages of the coffee.

They camped out that night about seven miles from Ft. Wayne, and Monday came through Auburn. (At Auburn they visited some of the saloons, while the girl staid in the wagon. She tried to sell a package of coffee to a man going by, and when he said he did not want it, she threw it after him.) After leaving Anburn, they went north on the Waterloo road. At Chauncey Patterson's the three men went into the yard, and tried to catch one of Patterson' chickens, but it escaped and ran under the house. When Mrs Patterson came out to object, they claimed it was their chicken, but she finally drove them away. On the stand Studley wore he had traded a package of coffee for the chicken. When Bowers was on the stand he swore he went to sleep when they started out of Auburn, and did not wake till they reaced Waterloo, and so did not see the trouble. On cross examination he said he was wakened when Greenberg screamed so loud, and later spoke about helping to catch the chicken at Patterson's but would not own that he had chased it in his sleep. All three of the men denied the main part of Harry's story, but admitted he had screamed. They claim that Harry sold them an old copper boiler for some coffee, that he then backed out, but that Steadley went to the wagon, and got the boiler and put it in his own wagon and put the coffee in Harry's wagon. Bowers said that after they had started from Waterloo, to go to Butler, Steadley threw out the old boiler somewhere, to get rid of it. The girl was not put on the stand. All the attorneys are young men but they made a lively fight, and between them and the witnesses the spectators well entertained. The case closed and after pleadings, was given to the jury. They had a long wrestle with it. The offense charged was "assault with intent to commit a robbery." The punishment is imprisonment from two to fourteen years. It was after eleven o'clock before a verdict was agreed on. It was sealed up, and when court opened this morning at 8:30 o'clock, was was given to Judge Roby by their foreman 'Squire Cool of Jackson. They found all four guilty of assault and battery, and gave them a sliding scale of punishments:

Charles Steadley, 40 days in jail and $15 fine; Charles Bowers, 30 days in jail and $10 fine; Ed. Smead 20 days in jail and $5 fine; Lilly Cunningham, 10 days in jail and $1 fine.

Judge Roby asked Bowers if he was married and his name Brown, He said he had been married, but was divorced, and his name was not Brown. Smead also denied being married. These questions were called up, because of an article in the Fort Wayne Journal, which said Smead was a married named Seavey, and Bowers a married man named Brown. (We publish this elsewhere.) The Judge then sent them to jail. All looked happy, for they had feared a term in the penitentiary, and the Judge assured them he thought they deserved it.

Horrible! Horrible!

Innocent children by the thousand are constantly dying of diarrhœa whose life might be saved. How quickly the demon works! Flesh speedily wastes away as though subjected to fire. You try change of water, and change of food and change of air. The handiest and quickest and safest thing you can do is to procure at once a bottle of Dr. Hand's Diarrhœa Mixture, at any drug store, for 25c. It's wonderful how quickly it brings good results. BURGLARS.

About seven o'clock this morning, it was discovered that the rear door an first floor of Charles Eckhart's residence was open, and investigation showed that burglars had been in the house. They had entered at a cellar window, and from the cellar got into the rooms above by prying the cellar door open. Once in the house, they made themselves at home, as Mr. Eckhart and family are up at Coldwater, Mich., visiting their daughter, Mrs. Geo. Shugers. The thieves were evidently out for the boodle, and rummaged and overturned everything, went through bureau drawers, tumbled beds over, and mussed things over generally When they had staid long enough, they opened the rear door and went out. As far as can be found they got nothing. There seems to be no clue, but the sheriff's office has been called on for assistance and some trace may be obtained, though this is doubtful. It is believed to be the work of home talent, as the thief evidently knew that no one was at home. It was first discovered by Ed. Robbings' people across south. They saw a tramp standing at Eckhart's rear door, knocking and waiting for some one to come out. They saw also, that the door was open. After the tramp saw no one was coming to answer his knock, he went away. Ed Robbins, knowing that Eckhart was gone, telephoned to Mrs. Morris Eckhart and she and Mrs Will Eckhart went down, and saw how things were, and then telephoned for Frank Eckhart at the factory, and he and Geo. Shugers came, and after looking things over, they called on the sheriff.

MORE BOND CASH.

Deputy Auditor Geo. Ralston informs us that yesterday afternoon, a heavy payment was made by the Coffinberry bondsmen. The sum turned in was $3,133.90, of which $2,133.90 was from the J. L. Davis receivership assets. As the entire shortage in the Coffinberry matter is $7,000. this leaves only $3,866.10 to be paid in by the bondsmen. And as this is the last unsettled official bond it will be seen that the trouble is nearly over. And the men who are to pay the rest of it are good and every dollar will be made up, so as far as the various sets of bondsmen of the defaulting officers are concerned the county will lose nothing.

Right here it should be noted, tha when the auditor's annual settlement with the county was made, in June, many people objected to it, claiming that three of the items that went to reduce the county indebtedness should not have been put into the statement, as they might not produce that much money. These items were, the $1,400 due from Sawvel's bondsmen, $1,420.65 from Fair's and $7,000 from Coffinberry's a total of $9,820.65. This amount was added to the cash on hand, and the sum taken from the total indebtedness, showed the net debt of the county to be $45,041.48. The correctness of this settlement, must now be plain to all, when we see the last dollar of the money the bondsmen must pay, safe and certain. We feel that much credit is due to all the officers and bondsmen who have had anything to do with untangling and settling these complicated and unpleasant matters. Let us give them full credit for honesty and ability. And right here, we wish to go on record as being in favor of keeping up the county levy high enough to pay this debt at an early date.

DOINGS OF THE DAY.

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Eventful Happenings in Every Hemisphere—Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Politics, Religion, and Commerce, Sandwiched with Minor Affairs.

CONTINUES TO IMPROVE.

Dun & Co. Make an Encouraging Report at the Outlook.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says:

"Dispatches from almost every northern city of importance report without exception an improvement in business and splendid crop prospects. The task of adjusting the business and industries of the country to the conditions created by law has progressed with gratifying rapidity and ease. Even the increasing strength of the striking coal miners probably forwards the adoption of the uniformity plan which promises to remove most of the causes of such struggles. Some confusion is caused by events, seemingly contradictory, by the closing of large cotton mills when many other works are starting, and by a decline in some prices when others are advancing, but the balance is unmistakably on the right side.

"The most important event since the passage of the new tariff is the increase in foreign demand and the advance in the price for wheat. The latter has risen 4¾ cents during the week."

New Republic Born.

A report has been received from William Meyers Little, Consul at Tegucigalpa, Honduras, enclosing a copy of the treaty that has been signed by representatives of Guatemala, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Honduras and Salvador. It goes into effect September 15. The union is named the Republic of Central America and the countries forming it will now take the name of states. Last year when the Republics of Honduras, Nicaragua and Salvador formed themselves into the "Greater Republic" of Central America, provision was made for the admission of Guatemala and Costa Rica, which has now been accomplished. The treaty is similar to that made last year, except that its provisions are extended and considerable legislation is enacted in it for the government of a new republic.

Must Pay the Rebate.

Commissioner Foreman has issued the following circular to collectors of internal revenue: "You are hereby instructed to collect from all brewers in your district the discount of seven and a half per cent., which was allowed on beer stamps, delivered by you on or before the 24th inst., without regard to the date of the order for stamps. In case of neglect or refusal of brewers to pay the same after demand you will report them for assessment on your July list. You are informed and will so advise all brewers in your district that stamps purchased and delivered before the 24th instant, and upon which the discount of 7½ per cent. has been allowed, may be used for their full face value."

Lost in the Japan Sea.

A brief message has been received announcing the loss of the whaler Cape Horn Pigeon in the Japan sea during a furious storm. Captain Schuliam and the entire crew of eighteen were saved, but 900 barrels of sperm oil went down with the vessel. Two thousand pounds of bone was shipped home just before the disaster. The Cape Horn Pigeon was owned by J. and R. Wing, of New Bedford, Mass.

Grain Going to Europe.

Forty steamers were chartered one day last week to load cargoes of grain at Philadelphia, New York, Baltimore, and Newport for ports in the United Kingdom and Europe, making a day's record, which, it is claimed, has never been equalled. To fill these vessels will require over 4,000,000 bushels of grain. During the past two weeks fixtures for steam tonnage to carry 20,000,000 bushels of cereals abroad have been effected.

It Was Murder.

The details of the fearful tragedy of the burning of Mrs. Killen at Breeden W. Va., corroborates former statements. The body, from which the arms and legs were burned shows gaping wounds in the sides, with the head crushed in. No trace can be found of the $340 in silver Mrs. Killen was known to possess, and this is considered by the authorities to confirm the belief that her death was a murder, and no suicide.

Killed in a Wreck.

Two Lehigh freight trains collided at Depauw Junction, New York, killing George Ellenbee, engineer, and Charles Eddy, fireman. James Rateliffe, fireman, was slightly injured.

Oil Well Almost in Toledo.

The oil well struck within fifteen feet of the city limits of Toledo recently has so increased in flow that it now runs 100 barrels an hour.

Richer Than the Calumet.

Houghton (Mich.) special: Five drill holes in Six-Mile Hill shaft blasted recently, broke seven tons of ground, over one ton of which is native copper. This is three times as rich as the Calumet and Hecla, which has paid dividends o $49,850,000 in less than a quarter of a century, and has caused excitement.

Car Load of Red Ants.

Denver (Colo.) special: Arkansas fruit growers are negotiating for a car load of red ants to be used in killing the worms that ruin Southern orchards.

Paid Duty on Clothes.

Nearly three hundred passengers on steamer Majestic, at New York, had to pay new tariff rates on all personal effects valued at over $100. The amount collected was nearly $3,000, and there was some very forcible language used by the passengers.

Bonanza Mine Sold.

The sale of the Bonanza mine in Oregon has been consummated and the papers signed. The price paid was $750,000. Fifty thousand dollars was paid on the spot. Half of the balance is to be paid in thirty days and the remainder in sixty days.

GO TO SEEK GOLD.

The Steamer Mexico Clears from Port Townsend with 400 Aboard.

The steamer Mexico has left Port Townsend with 400 passengers, all except fifty being bound for the gold fields. All went well provisioned and equipped. Many have supplies for a three-year stay. The party was made up of men representing all callings and professions, including time-scarred veterans who joined the similar rush to the gold fields in California nearly half a century ago. At Seattle, Wash., the steamer City of Topeka arrived from Alaska. The Topeka brought no Klondyke passengers nor glittering gold, but reports that the miners are flocking toward Dyea by the score from Juneau and Sitka and that both places threaten to be depopulated. P. L. Packard and William A. Pratt, president of the Board of Directors of the Street and Sewer Department of Wilmington, Del., have gone to Seattle, Wash. At Seattle they will be joined by a party and will go to Juneau, Alaska, where they will survey a pass from Taku Inlet, on the Alaskan coast, to Testin Lake, which a syndicate proposes to use as a railroad route for transporting miners and supplies into the Yukon territory. Mr. Pratt is an experienced civil and electrical engineer and is professor of electrical engineering at Delaware College. Mr. Packard and Mr. Pratt will return about Oct. 1 with their report.

EUROPE TO COMPLAIN.

New Tariff Bill Expected to Start a Commercial War.

A Washington dispatch says: A commercial war between the United States and Europe is expected to result from the operations of the Dingley law. While three nations of Europe separately filed protests against provisions of the law which they declared were inimical to their interests when the act was under consideration at the capital, all Europe, practically, is expected commercially to combine against this country as a result of the proposed enforcement of the bounty section of the statute. Instructions were sent by the State Department to the consular representatives of the United States throughout the world and by the Treasury Department to its special agents in Europe, directing them to report the amount of bounties paid by the governments to which they are accredited on any products raised for export to the United States. Just as soon as this information is at hand the Treasury Department will take steps to assess all such products at a duty equal to the rate imposed by the law in addition to the bounty paid by the foreign government.

APPEALS ARE ALL IN VAIN.

English Government Will Do Nothing for Mrs. Maybrick.

The British Government has again declined to interfere in the execution of the sentence of Mrs. Florence Maybrick, on the ground that there is no reason for a change of judgment in the matter. The last effort to secure at least an amelioration in the conditions of her confinement was made by Ambassador Hay, who had some correspondence on the subject with the foreign office, which he has transmitted to the State Department. Lord Salisbury appears to have called for a report in the case from Secretary Ridley and the latter regretfully stated that he was unable, in view of the conclusion which had been reached by himself and by his predecessor as to Mrs. Maybrick's guilt, to recommend to her majesty any exceptional treatment should be accorded to her. Secretary Ridley also added that the medical report in Mrs. Maybrick's case was quite satisfactory, an evidence that the Government does not credit any of the statements as to the insanity of the prisoner.

HUNDRED AND TWENTY DROWN.

Six Score Meet Death in the Wreck of a Chinese Steamer.

A dispatch from Singapore says that the Chinese steamer Srihengann, bound from Singapore for Malacca, with 190 passengers, was wrecked in a squall off Malacca on June 19. One hundred and twenty persons, including the captain of the steamer, were drowned. The remainder of the ship's company were rescued by a passing steamer.

GOES THROUGH A TRESTLE.

Cars Filled with Excursionists Are Wrecked in Ohio.

An excursion train went through a trestlework three and a half miles from Marietta, Ohio, Sunday night, and two of the four coaches were precipitated to a cornfield below. The coaches were filled, but no one was killed. About fifteen were badly injured.

Supported by Great Britain.

A letter written by an intelligent Japanese official in Japan to a former Japanese officer living in Los Angeles, Cal., conveys the information that the Japanese Government will forward to Honolulu 1,500 Japanese emigrants. Those individuals are now in the garrison at Neegata, being soldiers in the Japanese service, and will go on shore in Honolulu as simply citizens, but drilled and ready for military duty at once. The steamers which are to convey these men have been chartered by the Japanese Government, and carry, in addition to the 1,500 passengers, arms, ammunition and military stores of sufficient quantity to make it interesting for any party trying to prevent their landing. In addition, three large men-of-war are already prepared to leave Yokohama, to arrive at Honolulu about the same time as the landing of the so-called emigrants will take place. It is an open secret on the Asiatic coast that the admiral in charge of the English fleet there will find it convenient to order some of his ships to cruise in the vicinity of the Hawaiian Islands about that time, and the game of bluff to be played by the Japanese will be backed by English blue jackets, if necessary.

Explosion on a Steamer.

At 6:30 o'clock Friday evening a terrible explosion occurred on the steamer Nutmeg State while she was lying at her slip at Bridgeport, Conn., and as a result four men are dead, three others are thought to be fatally injured and a number more are in a serious condition. The steamer was damaged about $1,000. It was first alleged that lightning struck the boat, but it was later ascertained that a deck hand went into the hold to light his pipe and it is believed that the lighted match in a closed forecastle caused some naphtha gas to explode.

Plunged Down an Abyss.

A dispatch from Grenoble says the body of young Sorrel, the daring Alpine climber, whose venturesome feats have attracted attention this summer and who started July 18 to make the ascent of Mount Taillefer, has been found at the bottom of a deep crevasse with his neck broken.

Elsie Had Expensive Lovers.

The postoffice inspector discovered a shortage of $1,555 in the accounts of Mrs. Annie Duval, postmistress at Fort Russell, Wyo. Mrs. Duval charges her daughter, Elsie, the assistant postmistress, with stealing the money and spending it on her lovers.

Soldiers on Wheels.

The Twenty-fifth United States Infantry bicycle corps reached St. Louis, completing their 2,000-mile ride from Fort Missoula, Mont., in 40 days, 35 of which were actually spent on the road. The corps left Fort Missoula, Mont., on June 14, 23 in number. In the party were Lieut. Moss, Surgeon Kennedy, Edward H. Boos, the official reporter, and 20 soldiers, selected from the four companies stationed at Fort Missoula. During the trip one of the men was returned to Fort Missoula, on account of not being able to keep up. The first twelve days of the trip were rainy and disagreeable, but good time was made, nevertheless. It was during these days that the main divide of the mountains was crossed, as well as the greater part of Montana. There were a few pleasant days while the troops were in Montana. While crossing the Crow Indian reservation heavy rains prevailed, and the corps was stuck in the gumbo mud much of the time. All the way across Wyoming rain hampered the progress of the company, and many hardships arose from lack of good water. The southwestern corner of South Dakota was crossed, two days being occupied in that State. The sandy roads were awful, and the prairie beside the road was a field of prickly pears, making travel on the wheels very careful and tiresome work. A stretch of good but hilly road was struck after leaving Edgemont, and the run from that point to the Nebraska line was made in short order. The corps passed through Grand Island, Lincoln and Table Rock, in Nebraska, and out of that State into Missouri on July 17 at Rulo. As a whole, the roads through Nebraska are good, but far from being level, short, steep hills being continually encountered. The roads across Missouri were bad and hilly, and with the exception of a few gravel roads were the worst on the entire trip. Away from the railroad the country residents were inhospitable, and no reliable information regarding the roads could be gained. The distance covered on the trip was 1,900 miles, the average run per day being 52 2-3 miles. After leaving the Nebraska sand hills the average was over 60 miles per day. The riders stood the trip remarkably well, but few accidents of a serious nature having occurred. According to Lieut. Moss, the trip was a success from a military point of view.

DOOLITTLE IS DEAD.

Breathes His Last at His Daughter's Home in Rhode Island.

Ex-United States Senator James R. Doolittle of Wisconsin died at 9:30 o'clock Tuesday forenoon at the home of his daughter at Edgewood, near Providence, R. I., of Bright's disease. He was 82 years of age. Judge Doolittle was one of the founders of the Republican party. He represented the State of Wisconsin in the United States Senate in the days of Douglas and Trumbull and belonged to the old school of politicians now rapidly passing away. He was born in Hampton, Vt., Jan. 3, 1815. Originally he was a Democrat, but he was opposed to slavery, and following the repeal of the Missouri compromise anti-slavery Democrats were driven out of the Democratic party and the judge went with them. He was elected to the United States Senate as a Republican in 1857. He was a personal friend of Abraham Lincoln and a stanch supporter of the martyred President.

CANADA WANTS ITS SHARE.

Dominion Government Imposes Royalties on Yukon Diggings.

At the close of the second sitting of the Ottawa cabinet Tuesday it was announced that the Government had decided to impose a royalty on all placer diggings on the Yukon in addition to $15 registration fee and $100 annual assessment. The royalty will be 10 per cent each on claims with an output of $500 or less monthly, and 20 per cent on every claim yielding above that amount monthly. Besides this royalty it has been decided, in regard to all future claims staked out on other streams or rivers, that every alternate claim should be the property of the Government, and should be reserved for public purposes and sold or worked by the Government for the benefit of the revenue of the dominion.

Veterans Die by Their Own Hand.

Three soldiers met with violent deaths at the Dayton, Ohio, national military home Friday. Morris S. Swain, aged 69, member of Company H, Sixty-first Pennsylvania regiment, swallowed morphine. He had prominent and wealthy relatives residing in Philadelphia and became weary of life because his privileges had been cut off. John A. Lantz of Company G, Twenty-fourth Ohio, 80 years old, had been in ill health and cut his throat. John Oar, who had sisters living in Boston and Cincinnati, dropped dead.

Took Effect Friday.

The Secretary of the Treasury holds that the new tariff act went into effect at the beginning of the day on which it received the approval of the President, and therefore became operative after midnight of Friday, July 23.

Fear Pirates.

Government officials have been asked to provide a convoy through the Behring Sea, for the steamer Portland on her return trip from the Alaskan gold fields. It is said a gang of pirates meditate seizure of treasure-laden ships.

Prominent Kansan Dead.

Col. John B. Anderson, one of the oldest and most prominent citizens of Central Kansas, is dead.

MARKET QUOTATIONS.

ECLIPSE OF THE SUN.

MOON PARTIALLY OBSCURES OLD SOL.

Event Visible in the United States—With Smoked Glass the Fiery Crescent and Lunar Shadow Could Be Seen.

Sun in a Shadow.

On Thursday, between the hours of 8 and 10 a. m., central standard time, the moon, in the course of her monthly round of the heavens, passed directly between the earth and the sun. The consequence was an eclipse of the sun, which was visible throughout the United States, in Mexico, the West Indies, Central America, the northern half of South America, over a good portion of the Atlantic ocean and on the west coast of Africa.

To observers within the districts bounded by an imaginary line drawn from the central part of New Mexico to Tampico and thence to Havana, the Windward Islands and Lake St. Roque the outer edges of the sun assumed the appearance of a ring of fire. To the fact that the moon appeared smaller than the sun was due the lack of totality in the eclipse as viewed from the earth, though to the putative inhabitants of some of the other planets the eclipse may easily have been total. On this sphere there was, however, no region of total eclipse. And even in the Central American districts from which the annular band could best be seen, the fiery ring lasted for only a few minutes. At Washington and across the whole of the United States at points in about the same latitude as Washington—38 degrees, 50 minutes—exactly one-half of the sun's face (the lower half) was veiled.

Among the thousand and one questions which occurred to the eclipse observers, the most perplexing, perhaps, was, why the area over which the eclipse was visible should be limited, since the sun was visible at the time over one entire hemisphere of the earth, and why the eclipsed sun should appear differently to observers in different localities. The diagram given here will aid in answering these questions.

An eclipse of the sun is a quite different affair from an eclipse of the moon. A lunar eclipse is caused by the passing of the moon through the earth's shadow. It is visible from every point on the earth's surface from which the moon itself is visible at the time—that is, over one entire hemisphere of the earth. Furthermore, a lunar eclipse, whether total or partial, presents one and the same appearance to every observer, no matter where he is stationed, whether in Boston or San Francisco or Rio Janeiro, just as the shadow of a tree cast upon a house appears the same from whatever point of view it is looked at. A solar eclipse is caused by the passage of the moon between us and the sun. To see it one must be so situated that the range is right, just as to see a distant house exactly behind some near object, as a tree, one must so stand that the tree is exactly in line with him and the house. If he moves from this line, to the right or the left, the tree changes its position with reference to the house, and when he has moved to a certain distance it ceases altogether to range with the house. In the case of a solar eclipse the sun is the distant house; the moon is the tree.

Since this moon is a comparatively small body, only about 2,000 miles in diameter, while the diameter of the earth is nearly 8,000 miles, there is upon the earth ample room for getting off of the range when the earth is passing the sun. Thus, to an observer situated Thursday anywhere on the twenty-five mile line above located, say at Havana, the moon appeared to pass directly across the sun's face, its center moving along the line marked on the diagram "Moon's Path," in the direction indicated by the arrow. One circumstance only prevented the eclipse from being total for that observer, and this was that the moon being at very nearly her greatest distance from the earth, her apparent size was at its least and showed less than that of the sun.

For an observer at Washington the range was different. To him the moon's center appeared to pass along the line marked AB, so that its upper limb just reached the sun's center. An observer in about latitude 56 was still farther off of the range. To him the moon, could it be seen, would have seemed to move along the line CD. Its upper edge would have just grazed the lower edge of the sun in passing and there would have been no eclipse. Much less could there be an eclipse for an observer still farther north.

Away back in 1869 the last total eclipse of the sun which was visible in this part of the country took place. Since then, however, there have been several total eclipses which were visible from other parts of the United States. The most notable of these was the eclipse of 1878. It was observed from the neighborhood of Denver and was fruitful of scientific results. Far more frequent are partial eclipses, the area which these cover being very wide. A total eclipse is a rare occurrence, and it is not often that the shadows from two of them are received by the same locality in a hundred years.

APPEARANCE OF THE ECLIPSE AT ITS BEST.

MICHIGAN CITY FIRE.

One Man Killed and Five Families Made Homeless.

One man burned to death in a horrible manner, another suffering from severe burns, several overcome by the fumes of naphtha and heat, a property loss of $70,000, an entire block of buildings in ashes and five families homeless. These are the features of a fire which Wednesday threatened Michigan City, Ind., with destruction and resulted in a call upon the Chicago fire department for assistance.

An explosion in the Michigan City Sash and Door Company's plant resulted in the fire which was subdued only by the persistent efforts of every able-bodied citizen. For a time it looked as if the entire city was to be sacrificed. The fire was beyond control, the wind high, the volunteer firemen unable to make any impression upon the flames which burned hose and apparatus and pushed their way toward business houses and residences. A call for assistance telegraphed to Hammond, Ind., was answered unfavorably by the officials of that place, who replied that they could not spare any of their apparatus. A message to Chicago for help brought an immediate response from Chief Swenie, who started engine companies 40, 42 and 1, in charge of Assistant Chief Campion, on a gallop to the quickly prepared special of the Michigan Central. The engines and hose carts were loaded, the track cleared for a rapid run and everything made ready, when word came that the fire was under control.

The fire originated in an underground vault in the basement of the Michigan City Sash and Door Company, used as a storage room for gasoline, shellac, naphtha and benzine. William Bauman and Herman Lukow went into the vault for the purpose of filling a can with naphtha to be used in the factory. Lukow carried a lighted lantern and Bauman was drawing the oil, when the lantern exploded, setting fire to the oil just drawn. In an instant the place was a mass of flame.

WHERE THE FIRE STARTED.

The fluids stored in the vault became ignited, explosion followed explosion and the entire building was on fire before the employes realized what had happened. Fellow workmen dragged Lukow to a place of safety, but the heat being too intense to permit re-entrance, and Bauman was left to his fate.

The extension of the fire began with the ignition of three one-story frame cottages to the west of the factory. From these and the large building hot cinders were blown across the street to the houses on the south side, and soon these were on fire. At 1 o'clock the wind died down, the firemen redoubled their efforts, and half an hour later all danger to surrounding property was over.

PANIC ON A STEAMER.

Boat Cambria Collides with a Raft of Logs in Lake Huron.

The side-wheel steamer Cambria, doing passenger business between Detroit, Windsor and Sault Ste. Marie, and along the Canadian shore of Lake Huron, was wrecked at an early hour Wednesday morning on the Canadian shore of Lake Huron, near the mouth of St. Clair river, and is a total loss. She had nearly 100 passengers on board, most of them on a summer's outing, and carried a crew of twenty men. She left Sarnia about midnight Tuesday night and went out into Lake Huron in the face of a howling gale from the northwest against the protestations of the passengers. When out about twelve miles the captain decided to run back, and was within about three miles of Fort Gratiot when the boat struck a raft of logs in tow of the tug Vigilant. The shock threw the passengers out of their berths, and in an instant women and children in scant attire were rushing frantically about, while men became alarmed. The passengers were assured by the officers, however, that everything was all right, and every one took time to get fully dressed and await developments.

In trying to extricate herself the boat lost her rudder, leaving her at the mercy of the waves and amid thousands of logs that were continually pounding her sides. Shortly afterward one of her wheels was also broken by striking a log, and she was left in an entirely helpless condition almost in midlake in total darkness. The vessel then began to drift toward the Canadian shore, and after half an hour the boat struck the beach hard, and careened over to one side with the waves breaking over her. The captain refused to launch any boats until daybreak. Soon after daybreak all passengers were taken off in safety, women and children first being taken ashore, followed by the men, and lastly by the crew. The wrecked vessel was valued at $17,000, and insured for $12,000. She was built in 1877 and rebuilt in 1889.

THE "TERRIBLE SWEDE" DYING.

Noted Cyclist Is Prostrated After a Long-Distance Contest.

John Lawson, the "terrible Swede," Chicago's favorite long-distance rider, is dying in Baltimore. Two weeks ago in Baltimore he rode in a race in which he was pitted against a cowboy. The distance was twenty-five miles and the cowboy changed ponies at the end of every mile. Lawson rode a plucky race, considering the conditions of the contest, and finished with a terrific spurt on the home stretch. The next day he was prostrated and has not been able to rise from his bed since.

JOHN LAWSON.

John Lawson was born in Sweden May 13, 1872. He commenced riding in 1891 and did his best work in long-distance events. He was noted for his terrific spurts, which repeatedly won him a victory from seeming sure defeat. Because of his powers as a winner in desperate contests he earned the title which he has borne ever since, that of the "terrible Swede."

Peter McNally, the Boston swimmer who made an attempt to swim the English channel on Saturday and continued his task until within three miles of the French coast, is in good condition. He has received a large number of congratulatory telegrams.

The business men of Spring Valley, Ill., held a meeting at the city hall and agreed to buy a carload of flour for the needy miners in that city. The farmers of Putnam County, across the river, are going to donate 500 bushels of corn.

New Story of Hinshaw Murder.

The attorneys for W. E. Hinshaw, the Belleville Methodist minister who was convicted of murdering his wife on Jan. 9, 1895, and sentenced to the State prison for life, have made public a confession secured from Noah Baney, now in prison for larceny. Baney does not admit any connection with the murder, but claims that it was committed by John Whitney, known as "Kid Whitney," and Guy Van Tassel. Both are now in prison. Baney says the two men named borrowed a horse and buggy from him, saying they had a "job" to do in Danville and inviting him to take part. He declined. They took the rig on the night of Jan. 9, 1895, Baney says, and returned the next morning, telling him they had "done that," going through the house through the back door and kitchen. Shortly afterward the three went to Chicago, remaining a couple of days, and then coming back to Indianapolis. The story agrees with the statement made by Hinshaw on the witness stand at the time of the trial, though Lawyer Parker says that he has verified all the statements made as to the movements of the men before and after the murder and has ascertained the correctness of Baney's story in regard to the loan of the horse and buggy.

All Over the State.

Tuesday morning Delmar Duncan, aged 18, was working with a threshing crew near Young America. In passing around the machine he was kicked by a horse. The force of the kick threw the young man against the machine and his hand was caught in the cyclone straw stacker. The arm was drawn into the gearing up to the shoulder and the flesh stripped from the bones. The fans move at a velocity of 1,000 revolutions a minute. The doctors say there is a possibility of recovery, but the injury is expected to be fatal.

Judge Woods of the United States Circuit Court at Indianapolis issued a decree ordering the sale of the Terre Haute and Logansport Railroad, a branch of the Vandalia. The suit to foreclose an extension mortgage was brought by Benjamin Harrison as trustee. The complainant is to receive $93,030 with interest at 6 per cent from date of the decree and the road is to bear the costs of the suit. If the amount of judgment is not met by the road within sixty days the master in chancery is to sell the entire line, which is 165 miles in length.

Nicholas Warrisse and Marie Kronne were sweethearts ten years ago in Alsace, France. Warrisse came to this country and promised to send for Miss Kronne when he had made a fortune. He started a bakery in New Albany and has been very prosperous. Four weeks ago he sent for Miss Kronne. She arrived a few days later, and they were to have been married Tuesday at St. Mary's Catholic Church. Many of their friends had assembled at the church when the prospective bride changed her mind and refused to marry Warrisse. She had become homesick and dissatisfied with the situation, and Warrisse, almost heartbroken over the turn of affairs, could not dissuade her from her purpose. She started on her return to France Thursday.

The Klondyke excitement in Valparaiso is at fever heat. Wallace L. Wright, an attorney, is organizing a party to go to the new gold fields in Alaska. It will leave the middle of next month for Seattle. From there the members go via steamer to Juneau and continue overland to the foot of the mountains, where they will remain in the town of Dyea for some time, and then will move on to the gold fields at the earliest opportunity. Mr. Wright's party will consist of only young men who are able to stand the journey. Among those are: E. E. White, druggist; Adam Baker, Spencer Ericson, Allen Teeple, E. A. Sparks. Others that will go are E. T. Bowen of Roachdale, Ind.; Frank Hammerlee and D. J. Sullivan, business men of Indianapolis; Attorney Harry Hermony of Lafayette, R. M. Howe of Lexington, Mo.; J. O. Krantz, real estate agent, Nappanee, Ind., and George Meer, Shelbyville, Ind. Wright is receiving applications daily from all over the State, but the party is limited to forty. There is a probability of another party being sent out by a syndicate which may be formed by local capitalists.

Myrtle Sparks Fortune, a Terre Haute bride of a few months, died Wednesday from arsenical poisoning, self-administered, although not with serious purpose to commit suicide. She took the preparation, she said, to frighten her mother, who had scolded her for spending money too freely. Her stepfather, who died less than a year ago, left her $2,000 life insurance. It was this money she had been spending. She took the poison Tuesday afternoon and at supper time told her husband what she had done. Soon afterward she became very ill and physicians tried in vain to save her life.

Orville E. Toney, after running through with $11,500, has disappeared from his home, south of Richmond, leaving many unpaid bills.

At Muncie, the jury in the $50,000 damage suit by Jesse Canada, receiver of the defunct Union City National Bank, against Nathan Cadwallader, president of the bank, and others, returned a verdict allowing the plaintiff the full amount. Cadwallader will be tried at Winchester on an indictment charging him with embezzling the bank's funds to the amount of $30,000. His son, Charles, who was cashier of the bank, was also indicted, but jumped his bond, and is supposed to be in Central America.

SOME OTHER DAY.

There are wonderful things we are going to do,
Some other day.
And harbors we hope to drift into
Some other day.
With folded hands the oars that trail,
We watch and wait for a favorite gale
To fill the folds of an idle sail
Some other day.

We know we must toil if ever we win,
Some other day.
But we say to ourselves there's time to begin
Some other day.
And so deferring, we loiter on,
Until at last we find withdrawn
The strength of the hope we leaned upon,
Some other day.

And when we are old, and our race is run,
Some other day.
We fret for the things that might have been done
Some other day.
We trace the path that leads us where
The beckoning hand of grim despair
Leads us yonder out of the here,
Some other day.

CECILY.

"It's the fault of there being such a large family, dear, that is all."

"And a very bad fault, too."

"Dick! Don't you like the family?"

"Not as I like you, child, and not enough to like them to monopolize you and take up all your time and thoughts and interests, so that I, whom you are going to marry, can hardly get so much as a word or look from you."

"Who is with you now, Dick?"

"Yes, for three minutes at the garden gate, because if I come inside you will be surrounded by the whole lot of them the next moment, and for anything we want to say to one another we might as well be at opposite poles. You mayn't mind it, Cecily—you don't seem to do so, at any rate—but, upon my soul, it's hard lines on a man who loves you."

It is an evening in April. The land is all aflush with the pink blossoms of the almond and the white blossoms of the pear.

He is rather handsome always, rather angry now, my lover, but I know that the anger comes from love, and so I think more of the first fact than the second as I look up smilingly into the brave blue eyes, bright with a passionate gleam, and mark how well the broad, square cut shoulders and shapely head stand out against the golden glory of that evening sky.

"And pray, Sir, do you expect me to be always at your beck and call?" I ask. "I'm sure you get your fair share of attention."

"Do I?" he says gravely. "When I wait a whole week for the chance of one walk with you, and when the promised day comes you coolly send me word that you've got something else to do, and are too busy even to see me! I might have claimed your promise to marry me two Summers ago, and again last Autumn, when I was offered the making of that new Canadian line. I refused it, only because I knew you wouldn't leave home so soon after your mother's death, and I could not bear to go away without you; but now there is this other job of the same sort in Perthshire, and they say I can have it for the asking. The works are to begin in July, and if we are married in June—dear Cecily, my own darling love, do say that we shall be; do give me what I ask. Think how long I have waited for you already and how badly I want you, and come to me. Cecily, dearest, if you love me say you will. Say it now."

"In June!" I repeat, my eyes wide with dismay, and drawing myself still further back. "Dick, you promised not to be in a hurry."

"I never promised anything of the sort; but if I had done so I should have kept my promise over and over again. Cecily, will you ever find a lover who has waited as long as I have done already? And yet you talk of my waiting on for another year still! If you loved me in the least you would be as tired of these delays as I am; but you don't, and I see it only too plainly. You don't even know what love is. You—"

"Hullabullero, hullabulloo! Cecily, Cis, where are you?" shouts a boy's voice from the laburnum bushes behind.

"Don't be silly, Dick. Let me go. Please let me go," I stammered out hurriedly; but I have no need to repeat the request. At the first sound of my rough-tongued little brother's voice Dick has dropped my hands and stepped back.

"Let you go? Oh, certainly," he says, with a strange, bitter accent in his voice. "For good, if you like. I expect it will come to that some day. Good-bye," and off he goes, striding over the dewy grass and under the milk-white blossoms of the thorn trees without another word or look.

It is too bad. Of course the children don't really mean to hurt me; but it is too bad; and the worst of it is that I dare not show my vexation.

Poor Dick's spurt of temper is forgotten, and tea proceeds without further allusion to him. I cannot bear Dick to be angry with me; Dick, who for all his quick, fiery nature, is as gentle as a woman in general with those he loves, and who has been so tender and true to me all these years, that at times his very generosity makes one forget that those who give much have a right to expect much in return.

A long engagement is a very trying thing. Not that it diminishes the mutual love of those most concerned; but that it is apt to lessen the outward expression of it, and bring about unintentional slights and apparent coolnesses, and it is trying, too, from the fact that the longer it lasts the less consideration or sympathy it seems to elicit from those even most nearly allied to the lovers; and who, when the first eclat of the affair is over, are apt to regard its lengthened existence with something of impatience, not to say contempt. Dick and I have been engaged an immense while, four years before mother died; and he was ready and waiting for me when he was first taken ill, nearly a year before that.

I don't see him often. He is a civil engineer and too busy to pay frequent visits to our quiet village; but during this one his patience has been tried more than usual.

Is there ever a gayer, gladder time in all the year; or a gayer, gladder morning than this when I rise and look across the frothing snow of pear blossoms and meadows paved with golden buttercups, to the red roof of the village inn, half hidden in elm trees, beneath which Dick lodges? Perhaps he may be striding across those meadows now to pay us an early visit and bring me a bunch of violets. He has done so once or twice; but father doesn't like visitors at breakfast, and I'm afraid Dick has found it out; at any rate, he does not come today, and so I go down to breakfast, give the orders for dinner, and am just going to assist my little sister through her laborous efforts at wading up the scale on the piano when the maid brings me a letter which she says has just come from the inn, and I see it is from Dick.

How thankful I have been since then that I left Maud and went away to read it by myself; for even the first words seem to daze and dazzle me! It begins, "My dear Cecily," and then I sit and read and re-read the rest over and over again, how long I never knew, with eyes that see, yet see not, and a heart which beats, yet refuses to comprehend. Dick is gone, and this is what he tells me:

When he went back to the inn he found a letter awaiting him from the contractors for that Canadian railroad of which he had told me before. It was a very liberal offer, and he was still very hot and angry. On the spur of the moment he sat down and accepted it; and then, in the act of sealing the letter, repented of what he had done. Perhaps he remembered how long we had loved one another and what bitter pain parting would be; at any rate, he put the letter in his pocket and came up to the vicarage to tell me again that if I would marry him in June, he would still accept the smaller appointment in lieu of this; or, if that were really impossible, would arrange to come back from Canada in the autumn, make me his wife, and take me back to Canada with him.

Well, you guess what he found? A whole family laughing and making game of him, mocking at the pain which had driven him away; the love which had brought him back; my laugh—heaven help me, mine!—the loudest in the party, my hand aiding in the jest which was amusing a set of thoughtless boys. "And so," he wrote, "I went away, and I write this now to bid you good-bye. My eyes have been opened at last, and I see only too plainly that the years which have only intensified my love for you have withered yours at the root, that my visits have been a weariness, my fidelity a jest. Perhaps some day I may live to be thankful that I have learned this lesson even so late, but I cannot do so yet, nor can I bring myself to the useless pain of meeting you again. I go back to my lodgings at once, and sail for Canada this week. Would to heaven you had told me the truth which sends me from you before, but I do not blame you for not doing so. You were always gentle at heart, and I believe you could not bear to hurt me to my face." And then he bade God bless me, and signed himself, "Yours ever faithfully, Richard Meredith."

I cut the meat and serve the pudding that day at dinner, and though I cannot say one word, and there must be something in my face which frightens the boys, for they stare at me with wondering eyes and are strangely good and quiet, I never break down once, or rise until the meal is quite ended; and then at last I escape, and as I write to Dick the tears which have been frozen till now break forth like rain and blot the words as fast as they are penned.

For of course I answer him. I have read—in novels—of girls who, when they have hurt or angered their lovers, are too proud to write or say one word for pardon; but I am not like that. I love him too dearly, ill as I may have proved it, and stupid and shy as I have been of showing my affection by outward signs. I am too sure of his love for me to let any false shame or misunderstanding rest between us; and so I write and just tell him the whole truth about that luckless scene, tell him how dear he is to me, and beg him humbly and with tears to forgive me and love me still; not to give up his journey, (if he has accepted the post I know that cannot be,) but at least come to me before he goes and say good-bye; and to take my promise that at whatever time he wants me I will be ready to be his wife, whether he can come back for me or I have to go out to him. Other women have done that much for men who love them, and why not I for Dick, who has waited for me longer than many lovers already and signs himself mine "faithfully" still?

So my letter is finished at last, and I walk across the fields myself (I will not trust it to any other hand) to put it in the post.

And I do wait, wait patiently indeed, but with a daily lessening hope, a daily failing heart; for Dick does not come, nor is there any answer to my poor, tear-blotted letter. Suns rise and suns set. Dick has left me. His love, tried perhaps before to stretching, snapped before the forced merriment of that foolish laugh; and because he had not the heart to say so he has held his peace and gone; gone for good.

It is Spring again now; the second Spring since my lover left me. Twice have we dressed the church with ivy and holly, and hung big bunches of mistletoe in the vicarage hall.

I have come up to London to buy summer dresses for my sisters, and on other domestic business; but these duties have been achieved; and now, before I go home again, I am bound on an errand which, though I would not dare own it to any one, (for indeed I know it to be both vain and foolish,) has been pressing on my heart ever since I left home, with a yearning persistence to which, even though it be unmaidenly, I cannot choose but yield.

It is to visit Dick's lodgings, where he always lived when he was in London and the address of which I have known by heart this many a year.

I go there and make my little excuse about wanting to see the rooms for a friend—I hope it is not very wrong to say so—and even manage to get out his name as the person who once recommended them to me. That proves an "open sesame," however, for Mrs. Brown beams with smiles on the instant, and begs me to walk up stairs, "which fortunately the rooms are vacant, and just as they was when Mr. Meredith was there himself, for times and again he'd said to me: 'Now, Mrs. Brown, don't you do nothing to these rooms; for comforbler couldn't be, and if ever I returns to London it's back to them I shall come and nowhere else.' And, by the way, ma'am, if so be you're a friend of that dear gentleman's, perhaps you can give me his address. There's a letter been lying' ere for him this ever so long. It come about six months after he left, inclosed in a note to the owner of the 'ouse,' saying as whoever posted it had dropped it into a gap between the postbox and the inside of the wall, and there it had stuck, no one finding it till a few days before."

I am standing there in Dick's room, the room where he sat and worked and wrote many and many a letter to me in the happy days of old; the last room, perhaps, in which he ever ate a meal or rested before he sailed away from me and England together; and yet I cannot look at it. I cannot think of it. A haze has come before my eyes, and a numbness over my brain, for there on the table before me lies my letter, the very letter, blotted with tears and soiled and crumpled with age, which I posted with my own hand two years ago, and which—ah! I see it all now, how could I think him so hard, so unforgiving, I who ought to have known his nature better—which he never received at all.

I must be very weak, or the shock is too great; for as Mrs. Brown leaves the room I sit quietly down and faint away.

It is only for a minute, however. The sunbeams which were shining on a pot of yellow crocuses in the window have not moved a hair's breadth; and faintly on the clear cool air I can still hear the bells from some distant church which were calling the people to a saint's day service when I came in.

There is a step at the door; but though I know it is Mrs. Brown I cannot look up, or raise my head from the hard deal table where it is bowed. All my long self-restraint, all my painful, pitiful efforts at womanly reticence and bravery have broken down at last in a burst of childish grief; and the tears so long held back break forth in a blinding rain, and my face is hidden in my hands. So it happens that some one coming in sees me before I see him, or can so much as dry my eyes, and utters an exclamation of surprise.

"I beg your pardon," he adds very quickly, "I only came in because my old landlady has been telling me something about a letter, and a lady—" And there he breaks off, for I have lifted my head, and as our eyes meet there is a cry.

"Cecily! Cecily! Is it you? Oh, my darling, my love, what good angel brought you here to give me the sight of you!" and somehow, somehow, in one moment, all the pain and grief and weariness, all the bitter bravery of days when "the burden laid upon me seemed greater than I could bear" are gone, blotted out like breath from a glass; and there is nothing but joy and peace and rest, rest perfect and serene to mind and heart and body; for I am in my lover's arms, and my tired head is drawn down upon his breast; and I hear his voice, the dear, tender voice of old, murmuring prayers for forgiveness mingled with such words of love and fondness as I never thought would greet my ears again on this side of the grave.

The bells have ceased to chime. The yellow crocuses bend and shiver before the sharp cold breeze, but we two stand in the April sunshine, and the light, which falls on Dick's bronzed head and kisses the crushed white hyacinths in my breast, is no brighter than that which brightens our two hearts on this the sweetest springtide of our lives.—All the Year Round.

The Royal United Service Institution has had its special exhibition in London, and some of the objects shown there were remarkable. Here was the map Gordon kept, indicating the advance of his Ever Victorious army and the engagements which took place. Chinese Gordon had his peculiarities, and so it was his wont, whenever there was a battle and lives were lost, to mark the locality by pricking his own finger and making just there a smear of blood, and so Gordon's war map has many red daubs. Topographical engineers in want of red ink might find Gordon's expedient worth remembering. — New York Times.

A Royal Wall Layer.

It is said that Moses Fielding, a lineal descendant in the royal line of the great Chief Uncas, of the Mohegan Indians, who dwell in the woods of Norwich, Conn., and who died a few days ago at Mohegan, in addition to his other many excellent qualities was one of the best builders of stone wall to be found in this country. There are many rods of stone wall in eastern Connecticut, it is said, that will stand for ages, the work of Fielding's hands.

Rifle Penetration.

Hiding behind a tree will be useless in the next war, according to a surgeon who has been taking notes in Cuba. The bullet from a Mauser rifle goes through a large tree with ease. It seems to be true that the bullet often passes through the human body without disabling a combatant, the wound of exit not exceeding that of entrance. The older firearms of the Cubans are said to be far more destructive than the modern rifles of the Spanish troops.

Up to His Looks.

One of the many private secretaries at the national capital is still new to his honors. One day a newspaper woman, full of business, burst into the office of this secretary's chief. The great man was out. "Can you tell me when he will be in?" she asked. "Really," drawled the clerk, "I haven't an idea." "Well," said the newspaper woman, as she turned to go, "I must say you look it."—Washington Post.

ROBBER TRUSTS IMPALED.

Strong Words to a People Suffering from Monopoly's Unfailing Greed.

Congressmen Denounce the Tariff Bill as a Thing of Monstrous Iniquity.

In the great debate upon the tariff bill many speeches were made by men who have devoted years to a study of the economic needs and conditions of this country. At times the debate was marked with acerbity, but, as a general thing, the speakers trusted to assumed facts. The opponents of the measure said many things that the people should remember. Day after day they stripped the robe of pretense from a bill that has been called the most iniquitous of modern legislation. It will be known in history as the "Dingley bill," but it has been much changed from its original form when introduced in the House of Representatives, from which body all laws affecting revenue must come. Some of the things said are given below.

Taxpayers Not Forgotten.

Senator Bate, of Tennessee, felt sure that the taxpayer was not forgotten by the framers of the measure and that he would not forget them. He said:

I cannot agree, Mr. President, with the Senator from Texas (Mr. Mills), when he says the taxpayer is the "forgotten man." On the contrary, under the operation of this bill, he will be the best remembered man in all the land.

Lord Thurlow once exclaimed, "When I forget my sovereign, may God forget me." To which Wilkes coarsely replied, "Forget you! He'd see you damned first." And so of this bill and the taxpayer; it will not forget the taxpayer. Forget him! He cannot draw a woolen shirt over his head [illegible] pair of socks on his feet, nor warm [illegible] with a shawl without experiencing [illegible] much the Republican party has not forgotten, but remembered him.

Forget him! Iron, the inseparable companion of the taxpayer, from the ore in the earth through all the changes to pig, from wrought iron to scrap, from armor plates to trace chains, from nails in his rooftree to screws in his coffin lid, is taxed with double, triple, quadruple and quintuple taxes, the evidences of remembrance by the Republican party of the taxpayer. Forget him! He cannot build a cabin, nor a boat, nor fence his potato patch, nor lay his body in a coffin without paying tribute to the protection of the Republican party. Forget him! Is he not reminded of the Republican party's tender regard for the taxpayer's purse by the duties levied to protect his cabbages, eggs, onions and garlic?

Mr. President, the first creditor of every people is the plow, and upon the furrows which it turns reposes the great mass of national wealth. After fully and amply supplying the home market, of which so much is heard in these days, the plow supplied agricultural exports for the fiscal year of 1896 to the enormous amount of $569,879,297, or 60.2 per cent. of all the export trade of the country. What became of that vast sum—the product of the plow? It was not given away. It bought in foreign lands what the plow needed at home, and the cheaper those foreign goods were bought the greater were the profits of the plow.

But this protection bill is to change all that, and teach the plow the unlearnable lesson that higher-priced home-made articles are cheaper than lower-priced imported goods. The plow is not so dull a scholar as protectionists suppose; it may be fooled sometimes, but experience teaches that the royal road to comfort and sufficiency lies not along the pathway of protection.

It is a matter of financial impossibility to give relief and encouragement to the plow by increasing the taxes on articles of necessary consumption to farmers. As for the building up of a home market, it is not only a twice-told tale, but an old, old song sung for political effect ever since the enactment of the "bill of abominations" in 1828. But not all the tariffs that have been enacted will bring this country any nearer to an adequate home market for the consumption at remunerative prices of our vast agricultural products than the country was in 1896.

The fact that last year, with over 73,000,000 of people as the home market, our farmers were compelled to send to foreign countries $570,000,000 of the products of the plow demonstrates the inability of this country to consume the immense volume of the products of its agriculture. That great creditor, the plow, must seek the markets of the world. No "pent-up Utica" will do for his products. The "boundless continents" are required for America's products. But, Mr. President, every duty levied for protection upon a foreign product is an impediment cast into the furrow of the American plow.

They Dine Off the Farmer.

Mr. Kelly, of South Dakota, has the far West's frankness. His arraignment of the "prosperity howlers" has called forth responses from press and politicians. Secure in his facts, he has declined to retract anything he has said, and has circulated his speech just as it was spoken:

Of course the same farce is acted out in this bill that is in every tariff bill the Republican party enacted, namely, "protecting the farmer." I wish to say to the Republican members of this house that you can no longer deceive the farmers of this country. They know that it is impossible to afford them any commensurate degree of protection when they send abroad to be sold in the open markets of the world more than $600,000,000 annually of the products of their industry. But however bad this bill may be, however much it favors trusts and monopolies, a majority of the people of this country voted for the Republican party, knowing that some such measure would be the result if they were successful, and I know of no better way to prove to them the utter folly of expecting relief from such a measure than to give them all they want of it. Hence I want to see the Republicans make this bill exactly to their liking, and I believe that it will prove quicker than anything else the hollowness of the claims that are made for it.

Not deterred by the facts, but a few weeks ago a triumvirate of prosperity inflaters, three men of acknowledged leadership in wealth, amazed the idle and unemployed by proclaiming simultaneously, with a flourish of trumpets in the East, that the wave was upon us and the slow plodders would have to clear the track or be engulfed. Seventy-five millions of Americans have waited in silence for the onset, but as usual have been doomed to disappointment. It is well to add that these three false prophets had no sooner heralded these tidings of their imaginations than they hied themselves aboard a boat and departed for a foreign and far-distant country.

Following this faith in action, the advance agent of the advance agent, the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Gage, having heard the rumbling from Chicago, Canton and Cincinnati, went to the latter city and proclaimed to the business world that prosperity was again our own, that our birthright had returned again.

Since that time the newspapers of the East played upon their fancy and tried to play upon the credulity of the people by announcing in one column that prosperity was upon us, and in another recounting a list of failures, strikes and despondency. With this comes the evidence of Bradstreet that improvement has not appeared, that the metropolitan press is false in efforts to announce it, that any increase in the quantity of trade is lessened, in comparison with other years, by the reduced price of the commodity. Supporting Bradstreet is the "still, small voice" of ex-Secretary John A. Wanamaker, bewailing the fate of himself, his party and his country, and charging that the administration was false and faithless. It is time, Mr. Speaker, that the controllers of prosperity should treat this stubborn case heroically, and instead of trying to rejuvenate this inanimate object by blowing into it the blighted breath, let them turn their hoarded wealth into the Western arteries of trade. The people want more money, not promises, and unless they get it they will perish in the desert before they reach the promised land. Without it they cannot pay these new imposed, enormous taxes and live in happiness. No false promises of relief, by whomsoever made or howsoever given, will convince a suffering man that he has no pain. False lights of safety will no longer deceive. Men who are deluded themselves or who seek to delude others will not be believed. A people may excuse a failure to acknowledge the independence of an island near the southern shore, they may excuse your failure to pass a bankruptcy bill, but they will never excuse the fastening of the enormous tariff taxes on the toilers of the West in favor of the East unless the East shall give to those toilers the means with which to bear these burdens.

On Raw Materials.

Representative Bailey, of Texas, has been the leader of the Democracy on the floor of the House during the past session. He too is a young man and is gifted with much eloquence. He is opposed to free raw materials for the manufacturer and protected materials for the consumer:

Why should the manufacturer who ships his woolen goods to other countries and exchanges them for raw wool be allowed to bring that wool into this country free of duty, when the wool grower who ships his wool to other countries and exchanges it for woolen goods is compelled to pay a high duty on the woolen goods which he brings home? If anybody needs an advantage in the export trade of this country it is not the manufacturers, who furnish less than 30 per cent. of our exports, but it is the farmers, who furnish more than 70 per cent. of our exports, and it is illogical and indefensible for a Democrat to insist that those who furnish but one-fourth of what we ship to foreign countries shall be permitted to return with their exchanges free from taxation, while those who furnish three-fourths shall be compelled to pay a tax on almost everything for which they exchange the products of their land and labor. Why should the manufacturer be permitted to buy the farmer's wool free from duty, while the farmer is compelled to pay the manufacturer a high duty on the goods made out of his free wool? The manufacturer is not compelled to buy his wool, and only buys it for the sake of the profit which he can make out of it by manufacturing it into woolen goods; the people are compelled to buy woolen goods, and yet we are asked to increase the profit of buying wool by increasing the cost of buying clothes. Mr. Speaker, we might with justice demand that those who buy wool for the sake of profit should be taxed, and that those who buy clothing for the sake of comfort should go untaxed, but we do not demand this. All that we demand is that the men who buy wool for the sake of profit shall be compelled to contribute toward the support of the Government equally with those who buy woolen clothes for the sake of comfort. For twenty years I have heard protection denounced as a species of favoritism to manufacturers, and I have heard manufacturers described as selfish and rich beyond the dreams of avarice, and, sir, I was astounded when our old leaders suddenly changed their position and proposed a system which they openly averred was more favorable to the manufacturers than that of the Republican party.

If the manufacturers are as selfish and as prosperous as we have been taught to believe, then, sir, it is an unpardonable crime to exempt them from taxation, and thus increase the burdens of the patient and unnumbered multitude. I cannot find language strong enough to denounce a policy that would lift the burden of this Government from the great manufacturing establishments and lay it with crushing weight upon the farms. I know the agricultural people of this land, and I know their unselfish devotion to their country. I know, too, that it is as true in the economic as it is in the physical world that all things rest upon the earth, and when those who cultivate the soil are made to suffer the nation must suffer with them. The farmers are the most useful and the most conservative of all our citizens. Their labor supplies us with food and clothing, and to them we turn when the riots and bloodshed of our cities render the future of the republic gloomy and uncertain. From the bitterness of class antagonisms, from the greed of the rich who oppress the poor, and from the desperation of the poor who would despoil the rich, we turn to the rural homesteads of this land, and there we find a rugged independence tempered with a reverence for the law which constitutes the nation's best and wisest safeguard. Around those humble firesides, even in this age of selfishness and greed, the love of country is above the love of self, and second only to the fear of God. A republic which practices injustice against homes like these, which multiplies their burdens and drives their impoverished and discontented occupants to the already overcrowded towns and cities invites its own destruction.

I do not plead for special privileges for the farmers; I only plead in defense of the Democratic party for having said that in dealing with this question it will keep its pledge that none shall enjoy a special favor nor shall any suffer a special burden, but that all shall stand equal before the law. (Applause.) To establish and maintain the equal rights of men was the great mission to which its founders dedicated the Democratic party a hundred years ago, and to which we reconsecrated it last year. If we adhere steadfastly and faithfully to this the most vital of all our principles, the American people will reward our fidelity with their confidence, and we can reward their confidence by perpetuating forevermore this, the greatest, freest, and therefore the best, government that ever rose to animate the hopes or to bless the sacrifices of mankind.

Representative Hunter, of Illinois, says what he means and means what he says. The speech from which the following is excerpted has made a decided sensation, and its author was warmly congratulated by his colleagues:

The herald of fraud and deception announced to the country six months ago that the new President would come with healing in his wings, and that prosperity would gladden every home. What has the President done to redeem any of these pledges? Nothing.

What have the Senate and House done to relieve the people of their burdens? Nothing.

No legislation has ever been proposed by them to relieve the necessities and wants of the people.

The Presidential office has been substantially abdicated, and we now have a general business manager who arranges all matters of legislation and diplomacy.

Secret meetings are being held by the trusts, corporations and other bosses daily and nightly to influence legislation in their interests.

I believe that the legislation on this tariff bill is controlled absolutely outside and independent of the Senate and House by less than thirty interested gentlemen. The people and their representatives are not allowed to know what is going on and what this administration is doing or is going to do. There is a studied effort, seemingly, upon the part of the managing party of this Congress to conceal every movement in the creation and construction of this bill. Hide-and-go-seek has been adopted as the new method of governing the people of this country.

The Republican portion of the Committee of Ways and Means go to their room and close the door, bolt every Democratic member out, and there in secret patch up what they call a revenue bill; then they come into this house, adopt an arbitrary rule denying to the people's representatives the right to examine and discuss the product of their deliberations. Under this gag process they pass the bill, send it to the Senate, then to conference, close the doors again against every Democratic member of the conference committee, and in this ex parte way force upon the people of the United States partisan laws fraught with all the schemes of human selfishness.

Here is a secret conclave of eight men presuming to fix the amount of gratuities, under the name of taxation, that 14,000,000 taxpayers have to pay to 800 trusts, corporations and individuals.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is not intended to raise revenue to pay the expenses of the Government, to help the farmer, aid the laboring man and stimulate legitimate trade and business of the whole country.

It is not the intention of its authors to bring prosperity to the homes of the toiling millions, those that produce the material wealth of the country. It is limited and specific in its application and effect.

It is for the protection of the classes, that they may collect millions of bounties from the consumers of their goods.

If it had been innocently created as a revenue measure its logical and natural effect would be the same—to foster trusts and combinations that rob the people under its provisions.

Farmer Is Mulcted.

Senator Butler, of North Carolina, has found much that is inimical to the husbandman in the Dingley bill.

It costs your State $40,000 under this duty if you use 200,000 tons of guano, as I think your State used last year. It costs the farmer of every State that much extra that uses as much as 200,000 tons of guano. Therefore, if it were guano sacks alone, this article should be on the free list, according to the argument made by the Senator from Iowa. But the increased cost on guano sacks is a bagatelle compared with the increased cost on cotton bagging and grain sacks and all the other jute material put together used by the farmers.

Mr. President, as I said in the beginning, this tax is indefensible either from a protection or from a revenue standpoint. It cannot be defended. It is sectional. It is a direct tax on the farmer. He must pay it.

MARION BUTLER.

It is that much taken out of the small revenues that he now gets for his products. I feel very much like the Senator from South Carolina. I am ready to join you to take a week, if necessary, and longer, before this iniquity shall be put through here—this iniquity robbing a class of men who are forced to pay higher for everything they buy because of this tariff bill.

Consumers Held Up.

Senator Pettigrew is strongly opposed to the lumber provisions of the bill. He believes that the consumers of lumber have been robbed in wholesale and was not backward in saying so.

In other words, the proposition is to take $6,125,000 out of the pockets of the people who consume lumber in the States tributary to Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota and put it in the pockets of this little group of men who gathered in Burrows' room. I have watched the passage through the two houses of Congress of the last three or four tariff bills, and this is the worst tariff bill ever conceived or produced.

As tariff bills are produced their framers become more expert in juggling with phrases covering up what they intend to do and so fixing them that the classes will be enabled to plunder the masses. This lumber duty is one of the worst features of the whole transaction—bald, barefaced, and without any apology.

The official figures of the working in Germany for the year 1896 of the system of compulsory co-operative insurance have made their appearance, and they show the number of persons so insured to have been 18,389,000, of whom 3,409,000 were employes in shops or factories, 12,290,000 were agricultural laborers, and 690,000 were employes of the state. The number of accidents to the insured was 74,897, of which 6,448 terminated fatally. The expense of the co-operative system during the year was 67,000,000 marks, or $13,400,000.

Whether on account of the growth of the manufacturing industries or for some other reason, the number of accidental deaths in a year is larger in Germany than in any other country in Europe, and presumably, though there are no authentic figures in connection with the matter, the number of accidents not resulting fatally is larger in Germany than in any other European country, too. Under the German system a workingman who pays the equivalent of 40 cents a week for three years, if he begins before the age of 20, receives on attaining the age of 65 the sum of $77. The German compulsory insurance system divides the annual premium into three equal parts—one paid by the workingman, one by his employer, and one by the state. In other countries in which efforts have been made to establish the system of co-operative accident insurance the returns have not been so favorable as in Germany. In France, for instance, where the number of employes in factories is large, though not so large as in Germany, the total receipts from premiums from accident insurance policies last year were only about one-quarter of the sum realized in Germany.

The Height of Cruelty.

The height of cruelty is undoubtedly the practice of smothering a beefsteak in onions. We do not believe the lobster broiled alive or the crab thrown into scalding water suffers for long time; the shock is immediate and fatal. But think of a steak condemed to such a lingering death, struggling in vain against the lethal pungency.—Boston Journal.

MAUD DURRANT.

The Condemned Student's Sister Studying Abroad.

On the other side of the Atlantic, in the German capital, Miss Maud Durrant has for two years been waiting to know the fate of her only brother, condemned to death for murder in San Francisco. Little has been said of this sister, far off in a foreign land, and only the most intimate friends of the Durrants have realized the extent of her suffering.

There has been considerable surmise as to why she did not hasten home immediately after the arrest of her brother, some time during the trial, or after the sentence. People have wondered whether she would or would not come back if the extreme penalty of the law should be imposed. But no stranger knew, and the Durrants remained silent. They have been careful from the first to keep their daughter in the background, screened from the public view.

The truth is that the sister across the water has never for a moment thought of neglecting her brother if it shall become necessary for him to give up his life.

At first the parents opposed the return of their daughter. They feared the nervous strain, the terrible shock, would be too severe a tax on her health. They advised her to remain where she was. But in her loyalty to her childhood playmate, Miss Durrant threw advice to the winds.

"If it comes to the worst, I shall go home to my brother,' she wrote; "I could not be satisfied otherwise."

So her parents consented. They felt they could say no more. The money for her fare was forwarded to Berlin and several times during the past few months Miss Durrant has packed her trunks and prepared to start for home. Each time she was prevented by favorable news from her parents. The young lady has been in constant communication with her parents by post and cable since the first day of their great sorrow.

Through all the dark days the Durrant family have passed during the last two years the sister has never wavered in her faith that her brother is innocent. And that is the cheering message she sends him.

"I have as much love for, and confidence in you to-day, Theo, as I had that morning I kissed you good-by, and whispered, 'Be a good boy, dearie, and be sure to graduate.'"

A WOMAN FIEND.

A Hungarian Wretch Who Poisoned More Than 100 People.

Hungary has produced the greatest woman criminal of the century and perhaps of all time. According to her own confession she prepared and sold the poison by which over 100 human beings were relieved of life and her only regret is that her victims were not more numerous.

The name of this debased creature is Azalia Jager Mari and she is 62 years old. Recently she was convicted of her crimes in Budapest and sentenced to imprisonment for life. She started out in her criminal career by killing infants and soon developed a mania for murder of all kinds. Through her instrumentality husbands became relieved of disagreeable wives and wives of disagreeable husbands. Then others sought the poisons which she manufactured to rid themselves of relatives and reap the insurance on their lives.

The woman never administered poison herself, but she understood the subjects to be experimented upon so well that she could tell to a day when the poison would work its fatal effects. The poison was administered in small quantities and the victim slowly sank to death without any outward evidence of poison having been administered.

Want Bugs Protected.

For some time past British entomologists, or bug-hunters, have been exercised over the extermination of certain insects in consequence of the zeal of the collectors, who roam over the country with butterfly nets. It would be difficult to protect butterflies and moths by Legislation, as has been done for birds, so an association has been formed under the auspices of the Entomological Society of London. The members agree to leave rare insects alone for awhile and to do all in their power to curb the sporting instinct in others. The insect collector who abides by it will be more than human, remarks London Graphic. Imagine a stamp collector agreeing not to pick up a rare specimen from the roadside, yet a similar temptation will be met and have to be resisted by the insect collector.

TRAGEDY AT AVILLA.

John W. Cavin Shoots at His Partner and Then Cuts His Own Throat.

Monday's Daily.

Over the telephone yesterday afternoon, came the news of a terrible affair at Avilla. It appears that two men, John W. Cavin and R. B. Clear, were partners in a sawmill, and had had some differences in regard to the business. At about two o'clock Sunday afternoon they got into a dispute over the matter, Cavin claiming that Clear was not dealing honestly with him. The quarrel grew hot, when Cavin drew a revolver, aimed at Clear's head and fired. He missed his aim, but hit Clear's ear, clipping off a piece. Cavin then ran off down the railroad, and soon after was found on the B. & O. track with his throat cut. He was carried back up town, and is still alive, though there are little hopes of his recovery. Clear is not much hurt.

Both men have lived in this county. Mr. Cavin is the man who bought the Glazier House building from Nicholas Ensley, trading for it a good farm near Lebanon in Boone Co. this state. He remodeled the building for a hotel and rented it to Mr. Glazier, and lived there awhile, both himself and a single sister. Later, he traded the hotel property to Mr. Gandy for a farm at Blue lake near Churubusco. Before he settled down on his farm near Lebanon, he had for the most of his life been a railraad engineer.

R. B. Clear, a few years ago, lived near Concord, and ran a sawmill and dealt in lumber in a general way. Both men had the reputation of being fairly good business men. But it is believed that Mr. Cavin had lost money on several of his recent deals, his long service in the railway business unfitting him for the new lines he went into recently.

Annual Settlements

The regular annual financial settlements of the township trustees began on Monday, that being the day fixed by law. But the work cannot all be done in one day, and had to be continued from day to day. The new duties imposed on the trustees by new laws made every two years, and the new duties imposed on the commissiners, add greatly to the time it takes. All the accounts of the trustees have to be gone over by the Board and even claims against the township are examined in many cases at least, before the trustee will be allowed to pay them. And there is a part of the work of the trustees that has to be reported to the county superintendent. It is believed the work of the commissioners will be finished Thursday.

HON. J. M. ROBINSON.

An Interesting Interview With the Congressman,

(Fort Waye Sentinel)

A reporter of the Sentinel, hearing of Congressman Robinson's return from the memorable special session of congress, in which he achieved signal success, sought him out, and in response to inquiries as to "how he liked congressional life and what was notable about the session just closed," he said: "There are many things of note that mark the special session just closed. In the first place it was the fourteenth time in the history of our government that the chief executive of the nation deemed it wise to call a special or extraordinary session of congress. Next, in the execution of the will of the president, it marks an epoch in parliamentary practice as showing the strength of house rules, adopted by the majority, in enabling them to pass, without regard to the minority, any measure desired by the administration.

"The house rules today," said Mr. Robinson, "are the most swift and relentless means ever adopted by man to strike down, soothe and quiet the opposition.

"The speaker of the house of representatives is 'for the weal or woe' of the people, the most powerful factor in American politics today. Think of it, the president sends a message to congress urging the passage of a tariff bill. Under a 'special order' from the committee on rules this bill of tremendons import to the people, carrying over $225,000,000, passes the house in a few days. This bill in the senate, under more liberal rules of debate and amendment, is debated for weeks and weeks and the senators' action was held by secretary Gage, in his Cincinnati speech, as above suspicion of unfairness in this regard.

"Over 600 material amendments were made to the bill by the senate, yet when the disagreeing votes of the two houses were referred to a conference committee of both houses, and when that committee reported to the house their conclusions, changing materially many of the important provisions of house bill, under a like 'special order' of the committee on rules, it is taken up at 12 o'clock and passed that day before adjournment.

"Similar to this was the proceedings on the president's currency message. Congress was called together for the purpose of passing a tariff bill, that being the sole purpose as stated in the message. We found forced upon us in nearly the last hour of the last day the bill for the establishment of a monetary commission, and under a like procedure the same was passed in the house with only one hour and forty minutes allowed for debate and amendment by the majority.

"But why does the majority vote for such restrictions under the lash of anyone?" asked the reporter.

"There you have it," said Mr. Robison, 'the lash.' Under the rules the speaker is required to appoint committees at the opening of the session, but Mr. Reed wisely divined his power if the committees were not appointed. Men are made or unmade by their appontment on committees. Assigning a man to membership on committees that never meet, and there are many such, is politically like relegating him to the catacombs of Egypt. All know this and they secure the pleasure of the speaker at the expense of their independence. This I know from talks with members who were willing to forfeit temporarily an independence in the hope that they might reach a place on such committee as would enable them in the future to usefully serve their constituency."

"But you seemed to fare pretty well," said the reporter.

"Yes, for a minority member, but for much of this I am indebted to Mr. Baily who landed me in his place on the election committee, a place I sought This committee is one of considerable hard work but one has special privileges in the house. Besides committee work and attendance in the house, there is much work to do in keeping up correspondence and attending to pension matters. In four months I had nearly four hundred pension cases on my docket—you have to keep a docket of them—which I had given my special attention to. In many cases it is necessary to secure action on the part of congressmen or the soldier will not get justice. My high tide mail reached seventy-five letters a day, and was seldom less than twenty-five. You can imagine the labor of a congressman who, by reason of fortune, has not only the ordinary duties to fulfill, but also the extraordinary pleasure of recommending his friends for office. I have talked to many of them and all, I think, would like to shrink this duty."

"Wherein do you think congress failed in its duy?"

"I think the American hand should have been extended to Cuba and believe that nearly everyone else thinks so. If any do not, and will take the pains to look at the congressional record and see the names of the democratic and republican senators who voted for the bill to recognize Cuba and that was sent over to the house I think they will be convinced they ought to favor her independence. I think a so that a fair bankruptcy bill such as was almost unanimously passed by the senate should have been passed by the house, with, possibly, a few amendments. I believe, also, that much time would have been saved and much good accomplished if the speaker had permitted pension legislation to be considered, instead of taking tri-daily adjournments. With the exception of the tariff bill with its new imposed burdens, and the monetary commission bill, which will never be passed by the senate, with the do-nothing policy of the house, it must be confessed that the special session of congress was a signal success."

THE BIG GRANITE WARE SALE

Brown, Culbertson & Boland's big sale of granite ware Saturday beat the record for size and the interest shown. The COURIER force was short that day, and we could not be present personally, and the firm had too much to do to make a report to the papers. But everyone we have seen, who attended the sale, say there was nothing like it ever seen in Auburn. When people can get granite ware at tinware prices, they are going to get that kind of ware, for all know it is many times as good for all purposes, as tinware. So all day, from early morning till bed time, the store was crowded. And all day, they went away, with loads of goods and happy faces. Their sales this time, were at least a half greater than the one before, as they had taken pains to have this time a stock big enough to last, whereas on the first sale some articles were all gone by noon. Altogether it was a great success.

COURT.

There was court on Monday with Judge Walkins of Huntington on the bench to try the case brought against Ex-trustee James O. Blake of Smithfield. It was a sort of embezzlement case or at least a misuse of public funds. It has been called up in various forms for the last two terms of court. At least there have been cases growing out of his administration as trustee all of which had more or less bearing on this final case. Rose & Rose appear for the township, while T. R. Marshall of Columbia City and Mr. Blake's brother, F. K. Blake, a Chicago attorney appeared for Blake. Then there was a third side in which C. M. Phillips of Waterloo represented the interests of Mr. Blake's bondsmen, Hon. Free Kelley and Douglas Kelley. The matter was entered into exhaustively by all parties and a settlement finally agreed upon as fair. This is, that Blake and his bondsmen allow judgment to be taken against Blake for $1,750. This ends the case so far as the courts are concerned. We have not learned whether Mr. Blake has property to pay this balance, or whether the bondsmen will have to help.

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR.

Dr. E. P. Banning Will Visit Auburn Saturday.

Dr. F. P. Banning, surgeon in charge of the department of rupture for the U. S. armies during the rebellion, lecturer in the University Extension Course; Professor of Diseases of the Spine in the Cleveland University of Medicine and Surgery, and Medical Director of the Chairs of Banning Institutes at New York, Cleveland, Fort Wayne and Chicago is going to stop off here in Auburn on his way from the institute in Fort Wayne to that in Cleveland. He will be the guest of Dr. Matheney on Saturday of this week, and will meet some of his patients at Dr. Matheny and Stamets' office between the hours of 1 and 5 p. m. on that day.

Dr. Banning is known all over the country as an authority, if not the authority, on diseases of the spine, nervous system, paralysis, knock knees bow legs, club foot, variocele, piles, rupture and weaknesses of the male and female system, that may be the result of the internal organs being out of position.

Our Doctor Casebeer, late of Auburn, has for some time been under his special instructions and speaks very highly of his attainments, reputation and success in the diseases mentioned.

We learn that sufferers can consult him at Dr. Matheny and Stamets' office during the few hours of his stay here

MISSED HIS TRAIN.

There is quite a joke on Jim Lawhead one of the Niagara excursionists. They were coming home through Canada, on the Grand Trunk road, and the trains all stop and change engines at London, Ontario. Jim over estimated the time it would take to make the change and wandered about to see things. When he returned, there was no train in sight. It was gone, and the whole party of DeKalb folks, including his wife had gone with it. Jim felt very lonesome, and telegraphed ahead for his wife to remain in Detroit and he would join her on the next train. But she did not care to stay and so came home with the rest, reaching Auburn on the evening Wabash train of yesterday, Monday. Jim came on later and got here this morning.

THE GORDON-LAHNUM CASE.

Quite a little case came up before Squire Walter today. The Dispatch had advertised for the firm of Lahnum Bros., while they were doing a furniture business here, this summer, but claims he could not collect his bill. Yesterday he attached a safe belonging to the John D. Lahnum and the case came up before the justice this forenoon and was postponed till two this afternoon. The case occupied all the afternoon, and was not done when we went to press.

The case was finished last evening, Tuesday, and a decision reached, that the safe attached was the property of John Lahnum, and that John was not a member of the firm that got the work done. So there was a judgment against "Lahnum Bros." for the claim $12.70, but the attachments against John Lahnum failed. This throws the expense of the suit largely on Gordon, and it is not likely he will ever get his bill as the firm of "Lahnum Bros" has gone out of business.

D. M. Link was attorney for Lahnum and J. E. Pomeroy for Gordon.

Lewis Spangler Dead.

Lewis Spangler at the Junction, died last evening, his disease being what is known as "Bright's disease of the Kidneys." He has been troubled with some form of the disease for some time, but it developed into a dangerous form only a few months ago. He has been a prominent citizen of the west part of the county for many years, but for a long time now, has lived at the Junction. His son W. W. Spangler, is home now having been called here by what was seen to be a fatal illness of the father. The funeral will be from the residence Friday at 2 p. m. and interment in Woodlawn. Services will be by Mr. Meese and Mr. Brosy.

STOLE CHICKENS.

Some parties from Bluffton were arrested here today for stealing some chickens from near Ft. Wayne. They were driving through for an outing at the lakes north of here and had stopped hvre at noon at Myers' feed barn. The chickens were of valuable stock and the owner did not want to lose hem. They will be taken back home for trial. If they had been tried here the charge would be for bringing stolen goods into the county, and they would have been jailed. But at home they may get off with a fine. They were arrested here by Marshal Potter.

Later: C. E. Emanuel telephones us that the matter has been settled and the boys dismissed, SEES THE LIGHT.

The Chicago Chronicle, the leading gold democrat paper in the last year's campaign, is now mildly in favor of free silver. The gold business did not bring the prosperity it expected and it is now talking true democracy, to the effect that neither a single gold standard nor a higher tariff is the thing we need to make us prosperous. They conclude, very sensibly, that we need better markets in which to sell what we raise or manufacture.

THE FOUNDRY GOES ON.

The COURIER is glad to hear that work at the Auburn Foundry & Machine Works, has not stopped but will go right on, and is going on now. The financial trouble into which they had fallen was occasioned by bad debts and slow collections and not by the small amount of business. We have always understood that the Foundry had an abundant patronage and got good prices. We feel sure it is one of the very best lines of manufacturing business we have if properly carried on. The matter will be made plainer if we state that thers was really no failure but that a mortgage was given to secure the parties that had advanced money to the company. We look to see the plant again put in properous condition

SOLDIER BOYS' CAMP.

The COURIER visited the camp of the Epworth Guards near Shugers' school house (not Shuger Grove) south of town last evening. We found Capt. Hilkey and his men and Capt. Foltz with the Epworth Guards of Garrett, all comfortably situated in the grove. Their camp ground is neat and clean, and with all the smart and funny actions of the boys makes the camp a lively place. They had a few visitors last night and will probably have more this evening as people are just learning where the camp is located. To drive out two roads can be taken. One is to follow the telephone road out to near the Ditmar residence and then turn east, and the other is the road passing Woodlawn Cemetery and turn west at Bill Carr's. Visitors will always be welcomed.

FORT WAYNE RACES.

The Greatest Field of Horses Ever Aggregated at the Meeting at Fort Wayne, Next Week.

The Seventh Annual Meeting of the Fort Wayne Driving Club to be held the week commencing Monday, August 9th and continuing five days, promises to be more largely attended than any previous similar meeting. Already the hotels have advance orders for rooms and every indication is that the out-of-town attendance will be greater than at any other time. This is accounted for by the fact that the entries this year are of a more sensatinal order than have ever marked a Fort Wayne meeting. Every day will be a "big day." On Thursday the 2:08 pace will come off, which will bring together a field comprising the most sensational performers of this year. Among them will be Bumps, the New England phenomenon, 2:05¼; Fort Wayne's favorite and fastest horse, Frank Bogash, 2:07; Heir-at-Law, 2:07¼; Agitato, 2:08; Milton S., 2:08¼ and half a dozen other fast ones. No one, lover of horses and good racing can afford to miss this race. It will be the event of the year—the racing event of the circuit.

BIRTHDAY PARTY.

July 23, 1797. At the home of Daniel Mottinger, in Franklin township, the relatives and friends congregated to about the number of fifty, to remind him that it was his 67th birthday. It was a most complete surprise to Mr. Mottinger. Mr. Mottinger in company with Mr. Adam Hamman went to see the trustee of Franklin township on business, returning home about nine o'clock, during his absence the friends had everything in complete readiness for his reception. A well laden table was prepared in the dining room roast chicken, pie, cake and all other things necessary to make a first class repast. Mr. Mottinger found no one visible on returning home, supposing the family had retired for the night, he seated himself before the cupboard for luncheon. At this time the parlor door was opened and a general rush made for the kitchen, which was a complete surprise to Mr. Mottinger. He was then taken to the dining room and seated at the head of the table, after returning thanks, when Mr. Mottinger turned up his plate to find a gold watch come to view, then the surprise was more complete. There were other valuable presents presented after supper, a general good visit was enjoyed by all. At a late hour the parting shaking was given and the friends journeyed homeward feeling better for having been at Mr. Mottinger's.

Among the guests are the following: Mrs. J. Bratton, George Young, A. Richey and wife, Ezra Lautzenheiser and wife, Joe Smurr and wife, Peter Bowers and wife, John Ruff and wife, Katie Hamman, Adam Hamman, Chas. Hamman, Frank Lockemyer and wife, Lem Chapman and wife, Milo Michols and wife, Mr. Kegerreis, Alto and Dessie Kegerreis, A. Sweigart and wife, S. Mottinger and wife, Mrs. Wm. Musser, Miles Hamman, Jesse Hamman, Callie Mottinger. Ed. Mottinger and wife, Mrs. Hattie Renic, Miss May Mortorff, E. Fry and wife, Frank Musser, Ham Musser, and J. B. Veley.

Political Bossism.

It appears there is a good deal of dissatisfaction at Waterloo about the way the postoffice was changed. It is claimed that Mr. Williams admits he was not the choice of the people, and it is also claimed that he got the place, through the influence of Sol. Wood, of Angola, who is chairman of the republican congressional district committee. And it is further charged that Wood was moved to do this, by a promise from Williams to buy an old postoffice outfit of boxes etc, that Wood had an interest in. It will be remembered, that four years ago, when Geo. Young became postmaster of Angola, that he got a nice, new outfit for the Angola office, and that left Wood with the old boxes on his hands. Now, at the end of four years, it would be a nice scheme to unload his old boxes onto the people of Waterloo and at the same time make them a present of a postmaster they did not ask for. Now, Ex-postmaster Getts, by this turn of the wheel is left with his postoffice boxes on his hands, a lot of property that cannot be used for anything else. They are wood boxes, in fair condition, and nearly as good has the old ones imported from Angola. But this is the way political bossism works.

The Klondyke Gold-Fields in Alaska

THE United States Government in 1867 paid Russia $7,200,000 for Alaska. The territory has paid back her purchase money in gold four times, having produced during the time it has been a part of the United States about $30,000,000 of the precious yellow metal.

To-day the eyes of the world are turned toward our frozen acquisition in the north, for within its borders has been discovered an Eldorado. The word Klondyke, literally translated meaning Deer River, is on every tongue and is known as the designation for a gold-bearing district greater in area and richer in character than any the world has ever known, with the possible exception of California. Klondyke is the new open sesame to Aladdin's cave; it supplants "Pike's Peak or bust" in the gold-seeker's vernacular. "The days of '97" may become as celebrated a phrase as "the days of '49," for the same fever that seized upon the people and dotted the Western prairies with emigrant trains bound for the Pacific coast is claiming victims by the thousands, all eager to brave the perils of the arctic circle and wrest a fortune from the frozen zone.

The reported gold discoveries of the present day in Alaska and the reported gold discoveries of '49 in California afford many parallels. To the average man the treasures of the coast State were seemingly as inaccessible as are the riches of the Yukon and its tributaries. One was more than 2,000 miles across a trackless desert and over snow-bound mountain passes, beset by savages, whose deadly attacks marked the trail with bleaching bones across the Western States; the other is nearly 7,000 miles by water, through a rigorous climate, or almost 4,000 miles by land and water, with mountain passes to scale as dangerous as those of the Swiss Alps.

The fabulous tales of wealth sent out by the California pioneers were no less wonderful than those brought back by the men who braved the last cold season in the Klondyke mineral belt, and in both cases those who returned brought back with them great nuggets of the precious stuff that left little or no doubt in the mind of the hearer. The California miner in the song who had so many nuggets that he was accustomed to "go a hatful blind" finds his parallel in the Yukon miner who claims to have "washed out" $212 in one panful of dirt—a process that requires ten or twelve minutes.

The Alaska and California gold fields are alike also in being placer mines. Placer mining is commonly called "poor man's mining," for the reason that it is done without machinery, while the implements required in the work are few and of small cost. A placer miner can get along very well with a pick, shovel and gold pan. If the dirt is not rich he can accomplish better results by running it through a sluice box, but where the yield is in nuggets instead of fine gold he prefers to "pan" it.

The great Klondyke strike was made it rich. From Klondyke comes much of the gold and from Klondyke seems to come all the excitement. A few "tenderfeet," going it blind, have stirred up the nation. Out of the region of their discovery has come, it is estimated, $2,000,000 worth of gold during the present summer. Nearly all of that gold has found its way into the United States.

It is hard to tell where the Alaska gold fields are located except that in a general way the best of them are along the Yukon. There are a few "lode" mines near Juneau and along the southeast coast of the territory (the most accessible part of it), but the one is of low grade and mining is made profitable only by the most careful management.

The placer mines, from which prospectors are said to be lining their pockets with gold, occupy the prominent place in the popular mind. These are in the region remote from civilization, little known, and, on account of its uncertainties, dangerously alluring to the average man. This gold-producing country of the interior is in the vicinity of the Yukon near where that great river turns to the west in its course to the sea. Before the discoveries in the Klondyke the most productive districts had been along Forty Mile Creek, partly in British and partly in American territory, and the Birch Creek district, all in American territory. Along all of the rivers in this region, tributaries to the Yukon, gold diggings exist and in many places pay the prospector well for his trouble.

Cook's Inlet is another place where the rumors of gold caused crowds of unprepared men to flock, but the district has not exactly borne out the reputation given to it by early prospectors.

In all the immense country over which the placer mining extends it is estimated that up to last year there were 2,000 miners. The districts in which most of them worked were in a broad belt of gold producing rock, through which quartz veins carrying gold occur frequently. Through the gold-bearing rocks the streams have cut deep gullies and canyons, and in their beds the gold which was contained in the rock is concentrated. The mining of this country consists, therefore, in washing out the gravel of these beds.

To Reach the Gold Fields.

The best way to reach the Klondyke district? One goes from Seattle by ocean steamer west and a little north, and passes through Dutch Harbor, at the extreme end of the Southwest Alaskan peninsula. From there the steamer turns north and continues on to St. Michael's Island, a little above the mouth of the Yukon, in Behring Sea. At that point passengers are transferred to the river steamers to begin the long journey up the Yukon, which winds northward and eastward, and finally brings the traveler to Dawson City, now the principal town in the district, although sixty-five miles from the Klondye fields.

The cost of the trip from Chicago this way, as prospecting miners usually travel, is $251.50. It is divided as follows: From Chicago to Seattle (second class), $51.50; from Seattle to Dawson City, $200. In time the trip costs thirty days—four from Chicago to Seattle, sixteen from Seattle to St. Michael's Island, and ten up the Yukon to Dawson City by the fast boat. The distance in general figures is 2,250 miles from Chicago to Seattle, 2,500 miles to St. Michael's Island and 1,890 miles up the Yukon to Dawson, a total of about 6,000 miles.

Another way, the "mountain route," is shorter in miles, but equally long in the time it requires and a great deal more difficult. By this route the traveler sails more directly north to Juneau, which is 899 miles from Seattle, and then goes by last year, but nothing was known of it in the United States until June 15 of the present year, when a vessel called the Excelsior arrived in San Francisco laden with miners from the Klondyke, who in turn were laden with gold. They told almost incredible tales of the richness of the newly discovered district, where fortunes had been accumulated in a few months. Experienced miners and "tenderfeet" seemed to have shared good fortune alike, and with some justice, too, for the credit of the discovery of the new gold fields is due to the inexperienced men. Another vessel brought to Seattle a second party of successful prospectors and a ton and a half of gold. These men had endured peril and undergone great hardships in accumulating the fortunes they brought, and they told a story that had a dark as well as a bright side. To follow their example means a risk of wealth, health and even life, but for those who are willing to take the chances the prospect they hold out is alluring.

The Klondyke District.

The richest of the mines in the Alaska region seem to be in the Klondyke, a few miles over the British border. They were discovered, as has been said, by a party of "tenderfeet," who, against the advice of the old-timers in the district, wandered "over yonder in the Klondyke" and struck lake and river and over the mountains 1,000 miles to the new mining territory. The cost of the trip this way cannot be definitely stated beyond Juneau, because after that point it depends somewhat on the bargain made with the Chilkoot Indians, who pack supplies through the pass, and the length of time the overland part of the journey requires; but the Indians who act as guides and pack supplies do not work without big pay.

Dawson City.

Dawson City, the center of the new mining region, although sixty-five miles distant from the Klondyke, is said to be a typical mining town—minus the guns. The British Government enforces its laws in Dawson, and those laws prohibit the use of firearms, so few men carry guns. The laws of the camp are enforced by mounted police, whose captain is a civil officer. Though there are said to be 3,000 people in Dawson, few houses have been built, for the principal reason that lumber is $100 per 1,000 feet. The general fear is, of course, that there will be great suffering there this winter, and it will be increased, it is expected, by the rush of unprepared prospectors who sailed for the new fields immediately on learning what luck had befallen those who have but recently returned.

To give an accurate idea of the cost of living in Dawson City, the price list of a general store there is herewith given:

Alaska and Its Resources.

In the purchase of Alaska, the United States acquired a territory more than half a million square miles in extent, a part of it within the arctic circle and in the region of everlasting ice and snow, where, during part of the summer, there is continuous day and during the winter continuous, dreary night. The Alaskan coast line is greater than our Atlantic seaboard, but the entire population of whites, Eskimos and fierce Indians who are called the Apaches of the North, is not much more than that of a ward division in Chicago.

In acquiring the Alaskan territory, though the United States moved its center, figured in geographical mines, not in area or population, as far west as San Francisco. The country now extends from about the 65th degree of longitude up at the far east corner of Maine to the 122d degree up at the far northwest tip of the Alaskan mainland. This is taking no account of the little island of Attu, 1,000 miles out in the Pacific, beyond the Hawaiian group, which, since the purchase of Alaska, has really been our western land limit. The United States, therefore, may almost say with England that the sun never sets on its possessions.

The Great Yukon River.

The principal river in Alaska, the Yukon, up which prospectors have to work their weary way to reach the gold fields, was called by Schwatka, the Alaskan Nile. It rises a little more than 200 miles above Sitka, in the southern part of Alaska, and then strikes northward, following a broad circle to the west before it empties into Behring Sea through an extensive delta. Six hundred miles in from the coast it is more than a mile wide and the volume of its water is so great as to freshen the ocean ten miles out from land.

The principal cities of Alaska are Juneau and Sitka. They are both thriving towns, and probably they will thrive from now on, for a time at least, as they have never thriven before. Alaska is ruled by a territorial governor, who now is J. G. Brady, recently appointed by President McKinley to succeed James A. Sheakley. The Governor's residence is in Sitka.

Among the things Alaska has done for this country aside from stirring up the present gold excitement one of the most forward was to involve it in disputes with England on the boundary question and the seal fisheries business. Both of these disputes threatened war, but white-winged peace settled over the situation in each case and brought the suggestion of that newly invented English-American institution—arbitration. However, the boundary question is not settled yet.

Topography of the Country.

The territory naturally falls in six grand divisions. They are the arctic division, a treeless expanse diversified by icy hills and mountains and with no inhabitants but the Esquimos; the Yukon basin, with its extensive forests near the coast and its inhabitants of Esquimos and Indians; the Kuskoguim district, the Aleutian district, comprising the islands off the coast, where fishing and sealing are the chief pursuits, and where the population is mixed Aleutian and Russian blood; the Kadiak district, including the mainland and islands south of the Alaskan range, and the Sitka district, including the archipelago and the coast, extending south to British Columbia. The Sitka district is that seen by the tourists from the States. They gaze on its enormous forests and imagine they have seen the country. As a matter of fact, they do little more than set foot on the territory. The population of Alaska, as given in the census reports, is necessarily largely an estimate. What census taker would be willing to go a couple of thousand miles up the Yukon, for instance, to find the number of miners in one of the new camps, or venture into the arctic circle to count the noses of the Esquimos, who are said to have their May day festivities romping around the north pole? Dogs furnish a great part of all the means of transportation and communication up there in the snows, and they are not valuable for census work.

Character of the Population.

The census enumeration of 1890, gave the population of the territory as 30,329, of whom 4,416 were whites, 82 blacks, 1,568 half-breed Indians and Eskimos, 13,735 natives not Eskimos (Indians), 2,125 Chinese and 8,400 Eskimos. The number of whites has probably been more than doubled since then, however, as the Alaskan gold fever set in in mild form three or four years ago. One would hardly think of going to Alaska for the social advantages of the place.

Neither could it be said that a reasonably constructed individual would go there for the climate. In winter the thermometer falls so low in places that no one will recognize it; that it goes down to 70 degrees and lower. During all this kind of winter up in the Yukon region little can be done but sit about a fire in a vain endeavor to keep warm, for darkness exists most of the time, and the life seems like that of a man uncomfortably seated at the bottom of a well.

During the summer season the days are sometimes even a little bit hot, but not for long. In that time, too, there is almost continual day, for that end of the earth (if it may be so called) is the one that is pointed directly at the sun.

But as the summer brings warmth and daylight it also brings mosquitoes. And such mosquitoes! Creatures that buzz and bite in such a way as to make the dreaded Jersey variety seem by comparison like the silvery, angelic, sweetly, humming fancies of a peaceful dream. The travelers who return from the Yukon region tell stories of how brave and strong men, courageous enough to undertake the perils a journey to that country involves, actually break down and sob in utter desperation and despair under the torments of these terrible pests. The ice and the "magnificent distances" of the country are not the only drawbacks to its exploration or to journeying to the gold fields; the mosquitoes must ever be remembered.

Of course, in the southern part of Alaska, where Juneau and Sitka are situated, the winters are not so rigorous. There the weather is comparatively mild, and in summer is said to be delightful. But Juneau and Sitka are infinitesimal as compared with the whole country, and they are not an index to what is furnished farther up and farther inland.

When travelers were asked as late as two or three years ago what were the principal pursuits in Alaska they replied, of course, that fishing and hunting furnished occupation for the greater part of the population. What else was to be expected from a population made up in the main of Eskimos and Indians? In the Sitka district there are magnificent forests and lumbering is an industry, but in the barren, icy north the occupation of the Indian was to shoot and trap the bear, the fox, the otter and the other animals whose fur would bring a price in the markets of the world, to catch the seals and spear the whale and catch the other fish or game that could be turned into money. Salmon canning is the great industry of the Kadiak district, and has been for years.

Of late, however, the other industries of Alaska have sunk almost out of sight because of the new gold flurry. Mining, of course, is the industry of the white man. Virgin gold might have lain in plain sight in the rocks to a limitless extent and in all probability the Indians and the Eskimos would never have touched it. Food and furs are the standard of value with them. Gold fills no Eskimo stomachs and keeps no Eskimo body warm.

But with the white man it was different. He came, he saw, he dug, and in the digging he found richness. Glittering gold greeted his eyes, and the fever of gold is upon us.

MAP SHOWING THE ALASKA GOLD FIELDS.

The Klondyke mines are placers—the most easily worked mines of any, and requiring the least expenditure. The methods of washing out placer gold are known as "sluicing" and "panning." The former is employed where the yield is of ordinary value, while all old-timers prefer the latter in rich ground.

In sluicing the dirt is shoveled into the sluice box, through which water is rapidly running. The box is of varying length, and has holes bored in the bottom. These holes are filled with quicksilver; the dirt, gravel and small bowlders are washed over the quicksilver, but the gold adheres to it. When a miner "cleans up," sometimes every night, sometimes once a week, the water is turned off and the sluice box holes are cleaned out.

In panning, the dirt is put into a gold pan—about the size of a small dishpan. This pan is made of copper. The miner squats beside a stream, dips water into the pan, oscillates it with a motion that can only be acquired by experience, and gradually sloughs out the water, dirt, gravel, etc., retaining the gold in the pan. Gold being the heaviest substance, it is of course the easiest to retain in the pan. If it be in the shape of nuggets, the miner picks them out of the pan with his fingers; if the gold be in small particles, fine gold or "flour" gold, he dries the pan in the sun and carefully brushes the deposit into a piece of buckskin or other material used for carrying the precious metal.

A pick, a shovel, a gold pan, water, and, of course, some gold are the only essentials of placer mining. Machinery is only necessary in placer mining where large areas of ground that yields only moderately are worked, and then only for hydraulic power in washing down the dirt.

Washing a Fine Art.

Love of pretty belongings is natural to every woman. From the classic robes of Aspasia to the rich dresses of Elizabeth, thence to the wedding gown of Puritan Priscilla, we see the attractiveness of dress. While any woman of taste can supply herself with becoming gowns, it is not every one who understands keeping them in good order; this is especially true of summer gowns, so easy to soil, and so expensive to laundry; therefore every woman should learn the art of washing her own muslins. To do the work fill a tub two-thirds full of warm water, dissolve a cake of Ivory soap (which will not fade the most delicate colors), add it to the water, wash the garments through it; rinse first in clear water, then in blue water, wring, dip in thin starch, shake and hang in the shade. When dry, sprinkle, and iron on the wrong side. A gown laundried in this way will remain fresh and pretty all summer. ELIZA R. PARKER.

Largest of All Reservoirs.

Lieutenant Crittenden, the government engineer detailed to choose sites for the proposed government reservoirs in Colorado and Wyoming, has inspected and selected the great natural basin lying near Laramie, Wyo., as the Wyoming site. This great basin lies in the heart of the Rocky Mountains and is ten miles long by two miles wide. Its maximum depth is 150 feet, and the government engineers estimate that it will hold 20,000,000,000 cubic feet of water. The walls of the basin are perfect without a break. The bottom is of rock, and is impervious to water. The Big and Little Laramie rivers will be tapped, and it will take between five and six years to fill the basin.

Enough water can be stored to keep the entire eastern part of Wyoming and Western Nebraska supplied with water during dry seasons. The water will be collected in winter and used to flood the Laramie and Platte rivers in summer. Government engineers have been ordered to survey the basin and draw up plans for the feeding ditches.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

TYPEWRITER'S EXERCISER.

Device Intended to Prevent Paralysis of the Fingers.

Typewriters everywhere, be they pretty or otherwise—of course, none are otherwise—will be gratified at learning that they need no longer suffer from that bothersome complaint known as typewriters' cramp. Robert Barclay, an inventor, residing in the quaint old city of Green Bay, Wis., has contrived a simple little machine which, when used by the typewriter, counteracts the effect of the work on the machine, and so prevents that form of paralysis, of which cramped fingers and a numbness of the hands are the first invariable symptoms.

Many a pretty typewriter, otherwise a perfect type of womanhood, bemoans the fact that her daily work over the keyboard of the machine has apparently ruined the shape of her fingers and given to what was originally a long, slender, well-formed hand an unnatural thickness and blunted the fingers, besides ruining the nails.

The practical value of Mr. Barclay's invention having been demonstrated, the wonder is it was not thought of before. In appearance this "exerciser," as the inventor calls it, resembles a small, oval-shaped rubber bulb, which just fits into the hand. A short rubber tube extends from one end of the bulb to a rubber band, which is fastened about the wrist. This band is double, and the outer band is punctured with numerous small holes which allow the air within the bulb to escape when the hand is closed. When the hand is opened the air is withdrawn into the bulb, and the exercise consists in opening and closing the fingers of the hand, the muscular action required to force the air from the bulb giving the necessary exercise.

Oldest College Men.

Samuel Ward Chandler of Philadelphia, and the class of 1822, now nearly ninety-four years of age, is Harvard's well-preserved oldest; he is the father of Francis W. Chandler, professor of architecture in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Dartmouth's oldest living graduate is Mark Wentworth Fletcher of Wayne, Ill., class of 1825, who is within a few months of being as old as Harvard's oldest. Emilius Kitchell Sayre of Monticello Mo., who is in feeble health in his eighty-eighth year, is Amherst's oldest; he was in the class of 1828, of which he is the sole survivor. The oldest Williams graduates of the same class of 1828 are Joseph Lyman Partridge of Brooklyn, ninety-three years of age, and Rev. Ebenezer Harrison Stratton of Branchport, N. Y. The oldest for Bowdoin College is Frederick Waite Burke of New York City, ninety-one years old, of the class of 1824. Wesleyan's oldest, and indeed her very first graduate, is Daniel H. Chase, who lives at Middletown, and now and then attends the morning chapel service. Mellen Fitch of West Newton and the class of 1826, now ninety-two years of age, heads the list for the University of Vermont. Lawyer Albert Ware Paine of Bangor, Me., at Waterville, Me. Dr. Benjamin D. Silliman of Brooklyn, N. Y., holds the seniority for Yale.—Boston Journal.

Do the Clouds Really Burst?

The expression "cloudburst" is rather indiscriminately applied to an unusually heavy precipitation. Rain is caused by the meeting of two currents of air, one warm and saturated with water, the other cold and dry. When the currents come in collision the moisture of the warmer is condensed and falls in the form of rain or snow. When the condensation is rapid the precipitation is heavy, and when the currents meet in the comparatively small area, such as a canyon of the mountains, and the rainfall is exceedingly heavy, the water is collected by the steep slopes and carried off at the bottom of the gorge with a force whose destructiveness is sometimes very great. A cloudburst in a level country would simple mean the flooding of the entire area to a depth of an inch or so, but the damage done in this case would be small when compared with that effected by a large quantity of water suddenly collected and running down the steep declivity of a mountain gorge.

Fireproofing Babies.

A doctor residing in the East End of London has discovered a solution which renders clothing absolutely fireproof. "By this discovery," he says, "the appalling loss of life in babies by being burned will be minimized." The formula represents a prescription of 5 per cent. alum and 5 per cent. phosphate of ammonia, which renders the substance absolutely noninflammable. All that is necessary is to steep the clothing in this solution, and the tissues so treated will resist the flames, even if they have previously been rubbed with gunpowder.

DOWN IN A COAL MINE

TRIP THROUGH GLOOMY CAVERNS OF THE EARTH.

Going Down a Slope to the Working Chambers Where, Amid Powder Smoke and Perils, the Miner Digs Coal—Discovery of the Mineral.

About Coal.

Pittsburg, Pa., correspondence:

Not many of us think as we sit by comfortable fires in the zero days of winter of the difficulties and dangers experienced in mining the coal that contributes so much to our domestic happiness and our national prosperity. Yet the mainspring of our very civilization is the coal the miner digs in the gloomy caverns of the earth. There ages ago the heat of the sun, absorbed by the plants from which coal is derived, was treasured up and today we have that same heat, in the form of coal, at our disposal and subject to our control. Without it we would be living in the past—in the days of the stage coach and the sailboat, with out present conditions of life, if dreamed of, another Utopia. By it we can travel almost as comfortably as if seated in our own homes over thousands of miles of mountain and valley and thousands of leagues of ocean, and enjoy conveniences such as were not within the reach of the wealthiest and greatest of ancient times. Such is the value of coal to the modern world, and it is an interesting subject how it is mined.

To a visitor to the coal fields one of the interesting sights is the huge breakers that are dotted over the region and the mountains of refuse—the "dumps"—that have been extracted from the mines. These breakers are generally, though not always, erected over the mouth of the shaft, or entrances to the mines, and it is in them that the coal, after having been mined, is graded by passing through different screens, and cleaned by having the impurities picked out by hand, those employed for that purpose being mainly children. The impurities are the constituents of the "dumps" and some of the latter contain hundreds of millions of tons.

It was my good fortune recently to spend several hours in the colliery known as the Little Schuylkill in Mahoning City, Pa. While the midday sun was shining gloriously and all nature seemed joyful, I entered the cage and was rapidly lowered to the bottom of the shaft, where all was dark as blackest midnight. Here and there appeared flickering lights in the caps of the miners and when the eyes became more accustomed to the darkness I saw the outlines of cars on the tracks, some full of coal, to be presently lifted to the breaker above, and others empty, to be taken down the slope to the different levels, where the miners were digging the precious mineral. Close to the bottom of the shaft were the stables, where the long-eared, patient mules, used in hauling cars in certain portions of the mine, are housed. Few of these mules since their first entry into the mine have seen daylight and some of them very probably never will. On another side of the shaft was an engine room, and a pump was laboriously at work, forcing to the bright earth above the waters that are ever collecting in these dark caverns. Several of these pumps are thus continually engaged on the different levels, else the water would collect in such quantities as to render work impracticable and ultimately flood the mine.

THE DISCOVERY OF COAL.

A dreadful accident occurred by the last car of one of those trains becoming detached from its fellows. At a point where the fifth level branches from the slope one of the workers was standing when the detached car went rushing down the slope with almost the velocity of a cannon ball. Those who heard the roar of the oncoming car shouted to the man to move. He either did not hear them or became paralyzed with fear; in any case the car ground him to pieces against one of the pillars.

EXTERIOR VIEW OF A COAL MINE.

Ultimately with my conductor I reached the ninth level of the mine and was then standing more than 1,000 feet beneath the surface of the earth, over which the warm sunshine was playing. It was warm enough, however, in the mine, although the air in the slope was pure.

In the Mining Chambers.

In the chambers where the miners were blasting, the atmosphere was heavy with the smell of powder and laden with dust. One could see even in the dim light of the lamp he carried the very air he breathed, or at least the admixture which with the air he took into his lungs. Here then and in similar chambers in thousands of collieries the precious coal that contributes so much to our every comfort is mined.

Around were the possibilities of danger and death. A body of gas might be exploded, a cave-in might occur; in a multiplicity of ways danger might hover near. But the miner, with the confidence which years of experience gives, does not allow his mind to be troubled by these fears, unless, indeed, some fellow worker be stricken down. Then the dangers for a while appear in concrete form, only gradually to be forgotten.

In mining coal the miner must naturally follow the vein of mineral and this often runs at an angle of 85 or more degrees. As he progresses timbers are used to uphold the roof and platforms are constructed upon which to stand. When a quantity of coal is dislodged by explosives, it falls to a platform where the miner's assistant breaks it up into manageable sizes and loads it into the cars standing on a track ready to receive it. Each car when loaded is hauled to the slope, up which, with others, it is drawn to the foot of the shaft and hoisted to the breaker.

I had no desire to prolong my stay in the atmosphere of the chambers; but when I saw a man testing the air to see if gas was forming and remembered the numerous disasters that have occurred in the coal regions through explosions I was more anxious than ever to reach the pure air and sunshine.

Notwithstanding the dangers attending coal mining and the poor reward for the miner's work, the occupation seems to lend a strange enchantment. Children first enter the breakers to pick the impurities from the coal, then they become drivers in the mines, next miners' assistants and finally miners themselves. They are reared in an atmosphere of coal mining, seeing little else and having few other avenues of employment open to them. It is as natural for them to enter the mines to work as for the farmer to go into his hayfield or the shopkeeper into the store, and they think no more than these of accidents. And yet minor accidents and fatalities are numerous. We are all more or less familiar with the great disasters of the coal fields, in each of which ten, twenty or more persons have been killed. But outside the coal regions themselves the news of the minor tragedies seldom penetrate, or if it does it is overlooked or forgotten. But they are always occurring.

MINERS DIGGING OUT THE PRECIOUS MINERAL.

Surely the coal miner is engaged in perilous work. He deserves a better fate than want and the contingency of starvation—a fate that is confronting thousands of miners and their families in the anthracite regions of Pennsylvania to-day.

The Romance of Coal.

Considerable of a romance attaches to the early use of coal in this country. Its discovery in Pennsylvania was made in 1791 by a hunter named Philip Ginther. Ginther's hunting grounds were on the eastern slope of the mountains drained by the Lehigh River, and one evening while on the summit of Sharp Mountain he stumbled over the roots of a fallen tree and kicked before him a large black "stone." Thinking that possibly it might be coal, of which he had heard something, he picked up the lump and turned it over to a Col. Jacob Weiss, who lived near the present site of Mauch Chunk. The Colonel, after satisfying himself that the specimen was anthracite coal, organized the Lehigh Coal Mine Company, one of the members of which was Robert Morris, the celebrated financier. The work of mining was begun at the very spot where Ginther stumbled over the prostrate tree and several thousand acres of land were purchased. But what to do with the coal that was mined was a problem. There was no market for it. The surrounding timber, and what with the low price of wood and the abundance of charcoal, there seemed little prospect of marketing the coal for many a long year to come. The work of mining was consequently soon abandoned.

Col. Weiss, however, determined in bringing the coal to the attention of the people. He filled his saddle bags with it from time to time and rode around among the blacksmiths, earnestly soliciting them to try it. Many refused to have anything to do with "common stones," and those who tried it met with only partial success. Accordingly the coal company relaxed its efforts to obtain a market and were about to dissolve when, in 1798, the Legislature chartered a company to improve the navigation of the Lehigh River. This work was completed in 1802 and the coal company renewed their efforts to bring their products to market. In 1803 six boats, each containing 100 tons of coal, started from Mauch Chunk for Philadelphia. Four of the boats came to grief on the way and two of them reached the city of Brotherly Love. After much delay the coal was sold to the municipal authorities, who were then working a steam boiler to pump water into tanks for the use of the city. But all attempts to burn the coal failed and it was broken up and scattered over the foot walks. And thus for a period of seventeen years ended the operations of the Lehigh Coal Mine Company.

Some years later, or in 1810, coal was found in the vicinity of Pottsville, Schuylkill County. The blacksmiths of the neighborhood experimented with it and happily with success and a number of individuals, among them Col. George Shoemaker, interested themselves in its development. In 1817 he loaded ten wagons with the mineral and sent them to Philadelphia. On the way some of the coal was disposed of to blacksmiths and a considerable quantity was sold to the Fairmount Nail Works. The rest was disposed of to individuals in Philadelphia. The latter, unable to burn the coal, although assured that it would burn, regarded Shoemaker as a swindler and warrants were issued for his arrest. He succeeded, however, in eluding the officers of the law and returned home by a roundabout route. But while the prospect of securing a market for coal thus looked dark an incident occurred that completely changed the situation. At the Fairmount Nail Works an attempt was made to burn the coal. The men raked it, stirred it, and blew upon it, but without success. At the noon hour they shut fast the furnace doors and with many a muttered imprecation on the black stones went to their dinners. When they returned the furnaces were red hot and the fire within was seething and roaring like a tempest. They had discovered the secret of burning anthracite coal—it only required to be let alone.

This successful burning of the mineral predisposed many in its favor, while the growing scarcity and dearness of wood rendered a substitute indispensable. And thus the Lehigh Coal Mine Company appeared once more in the field. In 1820 they shipped 365 tons of coal, readily finding a market and three years later their shipment amounted to nearly 5,000 tons. Both companies then consolidated under the title of the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company. In the Schuylkill region the development of the coal industry was rapid and by 1827 over 20,000 tons were shipped to market.

Something Like the Gold Craze.

Immediately a great boom was launched in the Schuylkill region. Valleys and mountains were explored for the mineral and lands assumed an extraordinary value. Towns were laid out—roads cut through the forests, over the mountain peaks and along their narrow gorges—railways and canals were projected—coal mines opened—all was conceived in the spirit of speculation, and executed under the impulse of its excitement. Such was the demand for houses that, in many instances, the lumber was wrought into shape in Philadelphia and sent by canal to the coal region, ready for the joiner. Whole villages along the road side thus sprang into existence like mushrooms, or as if by the power of magic. The taverns were all crowded, and their walls strewn with colored maps and lithographs. All the adventurers of the large towns flocked to Pottsville, like so many bees around their queen. They had only to go there to be transformed into millionaires. Fortune had seated herself upon a throne of anthracite; she held her court levees among the rolling mountains, and to be crowned with her favor it was only essential to appear in person. Within six months from the beginning of the speculative boom nearly $5,000,000 had been invested in the coal lands of Schuylkill County. Lands that were purchased in 1827 for $500 sold in 1829, just before the excitement began to subside, for $16,000.

Locks Thief in an Ice Box.

Gustave Staib, who keeps a butcher and grocery store at Tompkinsville, S. I., did not have much trouble in capturing a burglar the other morning. On unlocking the door of his store he saw a man packing up articles. Staib started through the store, and the thief, who had seen him, opened the door of the icebox and stepped inside. Whether he did this with the idea of escape or cooling off Staib does not know. Staib went to the icebox and put the fastening on. Staib then walked leisurely to police headquarters and informed the police that he had a thief on ice. An officer returned with him and made the thief a prisoner. He was very cold when taken out of the refrigerator, but after he was in a small cell in headquarters for awhile he asked to be taken back to the icebox.

Not Extinct.

The speaker described in the following anecdote from "Short Stories" was not the last of his species. Unhappily, his identity is more frequently established by the tag end rather than the beginning of Doctor Kane's comparison:

Dr. Elisha K. Kane, on his return from his great Arctic expedition, was invited to a banquet in New York, where an after-dinner speaker talked an hour.

"Doctor, what did you think of the speaker?" asked a friend.

"It was like an Arctic sunset," answered the explorer.

"What do you mean by that?"

"Bright and interesting, but provokingly long in operation," replied the doctor.

So Particular.

"They seem quite particular in Paris," said an attache of the state department, "about having the French language used by any representative of the United States."

"Yes," replied Miss Cayenne; "I understand they go so far as to insist on putting French labels on American wines."—Washington Star.

A Pitiful Case.

"You are an orphan, you say?" said Mr. Spokes to an applicant for aid.

"Yes, sir."

"How long have you been an orphan?"

"I am an orphan by birth, sir."—Exchange.

Badger Fish Story.

The drummer from Milwaukee was explaining to a group of interested listeners in the hotel lobby how one of his inventive friends had hit upon a scheme to catch fish.

"He has fixed up an incandescent electric light," remarked the drummer, "which can be made to burn under water. At night he goes out to Delaware Lake, sinks his electric light to the bottom and turns on a storage battery current. The whole bottom of the lake becomes distinctly visible around the light. The fish swim up to the lamp, and it is an easy matter to hook them with an ordinary line, using no bait at all. All the angler has to do is to pick out the fish he wants, sink the hook under him, give a jerk and pull him in. It is great sport. And it is particularly advantageous, too, because it enables the angler to fish for just the game he wants. If he is after bass he pulls up nothing but bass. If he prefers pickerel he catches nothing but pickerel. And he is also able to choose the size of the fish he hooks. Great scheme, isn't it?"

"And all this happens at Delaware Lake?" inquired a sad-eyed drummer from Cleveland.

"Yes, sir," said the Milwaukee man. "It is going on there now every night."

"That accounts for it then," remarked the Clevelander. "I spent last Sunday at Delaware Lake myself. Had pretty fair luck. And, do you know, every blamed bass we caught had on a pair of blue goggles!"

Throwing the Lasso.

The Mexican vaquero beats the world as a thrower of the lasso. One of his tricks is to stick a lot of long-handled knives in the ground close together within the limits of a narrow circle, and bet with outsiders that he can ride past at race-horse speed and pick up with a rope any one of the knives designated.

THE HEAT PLAGUE OF AUGUST, 1896.

Mrs. Pinkham's Explanation of the Unusual Number of Deaths and Prostrations Among Women.

The great heat plague of August, 1896, was not without its lesson. One could not fail to notice in the long lists of the dead throughout this country, that so many of the victims were women in their thirties, and women between forty-five and fifty.

The women who succumbed to the protracted heat were women whose energies were exhausted by sufferings peculiar to their sex; women who, taking no thought of themselves, or who, attaching no importance to first symptoms, allowed their female system to become run down.

Constipation, capricious appetite, restlessness, forebodings of evil, vertigo, languor, and weakness, especially in the morning, an itching sensation which suddenly attacks one at night, or whenever the blood becomes overheated, are all warnings. Don't wait too long to build up your strength, that is now a positive necessity! Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has specific curative powers. You cannot do better than to commence a course of this grand medicine. By the neglect of first symptoms you will see by the following letter what terrible suffering came to Mrs. Craig, and how she was cured:

"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and think it is the best medicine for women in the world. I was so weak and nervous that I thought I could not live from one day to the next. I had prolapsus uteri and leucorrhœa and thought I was going into consumption. I would get so faint I thought I would die. I had dragging pains in my back, burning sensation down to my feet, and so many miserable feelings. People said that I looked like a dead woman. Doctors tried to cure me, but failed. I had given up when I heard of the Pinkham medicine. I got a bottle. I did not have much faith in it, but thought I would try it, and it made a new woman of me. I wish I could get every lady in the land to try it, for it did for me what doctors could not do."—Mrs. Sallie Craig, Baker's Landing, Pa.

WERE ON A TOUR.

A Fort Wayne Crowd Arrested at Auburn.

(Fort Wayne Journal)

Charles Steadley, Charles Brown, and a man named Seavey, all of this city, are in jail at Auburn, and a sixteen-year-old girl who was in their company is being held, pending the arrival of her friends. A telegram was received here last night giving an account of the arrests, and Deputy Sheriff Gladieux immediately wired the Auburn officers to hold the men until today, when they would be brought back here.

Several days ago the men borrowed a horse and wagon from a resident of the east side, saying they wanted to drive to the country. They have not been seen since and nothing was known of their whereabouts until the receipt of the news from Auburn. Brown and Seavey are married and have families, and have never been in trouble of any kind. "Bo" Steadley, however, has been locked up times innumerable and for a variety of offenses. Shortly after the telegram conveying news of the arrest was received Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Seavey, wives of the first two men mentioned, appeared at the jail to give notice of the disappearance of their liege lords, and when they learned of the trouble in which their spouses were concerned their anxiety gave way to anger. Both declared they would appear early this morning and file charges of desertion against the men. The identity of the young girl is not known, as the telegram did not give her name. She is probably from this city, however. Deputy Sheriff Gladieux will go to Auburn this morning to bring the prisoners here.

SPENCER'S CASE.

We are sorry to see the unseemly haste with which Mr. Spencer is being forced out of the Pension office before his term is expired. We never believed Mr. Leighty would be a party to any such a step. But it seems he has been. We think it pretty small business for an appointee to be in such a haste to get his predecessor's place, that he cannot wait till the four-year commission has expired. It is only a matter of a few months, and surely Mr. Leighty could have got along in some way. The only charges we have heard of against Mr. Spencer, was that he turned out three or four republican clerks when he took the office, and gave their places to democrats. But every new officer does this very thing, and Mr. Leighty will no doubt do it when he gets the office. But he will feel greatly aggrieved if he should get kicked out for that very reason four years hence, if the democrats should get into power. It would be very apt to be done, for himself has established the precedent.

HEAD END COLLISION.

Saturday's Daily.

The most laughable, and yet one of what might have been a serious accident, occurred here last evening about 9 o'clock. Just as the people of north Main-st were thinking of leaving for the "Land of Nod," there came a crash occasioned by a collision of bicycle and buggy. Allen Lawrence, the head clerk of the soda water department of Robbins & McCord's drugstore was coming south on a bicycle at a 2:40 gait, and young Fisher, a crippled boy was driving his light wagon and pony going north, but not thinking for a second that his life was in danger. But when near Dr. Johnston's residence, Smash! Bang!! The bicycle struck the front axle of the buggy, leaping upward, the saddle striking Fisher in the stomach causing him to drop the lines, while Lawrence made a "high dive" and landed underneath the buggy. One foot hung in the bicycle and one leg was twined around the reach of the buggy and there he hung. He proceeded to do some rapid trapeze work on the rear axle of the buggy, yelling all the time, like a sun-dancing Comanche, "Whoa! Whoa!!" And up above him in the buggy, was the Fisher boy yelling "Whoa!" But there was no "whoa." And as they went tearing up the street there came from the region of the buggy reach, an imploringg voice.

"Oh, Mr. Captain, stop the ship,
I want to get off and walk."

And from above the bottom of the buggy, the answer came faintly, "Don't talk to me. This is my busy day."

Even the pony disregarded the appeals of the frightened lads, and hurried homeward with hot feet. The commotion and noise brought several people out and they succeeded in stopping the mixed up aggregation at a point near Mrs. Silver's. Luckily no one was seriously hurt. Lawrence was considerably bruised, and needed some court plaster. The bicycle resembled a B. & O. Camelback engine. It was certainly a "high frame with a short wheel base." This should be a warning for bicycle riders to go a little slow after night in the future.

Lost His Pants.

(St. Joe News)

"Thieves entered the home of Frank Walters some time Saturday night and stole two pair of pants and a couple of dollars in money. They got in through the cellar and blew the light out which had been left burning, and took the pants from the room in which Mr. Walters was sleeping. No clue has been discovered as to who did the deed, but it was probably the work of tramps."

There is also a theory, that the house was entered by someone who had met on the train or elsewhere, the people who came on the train that night and went to Mrs. David Grill's. The visitors stopped first at Mr. Walter's, who showed them to Mrs. Grill's. Whoever it was, that was watching them, probably saw them go into Mr. Walters, but did not notice them coming out and going to the other place. They made up for their mistake by taking both pairs of Frank's pants His Sunday pants they carried off His Monday pants were found at a late hour, after Frank had been compelled to eat his breakfast standing in a barrel.

Keep Up Your Scott's Emulsion in Summer-time

What are your resources for the summer? Have you an abundance of health stowed away for the long, hot, depleting days, or does summer find you low in vitality, run down, losing flesh, and weak? Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil will give you the proper reserve force, because it builds up the system on a solid foundation. A tonic may stimulate; Scott's Emulsion not only "boosts," it sustains.

It is a wise precaution always to have at least a small bottle of Scott's Emulsion in the house. Unopened, it will keep indefinitely. Tightly corked, after using, kept in a cool place, it will remain sweet for weeks.

Do You Use It?

It's the best thing for the hair under all circumstances. Just as no man by taking thought can add an inch to his stature, so no preparation can make hair. The utmost that can be done is to promote conditions favorable to growth. This is done by Ayer's Hair Vigor. It removes dandruff, cleanses the scalp, nourishes the soil in which the hair grows, and, just as a desert will blossom under rain, so bald heads grow hair, when the roots are nourished. But the roots must be there. If you wish your hair to retain its normal color, or if you wish to restore the lost tint of gray or faded hair use

The great open air entertainment of Sept. 22, 23 and 24, is beginning to take a definite shape. Among the novelties to be presented to the people, will probably be an electric fountain, which is always a marvel of beauty. It will cost money, of course, but the management is going to entertain their visitors royally, no matter what the expense may be. Any one who has a suggestion as to any other new attraction is requested to give it to the secretary, W. C. Hartman.

Auburn Foundry & Machie Works Fails.

Saturday's Daily.

Today the Auburn Foundry & Machine Works went insolvent. Poor business is the cause. Mortgages have been given to secure home creditors.

THAT $20,000 SUIT.

Judge McClellan went to Fort Wayne yesterday to take part as counsel for the defense, in the $20,000 damage suit brought by one Frank Long of that city, against the Kiblinger Company of Auburn, for infringement of his patent. It would appear that Long had invented and patented what he claimed was an improved buggy cushion, and proposed to the Kiblinger Co. that if they would employ him at the rate of $15 a week, he would allow them to make and use these cushions without any charge for royalty. They tried making the cushions, but there was some defect about their construction, that made them of little or no account. Alterations were then made, till it was believed these defects were overcome and that a serviceable cushion would be the result. So the company went on making them for a time until about 840 had been made and put on the market. Soon they had trouble about these cushions. They did not give satisfaction, and began to come back on their hands under their guaranty that they should be satisfactory. This was two or three years ago, and though they soon stopped making or selling them, the cushions still keep coming back. But Long never came to work for them, so far as that was concerned, he broke his part of the contract. However, there was a clause in the contract to the effect that whenever he and the company could not get along with him working for them, he could quit, and after that they should pay him 5 cents royalty on each cushion made. Now, as he never came to work it would appear that the company will have to pay 5 cents on each of these cushions according to the contract. And this they are and have been, willing to pay. But Long, now sues, not for the royalty on the 840 cushions, which would be about $42, but for $20,000 for using his patent. The case being under the U. S. patent laws, comes into the U. S. court, which is now being held at Fort Wayne. Judge John H. Baker, presiding. As already said, Judge McClellan represents the Kiblinger Co., and Colerick and of Ft. Wayne are for Long. W. H. McIntyre went down again today to continue the trial.

AFTER SPENCER.

Mr. Leighty Will be Pension Agent August 15.

(Fort Wayne Sentinel).

The politicians in the republican party are determined to have President McKinley remove Pension Agent M. V. B. Spencer. The Indianapolis Journal says:

Private advices received from Washington yesterday indicate that Martin Van Buren Spencer will be superseded as the pension agent for Indiana on August 15, ex-Representative J. D. Leighty, of St. Joe, DeKalb county, succeeding him. The public is familiar with the story of the efforts to oust Mr. Spencer.

Last spring charges covering these points were forwarded to the interior department at Washington, supported by affidavits and ample proofs. Mr. Spencer went to Washing to controvert these charges and the evidence on both sides was long and carefully considered by the department. About two weeks ago Secretary Bliss wrote to Mr. Spencer that his resignation would be acceptable and Mr. Spencer replied that he would not resign or get out until he was removed or his term expired. This was not a difficult matter and the word received yesterday is to the effect that the appointment of Mr. Leighty, which was determined upon some months ago, will be announced in a few days, to take effect August.

The New Tariff.

The new tariff law is causing some trouble. The passengers who reached this country on the Saturday steamers expected to come in under the old law, which exempted from duty, their personal effects. But the new law taxes all one's clothing over $100 worth. One man found himself obliged to pay $170 dollars duty on some Sunday clothes he had bought in this country before he left and was now bringing them back with him after an absence of only seven weeks. On many articles the duty has been purposely put so high that none of that article can be imported, and the man who makes or produces it here, will be able to charge a higher price, which the consumer must pay. The government gets nothing. And yet there are those wild enough to claim that such laws will bring prosperity to the government and also to the people.

It Starts Out Promptly.

We have all along said that the new tariff law would cause a rise in prices of things we buy to use. Saturday at 4 p. m. the president signed the new law, and at once it not only went into effect, but dated from the previous midnight. And at once, the wholesale dealers all over the country had notices printed and sent out that very day, even before the bill was signed, for they knew it would be passed that afternoon and promptly signed. These notices told their customers in the smaller cities and towns, that the lines of good they were handling would be higher on all future orders. The first of these "advance agents" we have seen, came to Fischler & Son of of this place. It is from Lyon & Healy, the great music dealers of Chicago, and like the rest is dated Saturday July 24, the day the law was passed. It reads.

We beg to inform you that in consequence of the duty on musical instruments and Gut Strings being increased by the tariff, we are obliged to raise our prices from this date as follows.

On Gut Strings about 45 per cent
On other goods about 20 per cent.

Please preserve this with our catalogue which you have.

P. O. Changes

The change in postmasters at Waterloo took place yesterday, Wm. Williams took the office Sunday morning. He has put in a new set of boxes, but keeps the same room. This leaves Mr. Getts with his boxes on his hands. Uncle Sam don't do quite right with his postmasters. These boxes are not a source of revenue to anyone but the government, and the government should own them.

AT THE CAMP.

Life Among the Epworth Guards In Their Forest Home.

Thursday's Daily.

The camp is pleasant enough after you get to it, but it is deep in the forest, and is reached by one of those serpentine trails that reminds one of the ancient pioneer days, except that this has no mud. The grounds proper, are nicely raked off to get rid of the leaves and old trash always to be found in "real, for surely" woods. The trees are thrifty and tall, and to a number of them have been attatched ropes for swings. There are grounds for croquet, and for ball, and all these sources of amusement are enthusiastically patronized. Still the enthusiasm of a game is mild, compared with the enthusiasm of the dinner call. We happened out there today a little before the dinner hour, but the fragrance of the savory beans and bacon, had already been noticed by the keen noses of the lads. They have breakfast pretty early and this compels the managers to have dinner a little after eleven or there would be such a rebellion as would leave no ono to constitute a board of court martial to sit on the offenders. But the bugle call was promptly on time, and with out a kick the boys got into position. By "position" is to be understood to get into your tent, get your plate, tin cup and appetite ready. All these items were in shape when those in charge of the kettles outside the tent line, came along and made each hungry fellow happy with a generaus supply of bread, beans and now and then a piece of pork. But the boys excuse themselves by saying they were not certain of pork at noon, but at breakfast, they would have coffee. Some of the tents had a little board or two fixed up for tables, while others spread a blanket and ate in picnic fashion. But all ate, we feel sure of that. After the Epworth Guards had emptied their kettles the same ones were cleaned and used to cook the food for the Garrett Brigade, whose meals, consequently come a little later. The Garrett boys wore blue caps and the Auburn boys white. The Garrett boys use guns that have gone out of use in the army, and have had the barrel cut off about four inches from the lock and its place taken by a round piece of wood as long as the stock to hold the bayonet. The gun now, will crack a cap in their drill, but can do no other harm. Our own, boys however, have their little wooden guns. Both companies drill once in the forenoon and once in the afternoon.

There is a driven well right by the camp grounds, and penty of shade every where. But a few rods away is the creek, and the boys would like to bathe in that about all the time, if the officers did not watch them. Of course they have to be watched. We saw too Garrett boys who had gone outside the lines, industriously engaged in smoking forbidden cigarettes. At night there are two campfires kept up and two guards are on duty. Last night it was cool and the boys say they nearly froze towards morning. Many people go out to visit them from Auburn and Garrett, the most of whom take their baskets along and have a picnic of their own. Tomorrow, there is the regular Sunday school picnic which all the school and people may attend. There are one or two on the sick list, but the "post surgeon." Dr. Baxter goes out each afternoon, and manages to counteract the green apples that caused the trouble. The boys will talk of camp life for some time.

SHUGERS-AMSTUTZ

A Quiet Wedding at the Home of Rev. J. D. Brosy this Morning.

The wedding of John Shugers and Miss Leah Amstutz of Allen county occurred this morning at the Lutheran parsonage: Rev. J, Brosy officiating They will reside on the farm south of town and have best wishes of the COURIER as well as their many friends here for a happy future.

QUEER FREAK.

Frank Wingard, who resides east of town, has a queer freak of nature. It is young heifer that gives milk. The animal is only one year old last spring, but his attention was lately called to her, and on investigation it was found that she was producing milk The little cow is now milked every day, the regular yield being about a pint and a half of good, natural, milk. To prove it to be perfect in every way, they have churned some of it, and good butter was the result. We are told that these cases are extremely rare. In fact we never heard of such a thing before. Mr. Wingard will bring her to the Auburn Street Carnival where she will be exhibited so that all may see her.

Come Home For Somethiug Soft

Thursday's Daily.

At 5 o'clock this morning a brave officer of the Junior Guards stationed at Shuger's woods called at his father's house in Auburn. He had fought bravely during the lonesome hours of the night battling against cold, hard ground and mosquitoes. Dusty and worn he asked for a comfort, having taken but three blankets to camp. Incidentally he ate some fried eggs and after being thus "reinforced" hastened to return as his "leave of absence" expired at six o'clock.

Stands at the Head.

Aug J. Bogel, the leading druggist of Shreveport, La., says: "Dr. King's New Discovery is the only thing that cures my cough, and it is the best seller I have." J. F. Campbell, merchant of Safford, Ariz writes: "Dr. King's New Discovery is all that is claimed for it; it never fails and is a sure cure for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. I cannot say enough for its merits. Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds is not an experiment. It has been tried for a quarter of a century and to-day stands at the head. It never disappoints. Free trial bottles at, Robbins & McCord's Drug Store. 1

Easy and Quick.

A great many visitors at the Epworth Guard camp took a lively interest in seeing the boys wash their dishes, by holding them under the stream of cold water at the pump and then rub them with a stick or some old leaves. And one ingenious lad washed his dishes without leaving his tent He just spit on his plate, and rubbed it off with his hand. All of which goes to prove that ordinary housewives don't know how to economize. To those who make dishwashing such a drudgery, we recommend the Epworth Guard Cook Book, and the chapter on "Dishwashing Made Easy."

Abused the Horse.

Friday's Daily.

Two women are in jail here, for cruelty to a horse. Some time yesterday a couple of tough women who have been hanging about town for some time, went to Trout's livery barn and asked for a rig to drive to the Junction. George Trout was in charge of the barn at the time, and not knowing the style of people he was dealing with, he let them have a horse and buggy. But instead of going to the Junction, they went to Corunna. There they picked up two young men, Strouse and Mercer, and the four to gether used the rig all day, driving out to some part of the country and then when they had exhausted the stock of beer they took along, they would drive to town to get more. The abuse of the horse, aroused the sympathy of the people, and they telephoned to Auburn. Mr. Trout went up there and had all parties arrested, and taken before the Justice. The trial lasted till about midnight, and in the great throng of business, the two men escaped, and so far have not been caught. The women were brought here, and are now in jail. We suppose they will have to wait till the next term of court, before being tried. They deserve severe punishment for abusing a dumb animal in the way the did. But it seems to us there should be some means provided in the law, by which they could be called up and tried without waiting two or three months at public expense. Whenever they are brought to trial, they will still have their jail sentence to serve, if convicted.

A BURGLAR SCARE.

Friday's Daily.

Last evening while people were at prayer meeting, it was rumored that some one had broken into Charlie Sheet's house in the north part of town. Some one telephoned from Ed. Bishop's residence to the sheriff, but by some mistake it was stated that the trouble was at Mrs. Houston's. The sheriff in going there, told Elias Zimmerman of the trouble, and the latter knowing that Mrs. Houston was at prayer meeting, sent word to her. She was so greatly excited over the news as to require help to get home. But when she got there she found there was nothing wrong. Then it was found that it happened at Chas Sheet's but it turned out that no one had broken in there, and so the scare ended. But for a time that part of town was in a fever.

ELECTRIC BITTERS.

Electric Bitters is a medicine suited for any person, but perhaps more generally needed in the Spring, when the languid exhausted feeling prevails, when the liver is torpid and sluggish and the need of a tonic and alterative is felt. A prompt use of this medicine has often averted long and perhaps fatal bilious fevers. No medicine will act more surely in counteracting and freeing the system from the malarial poison. Headache, Indigestion Constipation, Dizziness yield to Electric Bitters. Only fifty cents per bottle at Robbins & McCord's Drug Store.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT.

Many Killed and Injured by an Explosion at Chicago.

Seven, and probably eight lives were lost in an explosion which took place during a fire in the Northwestern grain elevator at Cook and West Water streets, Chicago. Three of the dead are firemen. The body of another fireman is thought to be buried in the ruins of the elevator, and an unknown man was blown into the river. His body has not been recovered. From the force with which the explosion swept the spot on which he was standing it is certain he must have been instantly killed. Either a bursting boiler or an explosion of mill dust caused the awful havoc. The three firemen, killed by a falling elevator, were: Jacob J. Schnur, John J. Coogan and Jacob S. Stramer.

Fifty-one firemen were injured, some of whom will die.

The fire was most difficult to control, as the elevator was surrounded by a number of small frame buildings, which were constantly catching fire. The loss is estimated at $300,000, fully covered by insurance.

Preacher Had a Pistol.

For the past three weeks mischievous boys have been disturbing revival meetings at the Christian Church, 12 miles northeast of Washington, Ind. While at their pranks the other night Rev. Walstein lost his temper, and, pulling a revolver from his pocket, started for the window, where the boys had congregated. He had taken but a few steps when the revolver was accidentally discharged, the ball striking James Stanford's 2-year-old child in the side, the bullet coming out near the navel. The congregation was thrown into wild excitement, during which Rev. Walstein, who came from Illinois, left, and has not since been seen. The child is still alive.

Gov. Bushnell a Very Sick Man.

Gov. Bushnell is a very sick man. The trouble is undoubtedly heart weakness, though the physicians refer to it as mere indigestion. He has all the symptoms of poor circulation, and lost flesh rapidly in the last month. He expects to leave for Northern Michigan soon, if able to travel, to rest for several weeks. He has been going down hill as to health for four or five months, and unless he recuperates rapidly from now on it will be impossible for him to take an active part in the State champaign.

Drunken Indians Seize a Town.

The town of Carney, Montgomery County, Kan., was only by the almost superhuman efforts of the city officers prevented from being looted by drunken Osage Indians the other day. The Indians got drunk and proceeded to take the town. The squaws also became intoxicated, and after severe fights with the men united and started to take the town. The officers succeeded after a lively fight in driving the redskins out of Carney and across the border.

Frozen to Death.

News has just reached Seattle, Wash., of the death last April of Charles A. Blackstone, George Botcher and J. W. Malinque, miners, who went to Alaska in 1896 and were frozen to death in trying to make their way back to Seattle. They were last seen alive March 27. Friends from Seattle who went to Alaska to investigate, found Blackstone's body, but no trace of the other two could be discovered.

The Kansas Harvest.

Secretary F. D. Coburn of the State Board of Agriculture, has issued a report on Kansas crops. Winter wheat aggregates 42,502,087 bushels. The estimates indicates that 40 per cent. of the year's product will be marketed within sixty days. The oat yield is 25,151,379 bushels. The average condition of corn for the State is sixty.

Wheat for Rio.

The Bureau of American Republics has received information that merchants at Rio de Janeiro have chartered two vessels now at San Francisco to convey cargoes of California wheat to Rio. This is the first time in history that such a thing has occurred and is attributable to the short crop in Argentine and Uruguay.

Attacked by a Mad Son.

George, the 15-year-old son of Jesse Morgan of English, Ind., was adjudged insane recently, but his mother refused to permit the boy to be taken from home. While she was trying to sooth the boy, he attacked her and chewed nearly all the flesh off one of her arms. The doctors fear blood poison and death.

McKinley Will Attend.

Commander McConnell of Columbia Post G. A. R. of Chicago, who is in Buffalo, has received a letter from Private Secretary Porter announcing the acceptance by President McKinley of an invitation to a banquet to be tendered him by the post in Buffalo on August 24.

Set on Fire Three Times.

The residence of Mrs. Rebecca Hill of Blanchester, Ohio, was destroyed by fire. It was set on fire three different times in one night. Strong charges of incendiarism are made, the party suspected said to be acting out of revenge.

To Reoccupy Palestine.

The representatives of the Baron Hirsch charities at London seem to take very seriously the scheme of Dr. Theodore Hertzl of Vienna for the formation of an independent Jewish state in Palestine. It is said that the Hebrews are organizing in all parts of the world.

Ocean Vessel Goes Down.

Cable dispatches from Melbourne say the steamer Tasmania, bound from Wellington to Sydney, N. S. W., struck a rock off Cape Mahia, between the towns of Napier and Gisborne, New Zealand, and sank in three hours. Six of the crew were drowned.

TIDE IS RISING.

All Sections Report Improvement in Business and Crop Prospects Are of the Best.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says: "Dispatches from almost every Northern city of importance report without exception improvement in business, and from ocean to ocean splendid crop prospects. The task of adjusting the business and industries of the country to conditions created by a new law has progressed with gratifying rapidity and ease. Even the increasing strength of striking coal miners probably forwards the adoption of the uniformity plan, which promises to remove most of the causes of such struggles. Some confusion is caused by events seemingly contradictory—by closing of large cotton mills when many other works are starting and by decline in some prices when others are advancing—but the balance is unmistakably on the right side. The most important event since the passage of the new tariff, which was generally anticipated a week ago, has been the marked increase in foreign demand and advance in price for wheat. With crop news still favorable producers may probably realize something like $80,000,000 more than last year on wheat. Corn and cotton also advanced, though reports as to yield are good."

LAKE OF OIL THE LATEST.

Gold Discoveries of Alaska Not the Only Ones Made.

While the whole world is excited over the gold discoveries in the north, sight has been lost of another discovery that promises to be of great value in the development of that section. Some months ago a lake was discovered and samples were sent to Seattle for analysis. The report on these has just been made public, and the find is reported to be of most marvelous richness. A company has been formed in Seattle to handle the product, and travelers from there say that the company intends to put it on the Alaskan market at once. The lake is of unknown depth, several miles in length, and the quality of the petroleum is said to be of the finest. It is fed by springs, and the hills surrounding it are said to be rich in coal and asphalt. The lake is only two miles from the ocean, so that the difficulties of transportation are reduced to a minimum. It is the expectation of the owners of the lake to take its product into the mining camps of Northern Alaska wherever the waterways will permit.

ACCUSED BY HER CHILDREN.

Minnesota Woman Said to Be Guilty of Murdering Her Husband.

A Redwood Falls (Minn.) special says that John O'Connell, a well-known farmer and prominent politician of Westline township, was murdered at his farmhouse. Seven gashes in his scalp were the immediate cause of death. After the blows had been inflicted O'Connell's clothing was saturated with kerosene and his home was set on fire. Statements of three of his children are to the effect that Mrs. O'Connell, wife of the murdered man, was the sole author of the horrible tragedy. His wife's antipathy to drink was strong and his abuse of her and the children while under its influence may have driven her temporarily insane.

ENDS TWO TREATIES.

England Terminates Commercial Agreements with Germany and Belgium.

The commercial treaty between Great Britain and the German zollverein, which has been in force since May 30, 1865, was renounced Friday by Great Britain and will cease to be operative a year hence. Le Soir o fBrussels publishes a special edition announcing that the British Government has renounced the commercial treaty with Belgium. The announcement has caused much excitement in commercial circles.

No Mercy to Be Shown.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat has this from Havana: The campaign which Gen. Weyler is contemplating in Eastern Cuba will be the greatest military effort made by the Spanish army in the island since the war began, in 1895. The rainy season, the intense heat now prevailing all over the island, and the dire increase by yellow fever of the death rate among the Spanish soldiers will not deter Gen. Weyler. A few days ago the prime minister cabled to Weyler that it was necessary to "crush the revolution in a short time, at no matter what sacrifice of life." Spain knows that time is the greatest ally of the patriots, as each day of the war means $250,000 more of expense for the Spanish treasury. If Weyler should remain in active command during the balance of the summer, the prolongation of the struggle one year more would be certain. In the face of this dark prospect for Spain, Canovas has evidently decided to throw the last card. There will be no prisoners. Every man who falls into the hands of the Spaniards will be immediately shot. A shore time was given to women and children to leave the country, and from now on they will be considered as enemies. Impartial observers consider Weyler's whole plan to be folly, because the mountainous topography of the province of Santiago de Cuba, and the lack of railway communication and good roads in both provinces, will make the movements of a large army of 30,000 men very difficult. However this may be, the failure of Weyler will blight Spain's last hopes.

Settles the Damages.

The Treasury Department has turned over to the State Department for delivery to Christopher Schmidt, through the German embassy, the sum of $3,000 as full indemnity to him for injuries sustained in 1892 from a rifle shot fired by United States soldiers. Schmidt was passing along a public highway near Fort Snelling, Minn., while the soldiers were firing over their rifle range and was struck by a stray bullet. He was a subject of Germany, but when the appropriation was made for his relief Congress expressly refused to admit liability in such cases, and made the item read: "Relief of a subject of Germany. To pay out of humane consideration, without reference to the question of liability therefor, to the German Government, as full indemnity," etc. The State Department has finally ended another international incident by paying over to Count Vinci, the Italian charge, the sum of $6,000 as indemnity for the doing to death by a mob of three Italian subjects. The men were Lorenzo Saiaddino, Salvatore Areno and Guiseppe Venturella, and they were taken out of jail at Hahnville, La., about a year ago and lynched.

Won't Ride with His Wife.

Said Mrs. Ackerman, of New York, who weighs 300 pounds, to her husband, who tips the beam at 100: "Come out and ride the wheel with me. I'll soon teach you." "Ride with you!" exclaimed Ackerman. "I will not. People will stare at us and say, 'There go the mosquito and the cow.'" His wife in a rage flounced from his presence and put on her bicycle suit. When she returned her husband sneeringly remarked: "You're a pretty sight in that rig. To see you on a wheel reminds me of a load of hay on a fence rail." "I'm going to get a divorce," she threatened when she returned from her ride. Mr. Ackerman consulted a lawyer and found that she hasn't sufficient cause for a divorce.

Views of Ex-Minister Parker.

Samuel Parker, who was minister of foreign affairs in Queen Liliuokalani's cabinet, arrived in San Francisco from Honolulu on the Belgic. He said: "If annexation is defeated, Hawaii will put her foot down. She will then be ready to negotiate with Japan, England or any other country. About one-fourth of the people of the islands are Japanese, many of them soldiers, it is rumored. I do not think Japan will do anything until the annexation and treaty questions have been settled by the United States."

STEAMER BURNS AT SEA.

Furtor Collides with an Iceberg, Becomes Waterlogged and Is Set on Fire.

Twenty-one men, comprising the officers and crew of the British steamer Furtor, were brought to Boston by the steamer Sagamore. Their vessel had become waterlogged through collision with an iceberg and was burned at sea, and they were picked up by Capt. Alexander Fenton and his crew after they had been forty-nine hours in open boats. The Furtor, under command of Capt. D. J. Jenkins, sailed from West Bay, N. S., on June 23, with a cargo of 1,000 standard of deals, consigned to parties in Barry, Wales. The Sagamore left Liverpool on July 24, and when off Cape Race, N. F., about 1 a. m., July 29, the lookouts discerned rockets denoting that some vessel was in distress. First Officer Tamlin ordered one of the lifeboats launched and, manned by himself and five men, they rowed as rapidly as possible toward the scene. Arriving near where the rockets were sent up the rescuers discovered four lifeboats, in which was the entire crew of the Furtor, which was lying close by, in a waterlogged condition and on fire. Reaching the Sagamore's side the five boats were quickly hoisted on board and every attention was given to the suffering men, who had been adrift forty-nine hours with but a scanty supply of provisions and water. The day previous to the rescue the men suffered considerable hardship from the cold and rain, a heavy westerly gale with high seas having raged for nearly twenty-four hours. The Furtor ran into a towering iceberg, which stove in her bows and it was necessary to take to the boats. A fire was built on the deck to attract the attention of steamers and this set fire to the ship and she burned to the water's edge.

CLOUDBURST IN COLORADO.

Large Number of Bridges Swept Away in Short Order.

A cloudburst caused the most serious flood ever known near Castle Rock, Colo. Plum creek became a raging torrent in a few minutes, and not less than a hundred bridges on that stream and its tributaries were washed away. The Denver and Rio Grande and Santa Fe Railway companies suffered some damage to tracks and other property, not, however, of a serious nature, nor sufficient to interfere with regular train service. The damage to wagon bridges and roads will cost the county several thousand dollars.

VICTIMS OF VOLCANIC FURY.

Great Crater of Mayon Belches Death to Many and Widespread Destruction.

Advices received at Tacoma, Wash., say the great volcano Mayon, on the Philippine Islands, is again active. Eruptions commenced June 26. By July 1 five hundred natives were dead. Later advices via Hong Kong said the dead would number thousands, and that three cities and fifteen villages had been destroyed, together with vast areas of fertile plantations.

New Move in the Strike.

Upon the application of James Sloan Jr., of Baltimore, a stockholder in the Monongah Coal and Coke Company, made by ex-Governor Fleming, his counsel, Judge Jackson, in the United States court at Parkersburg, W. Va., Wednesday afternoon granted a sweeping injunction restraining Eugene V. Debs and his associates from in any way interfering with or molesting the management or the conducting of the property of the Monongah Coke and Coal Company or its employes.

Troops in Havana Growl.

The troops in Havana have had a hard time, lack of rations, etc., and they have created much trouble in the past few weeks. Several officers have been shot and the troops are in a very bad way. The hapless people have felt the influence very much, as they have been the victims of the soldiers right along. The stores have been looted, the men ill-treated and roughly used.

Philadelphia Firemen Hurt.

In Philadelphia, fire broke out in the extensive chemical works of D. Jayne & Son. One of the assistant engineers of the fire department and several of the firemen were injured by falling walls. The damage is estimated at $200,000.

Ore Bins Burned.

The ore bins and ore chute of the Boston and Montana's Leon shaft at Butte, Mont., was destroyed by fire Sunday morning. The origin of the fire is not known. The company's loss will not exceed $10,000.

Orders Another Attack.

The Brazilian government has ordered another attack on the fanatics now at Canudos. The force of government troops will be increased until 15,000 men are prepared to fight.

DIE IN MOLTEN LAVA.

THE GREAT CRATER AT MAYON BELCHES DEATH.

Thousands of Philippine Natives Are Victims to the Volcano's Fury—Cities and Villages Overwhelmed, and Fertile Plantations Laid Waste.

Nature's Awful Spasm.

Advices received at Tacoma, Wash., by steamer say that five hundred reported killed up to July 1 is the record of the terrible outbreak of the great volcano of Mayon, on the island of Luzon, one of the Philippine group. The night of June 26 this volcano began throwing up ashes and lava in immense quantities and flames were thrown upward considerably over 100 feet above the crater. The next day fifty-six bodies were recovered at a considerable distance and the most recent dispatches to Hong Kong up to July 8 stated that not less than 500 were known to be killed.

It was probable, said the dispatches, that the loss of life would reach into the thousands, depending on the length of eruption. On that date lava streams and ashes had reached the cities of Bacacay, Malipot and Liboy, and their destruction was certain. Fifteen smaller towns between these and the volcano had been destroyed and scores of the agricultural population had been overwhelmed while attempting to escape.

People Overwhelmed.

The population about the mountains is stated to be very large, because of the fine hemp plantations in the valleys radiating from it, where hemp of the best quality known to commerce is produced. The natives live in deadly fear of an eruption, and hastened away as soon as the flames began to appear. In case of hundreds it was then too late, for the lava streams overflowed into the valley below like a rushing river. Many villages and fine plantations have been completely buried in lava and ashes.

Mayon has been in eruption thirteen times since 1716 at long intervals. The greatest loss of life and property was caused by the eruptions of 1766, 1814, 1853 and 1871. July 6, 1881, the volcano became active again and small emissions of lava and steam have occurred more or less constantly ever since. Warnings of violent outbreaks are usualy had in the form of earthquakes or loud rumblings, but these were not experienced in June.

STATEMENT OF PUBLIC DEBT.

Report for July Shows an Increase of Over $6,000,000.

The monthly statement of the public debt issued Monday shows that the debt less cash in the treasury at the close of business on July 31 was $993,446,646, an increase during the month of $6,790,560, which is accounted for by a corresponding decrease in the cash in the treasury. This decrease is in consequence of exceptionally heavy disbursements. The debt, independent of the cash, was decreased by $330,610.

The debt is recapitulated as follows: Interest-bearing debt, $847,365,320; debt on which interest has ceased since maturity, $1,336,340; debt bearing no interest, $377,761,442. Total, $1,226,463,102. This, however, does not include $588,513,953 in certificates and treasury notes outstanding, which is offset by an equal amount of cash in the treasury. The cash is classified as follows: Gold, $178,024,777; silver, $521,734,139; paper, $149,429,392; bonds, disbursing officers' balances, etc., $18,753,822. Total, $867,961,932. Against which there are demand liabilities outstanding amounting to $634,945,476, which leaves the net cash balance in the treasury $233,016,456.

The monthly statement issued by the director of the mint shows that during July, 1897, the coinage executed at the United States mints amounted to $670,850, as follows: Gold $377,000; silver, $260,000; minor coins, $33,850. During the month of August the large accumulation of gold bullion at San Francisco, which now amounts to $4,500,000, will be worked off as rapidly as the capacity of the mint will permit. The coinage of standard silver dollars probably will be resumed about Sept. 1. The monthly comparative statement of the Government receipts and expenditures for the month of July show the total receipts to have been $39,027,364 and the disbursements $50,100,908, leaving the excess of expenditures over receipts $11,073,544. This deficit is accounted for by abnormally heavy expenditures incident to the beginning of the new fiscal year. As compared with June the receipts were increased $2,442,656, and the disbursements were increased by $27,166,214. During last month the receipts from customs amounted to $16,966,801, an increase as compared with July, 1896, of about $5,000,000. The internal revenue during July last yielded $19,767,831, as compared with $14,302,532 for July, 1896.

Billy Duke of Baltimore wants to try his skill against any 135-pound man.

Tommy Ryan has already begun active training for his coming fight with "Kid" McCoy.

If any of the 110-pounders want an engagement, Joe Bateman of Jersey City is willing to fight them.

The announcement made about a month ago that Peter Maher and Tom Sharkey would fight under the auspices of Dan Stuart has been verified.

Casper Leon says that if "Spike" Sullivan will post a forfeit for his "unknown," he will fight him or anybody else for the 105 pound championship of the world.

Homer Selby ("Kid" McCoy's brother) aspires to become the welter-weight champion of the world, and as a starter has challenged Con Doyle of Chicago.

Once more there is talk of a fight between Jack McAuliffe and Lavigne. This talk is just about as important as the talk about a finish between John L. Sullivan and Fitzsimmons was.

Owing to the fact that Solly Smith has been matched to box "Pedlar" Palmer in London, the proposed encounter between himself and Johnny Griffin, which was to have been decided at San Francisco, has been declared off.

Now that Sammy Kelly has posted $1,000 with Al Smith to bind a match with Dave Sullivan, there is no reason why these two bantams shouldn't come together without delay. Sullivan has also posted $1,000 with Smith.

Jack Madden, the Brooklyn bantamweight, wants to meet Jimmy Anthony before one of the clubs in San Francisco. Madden is ready to put a forfeit for a side bet of $500 to $1,000. The contest to take place within the next six weeks.

The latest information which has been received from Peter Jackson was brought by a sporting man who arrived here from London the other day. He said that Jackson is in fine health, and doing very well with a school for boxing, which is located in London.

FIVE WIVES OR MORE.

David E. Bates a Big Star in the List of Marital Marauders.

With five known wives and possibly as many more not yet discovered, with sweethearts by the score loving by mail and telegraph, David E. Bates, now locked up at the stock yards police station in Chicago, has lived a life of consummate marital deceit and trickery which has seldom been equaled. Bates has been married five times surely, though the police believe they have information concerning another woman who claims to be his wife. "He has confessed that he had wedded twelve times and should have married as many more women," was the startling statement of pretty 19-year-old Nettie Swaim, his last bride.

So far as is known the following is a list of the women Bates has married:

No. 1—KATE HOWARD, Florence, Mich.; married Jan. 24, 1885; got a decree of divorce at Kalamazoo in 1888.

No. 2—ANNA E. HARBERT, Plainwell, Mich.; married Sept. 11, 1889; tried to get a divorce June, 1897.

No. 3—JULIA M. M'CARTHY, 5840 Sherman street, Chicago; married in Chicago June 4, 1894.

No. 4—IDA CALDERWOOD, Galena, Ill.; married March, 1896, and brought to Chicago by Bates.

No. 5—NETTIE E. SWAIM, 6502 Bishop street, Chicago; married Feb. 27, 1897.

Bates told the relatives of his first Chicago wife that he had had an agreement with wife No. 2 to separate, and this made his marriage to Miss McCarthy legal. They are going to prosecute him for bigamy, however. H. F. Lawrence, the brother-in-law of wife No. 5, caused the arrest of Bates, and there will be another prosecution for bigamy. Bates' career has been remarkable. He is 38 years old, but he looks younger, though his experience has been such as would turn any other man's hair gray. He is a psychological puzzle. He is a dull, uninteresting, homely, thin-faced, angular specimen of humanity of the commonplace type. In the slang of the street he would be called a "lobster." Yet he induced at least five women to marry him and has been in correspondence with a score of others who have expressed in their letters the warmest affection for him. He kept three and possibly four establishments in Chicago at the same time, though he was only getting $60 a month as night clerk for the Union Stock Yards and Transit Company. He fell heavily into debt. This was the only matter that troubled him. He had finally determined to get rid of all his wives by starting for Alaska on the day he was arrested.

THE MAN OF MANY WIVES.

DEBS ISSUES A DEFI.

Labor Leader Says the Jackson Injunction Is a Farce.

Eugene V. Debs, the social reformer, says that he will talk when and where he pleases, regardless of the injunction issued by Judge Jackson in West Virginia. He declares it is the most sweeping document ever promulgated and one which, if its principles were sustained, would effectually strike down all constitutional rights. Concerning it he says:

The injunction issued by Judge Jackson is substantially the same as that issued by Judge Mason. By its provisions I am enjoined from walking on the public highways which lead to the mines, and as all the highways lead to the mines I am subject to arrest the instant I enter the State. This is the most sweeping injunction ever issued by any court, and if sustained, as it doubtless will be, it effectually strikes down all constitutional rights and leaves us bound and helpless at the feet of the money power.

The courts of this country have degenerated until they are now the conveniences of corporate capital. There are but few exceptions and they but serve to prove the rule. They are the oppressors of the people who support them. This fact is being gradually understood, and when the eyes of the people are entirely opened there will be a change, and the high priests of the bench will learn that judicial despotism will not be tolerated on American soil.

As for Jackson's injunction, I hold it in sovereign contempt. If I have occasion to speak in the interest of furnishing miners in his jurisdiction I will do so, or at least make the attempt, totally regardless of his infamous injunction. The farce of it is that the injunction pretends to be issued by a judge. If it came direct from the coal operators some little respect would be due the judge. Such injunctions are issued by the creatures who owe their positions to organized capital, and they obey the orders of their masters with the alacrity of spaniels. It is no wonder that Judge Lynch is so often in demand these days. People are losing all confidence in the courts. Let the injunction business proceed, and the time is not distant when the people will take the law into their own hands and some of the judges who wear debauched ermine will pay the penalty of their apostasy to an outraged people.

DIES TO PAY DEBTS.

Charles Knorr Writes Creditors Where His Body Will Be Found.

Charles Knorr, an architect of Chicago, decided to shoot himself to pay his debts. Saturday he cashed a check for $25 at Albrecht & Glembow's meat market. Sunday, filled with remorse, he wrote a letter to the butchers, it is said, confessing the check was a forgery. "When you receive this note I will be dead," he wrote, "but my wife will pay you for the loss out of my insurance money."

Wednesday morning A. L. Kraus received yet another note telling him just where the body would be found. The writer told him to inform the president of his lodge of the death at once, so his wife would have no delay in securing her insurance money. Kraus, behind a fast horse, set out at once, and at top speed began the mad race with death. The note had said the body would be near Niles Center, but when the exhausted animal and his driver reached the spot indicated it was too late—life was extinct.

RACE TO SAVE A SUICIDE.

RECORD OF THE WEEK

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

Successful Employment of Machines to Make Fruit Jars Will Throw Many Out of Work—Alaska's Hardships Do Not Deter Gold-Seekers.

Throws Men Out of Work.

Ball Brothers, of Muncie, the world's most extensive fruit jar manufacturers, are soon to equip their factories with machines to blow jars, and notices have been sent to 200 blowers that their services will not be needed during the season that begins Sept. 1. Frank C. Ball, president of the company, stated that the introduction of the machine was not for the purpose of cutting off the heads of the men, but that it would make a much better jar and at such a cheap cost that jars could take the place of the tin can and earthenware jar and that the firm could spread out to all parts of the world and in a short time more than double the number of employes, and that this jar would find many new fields for usage. The machine is to class blowing the same as was the sewing machine, spinning jenny, the self harvester and other revolutionizing machines, and promises to disrupt one of the strongest labor organizations in the country.

After the Money.

Twenty business men of Indianapolis have formed a stock company, each contributing $1,000, and will select an equal number of enterprising young men for the Klondyke region, the compact running for five years and the entire forty to share equally in all gold mined. An insurance of $10,000 will be placed upon each man going there and in case of death this insurance money will be added to the pool. A general manager will be sent along, who will keep an accurate account of receipts and expenditures, and, whether a man mines little or much, he will share equally in the common pool. The company calculates that a sufficient number will die out of which the remainder can reimburse themselves for the insurance money, whether any gold is found or not.

Crazed by Their Hardships.

John Welch, a former employe in an Indianapolis iron foundry, has written to his mother from Circle City, saying he has been in the Alaskan gold fields for fifteen months and could come home at any time with a few thousand dollars, but he prefers to remain a while longer and return rich. He says that gold nuggets worth from $20 to $50 are being found daily, but many men have become insane from hardships and from disappointment. Successful miners are squandering fortunes in reckless extravagance. Welch warns people against trying to get to the gold country before spring. He has written for his two brothers, Patrick and David, to start for Alaska in February.

All Over the State.

Willis E. Whitemore and Sherman Johns were arrested at South Bend, charged with raising paper money. The arrests were made by Deputy Sheriff John Finch on instructions from Detective Manley of the United States secret service. Both men claim Jackson, Mich., as their home. They are charged with raising $2 bills to $5 and $10 and passing them at Detroit, Mich., and Toledo, O. They will be taken to Indianapolis for a hearing.

The attorneys of Rev. William F. Hinshaw, who is serving a life sentence for wife murder in prison, made an examination of the criminal court records at Indianapolis to see whether Noah Baney and John Whitney, who have exonerated the minister by an alleged confession, were under restraint when the murder of Mrs. Thurza Hinshaw was committed. They found that Baney and Whitney were under bond to appear in court, but were not restrained of their liberty and could have committed the crime. The attorneys were much gratified at the discovery.

The American Wire Nail Company of Anderson bought additional ground in order to enlarge its plant. The working force will be increased from 700 to about 1,000. The Victor Window Glass Company began work trebling the capacity and working force of its ten-pot plant, and the American Tin Plate Company has begun enlarging its plant, so as to increase its working force from 1,000 to 2,000, making the plant the largest tin plate concern in the world. Other manufacturers are so well pleased with the outlook that they are also planning big additions to their plants.

Five inmates of the Jeffersonville penitentiary were given their liberty by the pardon board, as follows: Ben Holton, sent from Jeffersonville to serve twenty-one years for murder; Fred Miller, North Vernon, ten years, murder; Forest B. Newport, Wayne County, assault and battery, six years; George Neehan, DeKalb County, grand larceny, five years; George Sisemore, Grant County, assault and battery, two years. James C. Lavell, whom the people of Indiana wanted to get paroled, has withdrawn his application for clemency, as his term expires in forty days. Lavell is the prisoner implicated in the burning of the Washington court house.

Toughs persisted in disturbing revival services conducted by Rev. John Walstein at Epsom. By advice of some of his congregation, the preacher took two pistols with him to resist a rumored attempt to force him to leave the church. When the disturbance began, the preacher fired, but missed his aim, and instead of hitting the toughs one bullet passed through the body of little Mamie Standiford. The child was sleeping on its mother's lap when the fatal bullet struck it. When Mr. Walstein found he had shot the child, he jumped through a window and made his escape. James Standiford, the child's father, says the preacher can return if he wishes, and he will not prosecute him. It was at Standiford's advice that Walstein took the pistols to church with him.

Charley Lesser, a Kouts boy, while playing with matches in a saloon, lighted one and placed it in the bunghole of a whisky barrel. The barrel exploded, badly injuring the boy and blowing out the front of the building.

Albert and Clara Franks, of Toledo, were found in a Lake Shore stock car at Butler, by a conductor, beating their way to Klondyke. The woman had on men's clothing and was good-looking. They had a large sum of money, but were beating their way to save it to buy their outfit for the gold fields, which they expected to reach early in the spring.

The intense heat caused two deaths at Brazil Wednesday, while there were many prostrations. Mrs. George F. Lisch, aged 55 years, died of paralysis, brought on by becoming overheated. The other victim was Guy Bryan, aged 27, train dispatcher for the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroad.

By a unanimous vote of the seventeen members present the Indianapolis City Council passed the ordinance reducing the price of artificial gas from $1.25 to 75 cents per 1,000 feet. It is claimed that this rate will still afford a profit of 35.61 cents per 1,000 feet. If the gas company does not hinder the ordinance by injunction it will go into effect in two weeks.

The Wind in the Grass.

The song of the wind in the grass!
  Come lie on the ground and listen
When the white clouds drift and pass
  And the dewdrops cease to glisten.
It comes with the perfume of flowers,
  It chases the cares that harass,
And fraught with magical power
  Is the song of the wind in the grass.

Come lie with your heart to the clover
  Out under the orchard trees
And listen the sweet tune over
  A-chime with the lay of the bees.
The tired brain a-throb and a-quiver
  Waxes quiet and clear as a glass,
Till cool thoughts flow like a river
  To the song of the wind in the grass.

A rest that is sweeter than mirth
  Through the soul is soothing stealing,
For the touch of the dear brown earth
  Hath a balm of heavenly healing;
And under the warm blue sky,
  As soft as a whispered mass
Or a dreamland lullaby,
  Is the song of the wind in the grass.

For Katy Delaney.

BY EMMA A. OPPER.

Dwight Hopkins vaulted the hedge between their lawn and the Winslows, and went and joined Irene, who was studying her history on the veranda.

"I'm going to give a party next week," he announced.

Irene turned down a leaf and shut her book with an excited snap. "Why! Not with your mother and Madeline gone?" said she, but Dwight nodded.

"Yes, I am. They're going to be gone a month. It will be hot weather by the time they get back, and you can't dance when it's hot. I think they'll be glad to be rid of the bother of it, for that matter. Father thinks I can manage it, and he's given me $25 for it. I shall have the hotel people serve the refreshments, and I'll have three or four pieces from the opera house orchestra. And if you and your mother," said Dwight, "will help me about it—"

"Of course we will!" Irene promised, delightedly, and she joined him in an enthusiastic discussion of details. She forgot her studying, and they made out a list of the guests, and of the dances, on a flyleaf of her history.

When Dwight went home, he went down to the back entry, to clean his bicycle.

Katy Delaney came through the entry from the kitchen, where she had been calling on the cook. She was a distant connection of the cook's—the cook's cousin had married Katie Delaney's uncle.

Katy Delaney went to the high school. She was in this year's graduating class. "How do you do?" Dwight said. He had considerable respect for her. She was a pleasant girl, and she was a bright scholar, too.

Katy Delaney murmured "How do you do?" and went out hastily, her face averted. Dwight looked sharply after her. "What's the matter with Katy?" he inquired of the cook, who was paring potatoes in the kitchen. "What have you been saying to her? She's been crying, hasn't she?"

"'Twasn't anything I said to her," the cook answered. "It's what she's been saying to me." She pared another potato before she went on.

"She's feeling terrible bad because she can't graduate," said she. "She hain't got any dress to wear, and she can't get any. She'd have to have a white dress like the rest of the girls, and all the other fixings; and she can't have 'em, and she's got to give it all up. She's got pride and she won't wear a dress that ain't suitable. Her father died last winter, you know, and they've had an awful hard time to get along. There ain't any money for any graduating dress for Katy, and Katy knows it. She ain't making any fuss about it, but she feels terribly bad. She'll get her diplomay, I's'pose, same as the rest, but she'll miss all the fun and all the part that's worth having. I offered to let her have the money, but she wouldn't take it. I don't s'pose I would in her place. Well, it's a pity. Poor folks do have it awful hard," said the cook, turning the cold water on the potatoes.

"A pity! I should say it was," said Dwight. He bent a sober face over his wheel.

And he continued to think of it. "Katy Delaney's a first-rate girl. It's pretty tough if she's got to miss commencement. She's one of the best scholars in that class. Margaret Cary and Grace Belden, and all those girls, will be on hand, dressed up like anything, and some of them have only just squeaked through on their examinations."

He finished with his bicycle and went out on the piazza with a magazine. It made no difference. He could not get Katy Delaney out of his mind. "It wouldn't be so bad for a fellow," he thought, "but girls are different about such things. She'll feel awful."

He sat and stared hard at a syringa bush, in full white bloom. He did not sit there long. He jumped up, with sudden impetuosity.

"I don't care," he said, aloud, "it's a shame! And if I can't turn my hand over for somebody once in a while—I'm going to do it!"

He ran upstairs, and found his pocket book, and took from it a little roll of bills—the $25 his father had given him. He folded them in a sheet of letter paper, and on the paper scribbled, "From a friend; for your graduating dress." And he sealed it in an envelope, directed it to Katy Delaney, and ran out with it to the letter box.

And five minutes later he startled Irene Winslow by a second appearance before her. He planted himself with his feet apart and his arms folded.

"I can't have any party, Irene," he said.

"Dwight Hopkins!" said Irene, with a struggling suspicion that Dwight had lost some portion of his senses.

"It's so," said Dwight. "I suppose father would give me some more money, if I teased him, but I shan't."

He told Irene all about it. "You see," he explained, "it was a plagued shame, and I couldn't stand it thinking about it. She's always stood higher in her class than Margaret Cary or any of those girls; and the idea of her having to miss commencement, and all the fun, because she hasn't a dress—"

"I know!" said Irene. Her voice had a little tremble in it. And there was such a look in her eyes that Dwight turned red and coughed.

"Pshaw! 'Twasn't anything," said he, and he began to talk about Lynn Trumbull's new shotgun.

When he started for school the next morning, Irene was waiting for him at her gate.

"I've had an idea," she said, "an inspiration. You can have your party just the same, if you will. It won't be the kind you were going to have, but—wait till I tell you! I thought it up last night."

They were still talking so earnestly when they mounted the schoolhouse steps that they bumped squarely into Bob Logan. "What are you two chinning about?" he demanded, "that you can't see a fellow of my size?"

He found out the next day. He and the rest of the S. T. C. club, and a few chosen outsiders, received invitations from Dwight Hopkins to a party.

They came in yellow envelopes, and they were written on neatly cut strips of brown wrapping paper. "Hard-times Party" was penned in one corner, and "Please wear your oldest clothes" in another.

Curiosity and excitement raged among the S. T. C. Dwight was besieged with inquiries. So was Irene, whose complicity in the matter was more than suspected. But they had nothing to say. "It's all on the invitations," they averred. "It's a hard-times party, and you're to wear your worse clothes; that's all."

An atmosphere of fascination surrounded the affair from the first. It was not too much to say that the S. T. C. had never made preparation for a party with more eagerness. Evelyn Burns' germans even had never caused more discussion and confabulation and general excitement.

"Everybody's accepting; I haven't had a regret. Look here!" Dwight said to Irene, with glee, and he pulled out of his pockets several handfuls of strange looking missives. They were written on all sorts of cheap and outlandish papers, from foolscap to the back of an advertising card and the torn off margin of a newspaper.

"Good! They're getting into the spirit of it already. We'll have no end of fun," said Irene.

Dwight's father had some business out of town that day, and it was 8.30 when he got home. Dwight had informed him that his party came off that evening; and he saw the lighted windows with a pleasant thrill of expectation.

Somebody came forward, when he entered, with a hearty, "How are you, father? Glad you've come"—but he did not for a moment recognize the person.

"What's this?" he gasped. "Eh? what's this?"

Dwight was receiving his guests, and Irene was assisting him. Dwight was attired in a coat he had outgrown two years ago, and whose sleeves did not reach much below his elbows; and a pair of trousers in which he had helped to paint the back porch; they were not only ragged at the knees, but daubed freely with paint; and an old red handkerchief concealed his lack of a collar. Irene Winslow wore a faded old shirt waist, a bicycling skirt with two large rents in it and the hem partly ripped, and some old shoes with their toes stubbed out.

"What is it?" said Dwight. "It's a hard-times party, father."

Flora Osborne and George Clement were coming downstairs. They shook hands with their host cordially. Flora was arrayed in an old cotton frock, in which she had picked berries and helped her mother can them, until its original color was lost in a solid mass of stains; and George wore a jacket whose buttons were missing, trousers wrinkled and mud-stained and frayed round the bottoms, and some tennis shoes which were burst out at the sides.

Irene's mother was there, and Dwight's father took a seat beside her, and there they sat and watched the arriving guests, and laughed until they were fairly tired.

Certainly it was a remarkable occasion. The parlors filled rapidly with, apparently, a disreputable crowd of young tramps and beggars. It looked as if all the rag bags in town had been emptied. Every fresh arrival was greeted with hilarious shouts, and surrounded by a loudly gay mob. Their mirth swelled to a deafening clamor.

Sheridan Rider was the last comer, in a costume any respectable bootblack would have scorned. When the merriment he excited had subsided, the host made an announcement:

"Ladies and gentlemen," he said, "we will now begin to dance. The orchestra will consist of Miss Winslow and myself, who will play a selection after a new method." And Irene struck up a waltz on a comb covered with paper, and Dwight twanged a jewsharp in accompaniment. And the motley throng waltzed."

They danced for two hours. The guests took turns providing the music. The boys whistled, the girls played the piano, but the comb and paper stood high in favor, and some of the performers produced surprising results with it. Bob Logan said it beat the opera house orchestra all hollow. Supper was served at 11. It was served on small tables in the dining room, each of them ornamented by a tin candlestick holding a tallow candle. The refreshments were ham sandwiches and doughnuts and lemonade.

"Hard-time sandwiches and poverty lemonade," Dwight explained, "not to be served more than four times to any one person." But some of them went beyond the limit and all of them ate hungrily.

Then they danced an hour longer. Nobody wanted to go home then, they were having too good a time. And Bob Logan voiced the emphatic opinion of everybody in a neat speech, which he made from a chair, a striking figure in a coat split up the back and a hat of which nothing remained but a ragged brim.

"I desire to thank our host," he said, "for the most unique entertainment——"

"And the bulliest," said Lynn Trumbull.

"In the history of our club," said Bob.

"Or any other," said the chorus.

"And if laughing is good for the health as the doctors say it is," Bob concluded, "We've all laughed enough to-night to keep us alive and well for the next twenty-five years."

And there followed a volley of cheers, and a reluctant breaking up.

"I should like to know what these young rascals of ours will think up next?" Dwight's father said, when everybody had gone save Irene and her mother.

"Irene thunk this up," said Dwight.

"We cannot complain," said Irene's mother, "if all their projects are as economical as this and as successful."

"It cost $2.63," said Dwight, "exactly."

"Well, now that you've had your fun," said his father, "you'd better take your money and give them the party you expected to give—hadn't you?"

Dwight and Irene exchanged looks. "Wouldn't for anything!" said Dwight, hastily, "I'm sick to death of pink silk dresses and long gloves, and orchestras behind palms, and chicken salad and ice cream, and the rest of it. Aren't you, Irene?"

"Of course I am. We all are. It was a blessed relief," Irene answered. And she added softly, with innocent eyes on the chandelier.

"I heard Katy Delaney talking to Maggie Long this morning. She was telling her all about her graduation dress. It's going to be a white barred muslin, with white ribbon trimmings. She's got slippers and gloves and a fan and everything, and she's had enough money left to get her mother something to wear, so she can come and see Katy graduate. She wondered and wondered who sent her the money, and she was so glad and happy about it that she was crying."

"Pshaw!" said Dwight, and he began to whistle.

"What's all this!" said his father.

"Irene Winslow!" said Dwight warningly.

But his father refused to be left in the dark. He smiled in a peculiar and thoughtful way when Irene had finished the explanation, and he looked Dwight over. He did not say much; he remarked, merely, that he'd just as lief have Dwight for a son as any other boy he could think of just that minute.

The hard-times party became celebrated. The local paper printed a detailed account of it, and the S. T. C.'s talked about it for four weeks, and went in groups and had their photographs taken in the costumes they had worn.

But for Dwight and Irene the best of it came later, when Katy Delaney read an essay at the high school commencement, and received her diploma. She looked well in her white dress trimmed with bows of white ribbon, and she was a radiant picture of pride and bliss. And for Dwight and Irene the best of the hard-times party was then and there.—St. Louis Star.

NOTED KEY OWNED BY AMERICA.

Lafayette Sent It to Washington When the Bastile Was Destroyed.

In Mount Vernon, on the Potomac, is preserved an important relic of the Bastile, nothing more nor less than the key of that old fortress of tyranny.

One hundred and six years ago the old state prison of Paris was demolished by an angry mob, on the eve of the great French revolution. This date is often accepted as the breaking out of the revolution. When the mob broke into the stronghold of despotism, they cut off the heads of the officers and paraded the streets with them upon pikes, and also carrying aloft the great key of the Bastile, says the Philadelphia Record.

The key was placed in the hands of the Marquis de Lafayette, Commander-in-Chief of the National Guard of France. In March of the next year Lafayette forwarded it to Thomas Paine in London, to be sent as a present to General Washington, together with the neat drawing representing the destruction of the Bastile.

Lafayette's letter to Washington concluded with the words, "Give me leave, my dear general, to present you with a picture of the Bastile just as it looked a few days after I ordered its demolition, with the main key of the fortress of despotism. It is a tribute which I owe as a son to my adopted father, as an aide-de-camp to my general, as a missionary of liberty to its patriarch."

Not less felicitous was the comment of Paine in forwarding the packet: "That the principles of America opened the Bastile is not to be doubted, and therefore the key comes to the right place."

The key of the Bastile is preserved in a glass case. It hangs in the main hall at Mount Vernon, in the same position where it was placed by Washington. Opposite to it hung the spyglass which Washington used throughout the Revolutionary War.

Paris Fashion in Dogs.

A Paris correspondent writes: "The fashion in dogs in Paris is as changing as any other. The canine exhibition which is now open on the Quai de l'Orangerie reflects the latest taste in the matter. The vogue of the poodle is at an end, and for the moment no dog can aspire to the epithet of chic unless he be large or most diminutive. Danes are most in favor of the former class, and Scotch terriers and toy bulldogs of the latter. German bassets are also highly esteemed, and among the finest in the capital are those owned by Miss Maud Conne, the indefatigable champion of the Irish cause in France. Some Parisian dogs enjoy a wide celebrity. Such is the case, for instance, of Ali, a blue Dane belonging to the Duchess d'Uzes, of Miss, the Comtesse de Burgues' Pomeranian, and of Flic and Flac, Mme. Bernhard t's Russian dogs.

"Her as Has, Gets."

Von Moltke was an early riser and loved early risers. Once, while roaming around his Silesian estate at daybreak, he found a peasant woman bearing on her back a sack of potatoes which she had just dug, making a load heavy enough for a mule. "Here's a thaler for you," said the great field marshal; "you see the early bird catches the worm." Afterward he found out that she was a night thief who had ravaged his fields persistently, but whom his steward had never got up early enough to catch.—London Spectator.

TO REDUCE HER WEIGHT.

Lillian Russell's Never-Ending War Against Obesity.

My system of what is commonly called "doing banting" is a vigorous one, says Lillian Russell, in the New York Journal. I rely mainly upon severe exercise, producing profuse perspiration, followed by vigorous rubbing and a very abstemious diet. For my purpose I find the bicycle and the skipping rope the best means of taking exercise. I rise early and take a very light breakfast, largely of fruit, especially sour oranges, for I believe that acids are valuable agents in the reduction of flesh. Bananas and crackers are also important features of my matutinal meal. Milk, starchy, or saccharine foods of any kind I entirely avoid. It has been truly said that the only proper way to chew tobacco is to eschew it, and I think the same remark applies with equal force to such foods as I have mentioned, if one desires to become thinner. After breakfast I don a loose gymnastic bloomer dress and take a good long turn with my skipping rope. After resting for about an hour, I don a bicycle costume and, mounting a nineteen-pound wheel, I am soon taking a spin out of the Riverside drive or through Central Park. This lasts for two hours. After luncheon I take a long walk and devote the remainder of the time before dinner to reading, study, vocal practice, writing letters, etc. Of course, the above routine has to be varied somewhat when rehearsals claim a considerable portion of my time. Again, when I am on the road traveling from city to city, my habits must be somewhat changed, but even then I adhere to my dietary rules, take my skipping-rope turn, and exercise all I can in the open air. By these means I prevent my weight from ever exceeding 150 pounds.

EFFECTS OF SPORT ON THE FACE

Those Who Indulge in Pastimes to Excess Bear an Indelible Mark.

"If you don't want the world to know that you have done a thing, don't do it," was the sage observation of an ancient philosopher. The advice has a renewed force now, when women are becoming more and more emancipated, and are taking up the pursuits and occupations and even the sports and pleasures that used to be considered men's especial prerogatives. Whether women's faces are more mobile and more ready to receive an imprint or whether women are less given to self-restraint and so express more of their inner feelings is not definitely understood, but the fact remains that on nearly every feminine face is indelibly stamped some impress of her favorite pursuit or amusement.

The bicycle face is well known, with its tightly drawn muscles, resolute, tense expression and an underlying air of resignation, as if it were saying: "If death whirls around the next corner I will meet it with fortitude." The long-distance lens of the golf-eye is also growing common, but the card face is comparatively new. The more experienced Sherlock Holmeses of society claim that they can detect the difference between the whist face and the countenance molded by progressive euchre, but the card face in general is recognizable by the veriest tyro.

There are women who have thrown themselves into card playing so feverishly, with such intense excitement, that it is no longer a diversion, but a serious task. Whether they play for money or points or for some trumpery prize which they would not admit to their drawing-room except as an evidence of their skill at the game, the result is the same. The strain on their nerves is expressed by closely drawn brows and an eye eager and watchful for an opponent's plays and misplays, while greed and the desire for gain show themselves in ugly lines about the mouth. This description applies, of course, to the worst victims of the craze, but the same symptoms, in a more or less modified form, are appearing on the faces of not a few of society's maids and matrons.—Munsey's Magazine.

When a Man Is Fifty.

"A man's advancing age tells on him in no other way more unmistakably than in his habits of rising in the morning," remarked Col. Peter Tolliver of Philadelphia to a St. Louis Republic reporter. "I am 62 years old, and wake up every morning with the sun. Time was when I used to regard it as a hardship to be waked before 8 o'clock. That was when I was young. When I reached 50 I began to wake with the sun, and no matter how late I sat up the night before, I found myself tired of sleeping beyond the hour of the sun's rising. Many men about 50 you meet now will tell you that they find themselves sleeping less than formerly, and are unable to account for it. Whenever one of them complains to me, I know what his age is, no matter how young he may look. There is something in us that responds to reawakened nature when we reach the half-century post in our journey through life, and all the drugs in the pharmacopoeia will not arrest the tendency to sleep no more after daylight comes. In the future, when a friend complains to you of his inability to snooze after 'glooms shiver off and lights creep in,' just tell him that he will find this habit fixed upon him for the remainder of his life, because it is a sure sign of advancing age."

Patience with a husband is equally as good an investment for a woman to make as patience with a son.

JEAN INGELOW.

The Distinguished Poet and Novelist Who Died Recently.

Jean Ingelow, the distinguished poet ess and novelist, who died at London England, recently, was the daughter o William Ingelow, and was born a Boston, Lincolnshire, England, in 1820 Her father was a banker, and he mother was of Covenanter descent. She was 33 years old before her first book appeared, and it made such an impression that she was hailed as one of the greatest poets of the century.

"Poems of Jean Ingelow" appeared at an opportune time to attract attention. Tennyson had been silent for a long time, and the novelty had worn off Longfellow's "Tales of a Wayside Inn." Her poems even ranked next to Longfellow's and above Tennyson's at that time. The English-speaking world was especially captivated by "High Tide Off the Coast of Lincolnshire," a ballad cast in strange form so musical that it sang itself, so quaint and tender and exquisite in its turn of phrase that there was never a word for its defects. Her second volume of poems, entitled "A Story of Doom," followed in 1867, and her third in 1885. In addition to her poems she has written various prose works for children and four novels. Her "Song of Seven," "Divided" and "Laurance" are supposed to be autobiographical. Many of her verses were set to music. Among these is "Oh, Fair Dove, Oh, Fond Dove," the sweet but mournful tale of a sailor's love. "Mopsa, the Fairy," was a fantasy that attracted much attention. Then followed her first novel "Off the Skelligs," her best work in that line, but Miss Ingelow is known to the present generation only as a poet.

The Dragons of the Ancients.

It is food for thought if the ancients were so far wrong after all in their stories about dragons and other monsters. Modern geological discoveries prove that animals quite as dreadful in appearance as the dragons, etc., once lived, and it is only a question whether or no the earlier peoples were not acquainted with living examples of these monsters. It has been suggested that the dragon was nothing more or less than the gigantic lizard, called by science the megalosaurus, which grew to the length of 60 feet. Again the ugly and ferocious looking icythyosaurus, several skeletons of which have been found, was in fact the terrible sea monster which threatened Andromeda. They were bad enough appearing in their natural state, and the ancients may well be pardoned in adding a foot or two to their length and improving their appearance a bit in the adverse direction.

The Barleycorn.

The table of measures says that three barleycorns make one inch, and so they do. When the standards of measure were first established, three barleycorns, well dried, were taken and laid end to end, three being understood to make an inch in length. The hair breadth, now used indefinitely and conventionally for infinitesimal space, was a regular measure, 16 hairs laid side by side equaling one barleycorn.

Secret in Naval Circles.

Great secrecy is observed over the construction of a number of shallow draft gunboats now building for the British government by the Yarrows. The destination of the boats, as well as the model, is being kept dark. They may be for China, the Nile, or the Niger, though some believe that they are to be used on the Zambesi in the event of war with the Transvaal.

INSPIRED A FAMOUS POEM.

Mrs. Amelia Koehler Who Suggested "The Last Rose of Summer."

Considerable interest has been awakened throughout the country by the announcement of the death of Mrs. Amelia Koehler, of Mount Vernon, New York, at the age of 92, owing to the fact that she is supposed to have inspired Thomas Moore's famous poem, "The Last Rose of Summer," and to whom the poem was dedicated by its composer.

The incident, as often told by Mrs. Koehler to her friends, is full of interest. When she was 13 years of age she was sent to London, and there she attended a school kept by a sister of the poet, who frequently visited the school and became acquainted with the pupils. Moore took a decided liking to her and would spend hours in conversing with her. One day, as they were sitting in the garden, she plucked a rose and, placing it on the lapel of the poet's waistcoat, exclaimed, "Oh, now I have given you the last rose of summer." And, as the story runs, this very rose was in fact the last rose left blooming in the garden.

"My child," said the poet, "you have made a beautiful suggestion, and when I have written some verses on it they shall be dedicated to you."

A short time after, Moore wrote the famous lines which follow, and dedicated them to her:

'Tis the last rose of summer,
  Left blooming alone;
All her lovely companions
  Are faded and gone;
No flower of her kindred,
  No rosebud is nigh
To reflect back her blushes
  Or give sigh for sigh.

I'll not leave thee, thou lone one,
  To pine on the stem;
Since the lovely are sleeping,
  Go, sleep thou with them.
Thus kindly I scatter
  Thy leaves o'er thy bed,
Where thy mates of the garden
  Lie scentless and dead.

So soon may I follow,
  When friendships decay,
And from love's shining circle
  The gems drop away;
When true hearts lie withered
  And fond ones are flown,
Oh, who would inhabit
  This bleak world alone!

Mrs. Koehler's maiden name was Amelia Offergeld, and she was born in Aix-la-Chapelle. Her father was an officer in the Prussian army and her mother was of British descent. She was 15 years old when she married Charles Koehler, an importer of Bond street, London. When he died, forty years ago, she came to live with her daughter in this country and remained there until her death.

TO CARRY BICYCLES.

Brooklyn Plan for Transporting Wheels on the Trolley Lines.

Many bicycle riders in cities would welcome the adoption of a plan for transporting wheels in operation on one of the trolley lines in Brooklyn. The illustration shows how four bicycles can be carried on each dashboard without interfering with the motorman or conductor in any way. These racks are also in use in the baggage cars which have been equipped for wheels by the New York Central, Long Island, Manhattan "L" and other railroads. The racks used on the trolley cars are riveted to the sheet iron of the dashboard instead of being screwed to the wall, as in the baggage cars.

The Union Jack.

The origin of the word "Jack" is unknown. The meaning, as understood to-day, is "something shown," and in this sense the application of the word is now limited to the Union flag. Some have supposed it to be derived from the jack or jacque, the tunic worn in early time by men-at-arms, those of Englishmen being decorated with the cross of St. George; which jackets, when not in use, were hung in rows, side by side, thus displaying the blood-red cross, which was at once their banner and their shield. Others regard the name as coming from that of the sovereign James (Jacobus or Jacques), who was the first to hoist it as a national emblem.

Reason for It.

"I never hear you speak of your son."

"No. There are occasionally some little matters of family history that one does not like to discuss.

"He hasn't disgraced the family name, has he?"

"No. Fortunately he had decency enough to change his name before he would consent to run for the Legislature."—Chicago Post.

Had Lost Caste.

"You no longer recognize Miss Barnes."

"No. I can't afford to."

"Why not?"

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana Office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.... August 12. 1897

The Fourth District

F. M. Griffith, democrat, was elected Tuesday in Holman's old district by a majority of 1200. Last year Holman carried it by 725.

Began Business.

The Hotel Bradford opened today, the first public meal being the dinner. There were number of transient guests and some who will be regular boarders. All we have seen expressed themselves highly pleased with the new management, the neat and attractive appearance of the house, and tables. They speak highly of the cooking, which is done by a colored man who comes well recommended as a skillful caterer and one with abundant experience. Altogether Mr. and Mrs. Ralston have reason to be encouraged with their first day in the Hotel Bradford, and with the outlook for the future. We hope to see them do well.

DeKalb Man Again

Lagrange, Ind., Aug. 6.—The board of education selected F. M. Merica superintendent of the Lagrange public schools for the next year, in the place of C. H. Taylor, who resigned to accept the principalship of the Muskegon (Mich.) schools. Mr. Merica is a graduate of William Taylor college, and the University of Chicago. Sixty-six applications were made for the position. He was for several years principal of the Garrett schools and was very successful. Mr. Merica is a nephew of C. M. Merica, for fourteen years county superintendent of DeKalb county.

CHIEF POKAGON SICK.

Word comes to us from Niles, Mich., tha Chief Simon Pokagon, of the Pottawatomie Indians, is dangerously ill at his home in Lee, VanBuren county. The old man expresses a belief that he is going to leave for the happy hunting grounds.

He is 80 years old, and is the author of "The Redman's Greeting," a booklet printed on the bark of the white birch tree, and was prominent in the exercises of Chicago day at the world's fair.

His father, Leopold Pokagon, sold the land on which Chicago is situated to the whites in 1833 for three cents an acre, and the claim amounting to some $200,000, is still in litigation. His followers now consist of a band of 180. They occupy a narrow strip in the northern part of VanBuren and Berrien counties.

COST OF GOLD.

Good gold mines are profitabl because, as in other lines of profitable basinss, a dollar's worth in value costs less than a dollar to get it. Thus, it is shown by the annual report of one of the largest miuing companies in Colorado that since the organization of the company the average cost of producing $1 in gold is 37 cents

□On the other hand, a general statement proves that the world over, and in all modern times taken together, every dollar of gold in the world has cost over $2, and of every 50,000 gold mines in the world only two have paid. These are statistics which ought to stagger even a person who is getting ready to go to Alaska.

OBITUARY

Lewis Spangler, was born at Canton, Ohio, Dec. 19, 1829, and died at Auburn Junction, Aug. 3 1897, aged 67 years, 7 month and 15 days.

He was the sixth of nine children, of Benjamin and Margaret Priscilla (Weyer) Spangler and survived all these by 8 months, and only two others, besides the parents, reached a greater age than his. His early life until the age 24, was spent on his father's farm near Canton, O. He longed for higher education than the country school afforded and worked for neighboring farmers after work was done at home, to enable him to attended the Canton High School. After finishing the high school he taught country school several winters, hoping to attend college; but being discountenanced in this by his father, he changed his plans and married at the age of 24, and at once moved to DeKalb county, to settle among the ague swamps of Auburn where he and his wife have labored constantly and hard since February 1853, clearing, ditching and cultivating these fields to provide for their children better advantages than their parents had been able to give them, and to secure for themselves a comfortable place to work, rest and die. With what success and unceasing energy he toiled to the last, all are familar. How his health failed as a result of the loss of Adah and others near and dear to him you all are aware, but none can know the anguish of his broken heart. His daily walk and dealing with his fellow men and neighbors are the best index of his life and character. His creed consisted in always acting so as to lead others to believe, with himself, that "An honest man is the noblest work of God." Home was his Heaven and he never lost hope or faith in his chances of finding a home in Heaven after done with this earthly habitation. He died as he had lived, in perfect peace of mind on all things spiritual and never allowed any one to be more liberal minded and tolerant than himself on any questions touching the public welfare or for the good of all.

Though allied with no religious organization and not in sympathy with any secret society, he was more a Mason at heart than he knew, and might have been a minister of the Gospel but for the circumstances that changed his life-work from the college to the farm here, freedom of thought took full possession of his mind and led him away from doctrine and dogma to doing his daily duties as he saw them at home.

The funeral services were conducted from the house Aug. 6, at 2 p. m.; interment took place in Woodlawn cemetery. Rev. J. D. Brosy officiated, assisted by Rev. W. L. Meese.

Wild Camels in the Southwest.

It is probably unknown to many that away down in the southwest there still roams a herd of genuine camels. The year before last one was killed on the southern Pacific railroad. Surveying parties occasionally report seeing the camels, but only at a long range, as the animals are so wild they will not permit near approach. There are also some running wild in Sonora, in Mexico. The Indians of the district say the animals have lived there for years. They are all decendants of the camels brought into this country for the government early in the fifties for use in desert lands of California and Arizona. When the civil war came on and some of the western posts were practically abandoned, the camels wandered away and gradually became wild.

Niagara Falls and 1000 Islands Excursion.

THE CARNIVAL.

Saxby McIntosh has a contract with the Carnival Association to build and fly several mammoth kites during the Carnival. During the exhibition a man will make an ascension, making the fourth ascension ever attempted in the United States. All the kites will be attached to a strong wire one mile in length. This promises to be an interesting feature of our grand Carnival.

THE HOULTON REUNION.

Sept. 4, 1897, is the 64th anniversary of the first settlement in DeKalb county. On that date in 1832, John Houlton put up the first cabin built and occupied in the county. On that farm he lived and died, though the old house has long since passed away and a new one taken its place on almost the same spot. On the 4th of next month, the sons and daughters with their families hold their ninth reunion at the old homestead in the northeast part of Franklin township. And to this will be invited a number of the friends of the family.

The Meese Reunion.

Anyone getting married at the Meese reunion August 19, will save money by it. The ceremony will be free, and Clerk Long will donate the marriage license. Now, here is a chance for some to save enough to buy some extra furniture. The reunion is getting to be famous. Long articles with a picture of Mr Meese, appear in a Pittsburg daily, and also in one in Denver, Colorado.

Farmers' Picnic.

Aug. 12, at Pleasant Lake, will be the great farmers' picnic of the season. Ex-Gov. Lace, the farmer governor of Michigan, will surely be there to make the address, and there will be other good speakers. All take their families and basket dinners. The meeting will be in the fine grove on the lake.

Old Friends.

We were greatly pleased to receive a call last evening, from Mrs. Wheeler who will be better remembered as Miss Frankie Miller, daughter of Conrad Miller. She was accompanied by her sister, Mrs. Abe Grogg who resides west of Waterloo, and Miss Mattie Hoffman, whose home is with her aunt, Mrs. C. C. Hoffman on the old homestead north of town. It will interest our people to hear of Mr. Miller's family. Mr. Miller's home is now in Warrensberg, Mo., where he has lived for some time. He and Mrs. Miller celebrated their golden wedding there five years ago, his age now being over 81. Still they are in fair health, and are here now with Mrs. Wheeler. All went to Canton, Ohio, today where is to be a reunion of four generations of the Miller family. After that, Mr. Miller who is a veteran, will go on to Buffalo to attend the national encampment of the G. A. R. Harley Miller is a practicing physician at Newkirk, Oklahoma. Mrs. Wheeler herself, lives in Kansas City, to which place she went on leaving here eighteen years ago. She taught school or did institute work till her marriage to Dr. W. S. Wheeler two or three years ago. She was a teacher, while yet in this county.

BUTLER.

Libbie Macklin, nee Arford and family are visiting her father and other relatives near here.

Many of the G. A. R. boys are talking of going to the grand encampment at Buffalo.

Stephen Likens living at the Wabash crossing on East North street has been seriously ill. Is slightly improving at this writing.

Leverett Williams an aged resident of Troy township, is suffering from a stroke of paralysis.

Ben Stiefel is about to retire from the saloon business and go into legitimate trade. If all our other saloonists would arrive at the same wise conclusion we would have a decent town and not need two night policemen to keep drunken rowdies quiet enough to allow people to sleep in the down town district.

Many of our farmers have threshed, and wheat is yielding bountifully. This year's crop is estimated to be worth $7500000, more than last year's.

Property continues to change hands rapidly here, and on an up grade of prices.

Many of our people are out of town outing in various places.

J. A. Campbell and wife are thinking of a trip across country in Michigan. They expect to visit Jackson, Lansing Charlotte, Nashville Allegan and Kalamazoo.

Lizzie Champion has returned from a visit to Angola and Pleasant Lake.

HAIL STORM.

Yesterday there was a heavy hail storm east and south of here and a tremendous fall of rain. There has not been as heavy a rain in that section for a long time. Corn was blown flat and considerably injured of course. J. E. Pomeroy reports that out in Wilmington township, where they were holding a grove meeting, the people were driven to their buggies and under them and the wagons, and even then were drenched. The hail was so plenty it could be scooped up by handfuls.

Letter From Germany.

Miss Gertrude Schiffli received a letter Monday, from a friend in Germany, or to be more exact from Alsace, her native country. It was a nice long, and friendly letter, the writer sending regards to the friends here, and especially to the sisters Lena and Rosa. The letter is in German, but will be of interest to their many friends, and she will be pleased to show it to them.

New Wrinkles in Sales.

In the show window of Brown, Culbertson & Boland's store, is a curious specimed of advertising for a good bargain. There are two bicycles: A "$100-Cleveland," on which is marked a diminishing price, "$2 less a day." Today the price stands at $89, to-morrow at $87, the next day at $85 and so on down. The other wheel is a "$75-Road King," that drops $1 a day. To-day it is $45 and tomorrow, $44 and so on. It is quite a scheme.

Big Deal at Wawasse

A correspondent writing from Wawasee to the Indianapolis Journal says: "Col. Eli Lilly has been asked to name his price for his interest and by next year the surroundings at Wawasse may be entirely changed. A party of wealthy Chicago clubmen are looking for a location to build a complete gymnasium and summer athletic headquarters and Wawasee has been selected as an ideal resort. The contemplated enterprise was conceived by Maj. Elliott Durrand, who now owns Yumuri cottage and 1,100 feet of high grounds adjoining Wawasee Inn grounds on the east. He is a life member of the Chicago Atletic club, which now has nearly three thousand members and is the leading organization of its kind in Chicago. The scheme is being pushed by certain rich members of the Chicago Athletic club, together with other men from the Kenwood and Hyde Park clubs. Recently Maj. Durrand brought from Chicago in a private car seventeen club men to inspect the place and all were greatly charmed with the location, pronouncing it ideal."

A Surprise.

Saturday, August 7th, Mr. and Mrs. Isaiah Darrow of Wilmington township were surprised at their home by a large gathering of relatives and friends, about 10 a. m. who came with baskets full of cakes, fruit, and other delicacies. And at about one, p. m. all present were served with a grand dinner, after which all had a good visit It was the 25th anniversary of their wedding. Of these present were, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Richards, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Fulke, of Auburn; Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Metcalf, Miss Bertha Metcalf, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Metcalf and Mrs. D. D. Metcalf of Union township; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Wingard, Mr. and Mrs. James Metcalf, Mrs. Blanch Funk, Mr. and Mrs. Ira Wingard, Mr. and Mrs. C. Cosper, of Wilmington township.

THE COMING INSTITUTE.

County Teacher's Institute begins here next Monday. Besides the great lecture Tuesday evening by Dr Frank Bristol and Wednesday evening by Dr. Hedley, there will be a musical by home talent Monday evening, which is free, and a free lecture under under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. Thursday evening. The best of teachers will be at work all the week, We hope to see many who are not teachers in attendance, both day and evening, as well as all the teachers.

Dr. Frank Bristol, who is to lecture here Tuesday evening of next week, has been chosen as pastor of the Metropolitan M. E. Church, at Washington D. C. This is the church at which President McKinley and family attend. So all who hear him, will have a chance to get acquainted with the president's pastor.

Rebridging Niagara.

(Harper's Weekly.)

The usefulness of the railway suspension-bridge, which was the first great bridge of its kind erected in America, and also the first bridge to span the Niagara chasm, has been ended. Its towers and cables have been removed, and the suspended portion is meeting the same fate. The charters for the erection of this bridge were obtained in Canada and New York in 1846. A means of communication was established between the two cliffs at the site of the bridge by a boy named Horman Walsh, who is still living, and who, while flying his kite allowed it to settle on the Canadian bank. The kite string served to pull a cord across the river, which in turn was followed by a rope, and then by a wire cable. On this wire cable a car was operated as a ferry and to facilitate the building of the bridge. This cableway was probably the first used in America, and was first operated on March 13, 1848. The car, or basket is now treasured as one of the possessions of the Buffalo Historical Society. It is made of strips of band iron, and was designed by T. G. Hullett, of Niagara Falls

Several years were consumed in building the bridge, so that it was not until March 8, 1855, that the first train crossed it. This first bridge was of wood, with stone towers. In 1880 the suspended structure was renewed in steel, and in 1886 the towers gave way to steel successors. This remodeling was done without any interruption to to traffic, and was under the supervision of L. L. Buck, M. Am. Soc. C. E. As compared with the time it took to build the suspension-bridge, it is interesting to note that the arch which has taken its place was erected within a few months, and is a much larger bridge. On its upper deck the new arch has double tracks for steam-cars, while its lower deck is taken up by a trolley track—the first to cross to Canada—carriageways, and walks.

W. J Craig in Hard Luck

Our readers will remember W. J. Craig, at one time owning a controlling interest in the Indianapolis Sentinel. He is now in the hospital of the Soldier's Home at Marion, his health gone, and much of his property lost. He was at one time worth $150,000. He lost his health in the army, and that, with bad investments, has brought him down.

The Meese Reunion

Mr. Meese is busy getting arrangements made for the Reunion next week, Thursday, Aug. 19. He desires to have a meeting of all who are members of the Association, at the Armory in Auburn, on Friday evening of this week, Aug. 13, at 7:30, to help make necessary arrangements. On Monday morning, Aug. 16, he desires all who can assist in making the stand at the court house, and seating the grounds, to come and be ready to assist. A couple or so of teams will be needed for this. And on Wednesday afternoon, Aug. 18, he asks the ladies interested to come in and help to decorate the stand and help get it ready for the next day. Anyone, no matter whether from town or country, who is willing to help he will be glad to see on each of these calls. Inasmuch as this is the only Association of the kind in the whole world, it is hoped all, whether members or not, will work for its perfect success.

Isaac Speer came down from Waterloo yesterday. He brings word that Thomas Hamman, a well known resident of Smithfield, died Sunday evening and is buried today, the funeral being at the U. B. church in Waterloo. His death was quite sudden, as he was in Waterloo Saturday, seeming to be as well as usual. The Waterloo people who have been out on the Coast, are expected home this week. They are J. F. Shuman and wife, Miss Phebe Walker, Mrs. Wm Fisher and Miss Allie Fisher, Mrs. Charles Kelley who has been visiting Cy Kelley, in California, may remain there awhile. Mr. Speer was here on his way to Garrett with his daughter, Flora, now Mrs. E. E. Lollar. Mr. Lollar is one of the teachers at Garrett, but at present is sick in Waterloo.

POWDER IN THE SHEAF.

What was intended to be a sort of "infernal machine" was brought to light by an accident while threshers were at work Friday over in Wilmington township. Tom Lisher was doing the job, when as often happens, a sheaf fell off of the table used by the band cutter. As good luck would have it, this particular sheaf burst open when it struck and exposed a small bundle of cotton batting tied up in wire. Everybody was afraid to tackle the suspicious package, for it might contain dynamite. However, some mustered up courage enough to open it carefully, and inside the package was found a small parcel wrapped in paper, and in this was a small quantity of gunpowder together with a little bundle of matches tied up with small wire. And there were also several loose matches in the package and scattered near by. It is supposed that whoever placed the articles in that sheaf, intended that when it was sent through the threshing machine, it would ignite some or all of the matches and then the powder, and be nearly certain to cause a small blaze in the straw as it went through the separator and then into the straw stack. Had this happened, it would have caused a big loss of property. It is probable that the carelessness of the fellow in tying the sheaf, saved the trouble for even the accident of the falling to the ground would not have saved them, but for the loose tying of that band, which slipped apart and revealed the inner package. We presume no one knows why or by whom it was done, but it was an act of cowardly meanness for which hanging would be the most fitting punishment.

MARRIED AND MATED.

(Coffeyville, Kansas, News.)

"One of those delightful occurrences that the whole neighborhood generally denominates "perfectly lovely," took place at the handsome country residence of Mr. and Mrs. George H. Picker, four miles northeast of Coffeyville, Saturday evening, July 31st, 1897. In response to a most cordial invitation, the writer had the pleasure of participating in the ceremonies attendant upon the marriage of Mr. L. H. Ashby and Miss Jessie Picker, on the above date. The drive from the city to the Picker farm, was exceedingly pleasant. We were met and cordially greeted, as were all the guests by our warm hearted and truly hospitable friends, the hosts of the evening A number of relatives and friends had already gathered, and a brilliant scene was presented on the cool lawn and in the brilliantly lighted parlors. By half past eight o'clock the spacious dwelling was filled with a cheerful company of men and women, from the city and community, who had assembled to do honor to the occasion. At 8:30 o'clock the bridal party entered the large parlor and were met by Rev. A. S. Freed, the officiating minister. Mr. Frank Wisden, as groomsman and Miss Polly Holman, as bridesmaid, led the bridal procession. In the presence of the assembled company, Rev. Freed performed the impressive ceremony and uttered the solemn words that made the "twain one." The groom was a perfect picture of well developed young manhood and the bride was simply lovely as she appeared in her girlhood charms and the beautiful simplicity of well trained yonth. The attractive couple seemed to have been "born for each other" as they earnestly and carefully respond to the service by which their lives were united by the strong bonds of wedlock. Their popularity was attested by the enthusiastic manner with which they were congratulated by every one present. The congratulatory period was followed by an elegant supper that was unexcelled in richness and marked by abundance in every particular. In this respect Mr. and Mrs. Picker showed their generosity in providing, and their skill in entertaining. It was a veritable "wedding feast," and the guests did it ample justice. The fortunate groom is a son of our valued friends, Mr and Mrs. Milton Ashby. He grew from boyhood into manhood in this community, and is one of the best young men in this community The bride is the adopted, but very greatly beloved and cherished daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Picker. She came to their home seven years ago, and won and maintained a warm place in the esteem of all with whom she became acquainted."

Then follow a long list of the guests and gifts, among which we notice prominently Charlie Picker and Don Lawrence, who are out there at present. Geo. Picker himself, we see, gives the young couple a valuable farm.

STOP BUSINESS

And take a few days relaxation from its cares by going on the Niagara Falls and Alexandria Bay low rate, Special train excursion over the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Ry., August 12.

—Thomas Sommers and son, went to Fort Wayne today.

—Mrs. John Bartels is sick at her home in the north part of town.

—Harry Draggoo went up to Jackson, Michigan, today for an outing at one of the lakes.

—Dr. Stamets reports a bouncing big girl born last night to Mr. and Mrs. Albert Rohm near Waterloo.

—Ex-Commissioner O. H. Widney, was a caller today. He wanted to pay his subscription, but as it was already paid ahead, his money was no good.

—Cheap excursion to Niargara Falls and 1000 Islands of the St. Lawrence River August 12 over the Lake Shore Ry. See another column for particulars.

—St. Joe News: J. W. Dills threshed 662 bushels of wheat from 26 acres last week. An average of over 25 bushels to the acre, which is a big yield for an off year.

—Grace Rush returned yesterday from an extende visit with the family of John Henderson in southeast Jackson. She had a grand time and thinks the people down that way are as nice as can be found.

—George Barney is lying quite ill at his home in Spencerville. His friends over the county fear that he may not recover. He has for, many years, been one of the most prominent men in that section.

—M. A. Miller is at the Junction now, and will continue his business of boiler making at that point, as there are some advantages in that location. Mr. Miller is an excellent workman and will get patronage wherever he is.

—The trustee reports to commissioners are now fully, in the last being from Concord, which was reported and examined today. The only serious difficulty so far, is the Waterloo report, which shows more money paid out than they had received.

—Mr. I. O. Bachtel of the Eagle Mills has just put in one of the latest improved double rollers and now makes flour at least three shades whiter than has ever been turned out at his mill. He says wheat is better this year than it has been in the past five years.

—Quite a number of our people went out to see the Epworth boys in their camp last evening. Several of the parents took out little odds and ends of what the boys are learning to call "grub," an act of thoughtfulness at which the lads were greatly pleased.

—Dorsey Pilgrim and wife came back from Michigan several days ago. They had been up in Benzie county, and while there met a number of former DeKalb folks. Mrs. Pilgrim's health was considerably benefited by the stay up there.

—There is a little time for everything; and the time to attend to a cold is when it starts. Don't wait till you have consumption but prevent it by using One Minute Cough Cure, the great remedy for coughs, colds, croup, bronchitis and all throat and lung troubles. Davenport the druggists.

—Bert Robbins, cashier of the Farmers Bank got his finger caught in the door of the bank vault this morning and pinched it "right smart." That comes from being a banker. There may be other objections to the business, but this is the only one we think of just now.

—Bro. Gordon of the Dispatch is still kissing Bro. Weamer of the Gazette, over the garden wall. Members of the same church, members of the same "G. A. R.," members of the same "G. O. P." why can't you be reconciled? Why can't you follow the example of the Garrett Clipper and the Old Reliable COURIER, for the last two weeks? There's a pattern to reform the bloodthirsty.

—The G. A. R. posts of Indiana are endeavoring to have Sunday observed as Memorial day. All the posts of Indianapolis, but one, and a large number throughout the state, have endorsed a resolution which authorizes the department commander to direct that the graves be decorated next year on either the last Sunday in May the first Sunday in June. If a majority of the posts in the state approve the resolution, the department commander will follow the instruction.

—The statement of the Farmers Bank that we publish today, ought to be an object lesson to the windjammer of the Clipper. July 22, that paper in commenting on Cashier Robbins as a possibility for the appointment of treasurer, admitted he would make a capable officer, but objected to him, because his appointment would be such "a 'rosy thing' for the Farmers Bank." But this statement don't look as if the bank needed anything very "rosy." This is the strongest statement ever made by this bank in its history of fifteen years of successful business. It is a splendid showing both as to cash means on hand and the amount of deposits. The cash resources are 45 per cent while the law only requires a resource of 15 per cent. Auburn banks are not in need of the spare cash in the treasurer's office.

—The familiar face of H. A. Lesh will no longer be seen at the Pioneer Hardware store. He has been a courteous and obliging clerk and will be missed by his many friends throughout the county. We understand he will move back to his old home near Canton O. He has the best wishes of the COURIER for his future prosperity, as he will be located at the very root of it

Saturday's Daily.

—Judge Bowersox, of Bryan was in the city today.

—Eli Waratler of Jackson made the COURIER a pleasant business call today.

—Hon. J. D. Leighty was in town yesterday on business. We acknowledge a brief business call.

—It is now believed that the zinc mines of Kansas are about valuable as the gold mines of Alaska.

The COURIER had business calls this forenoon from two of its patrons, Harris Squires and David Row.

—Curt Reed, one of our Garrett friends was over here on a business trip yesterday. He came on his wheel.

—Miss Lottie Fitch of Huntertown, returned home last evening after a week's visit with the family of Dr. Fitch.

—A limited amount of small wood suitable for our engine will be taken now from those subscribers who have made such an arrangement.

—Some of the coaches on the Lake Shore are painted the new olive green color that the company has adopted. They look much prettier than the old yellow ones.

—The opening of the theater season at the Opera House will be Aug. 26, 27, and 28, by the Anna E. Davis Company. They have been here before and were a good company.

—Frank Long, a former Waterloo man, was here to-day. He is located at Cincinnati, but has been at Waterloo for a few weeks, in the interest of the pianos and organs he represents.

—Frank Swarts who has been back here for a time, was in town a time or two this week. He has been for several years at Eldon, Iowa, but is temporarily at Waterloo again, his former home.

—Dr. Vesta Swarts reports Mrs. Rother quite sick at the home of her daughter Mrs. Frank Rose. Mr. Buckmaster, at the north end of town has also been sick. Both patients are improving under her treatment.

—Miles Baxter came home last evening from Hamilton, where he spent two or three days with the Auburn people who are camping out at Cold Springs. He says all are well and enjoying themselves.

—The Brandon boys are threshing for Sam Gibson today. Alva who owns the outfit is able to sit up some now, though he is suffering considerably from his burns. The boys threshed over 1300 bushels of oats and wheat yesterday.

—Dr. Baxter brought in some ripe pears yesterday, August 5, from Alexander Forsythe's, in Jackson, the first we have seen of home grown this year. He says Mr. Forsythe has a good many of them. But we have been told the pear crop will be short this year.

—Steuben Republican:—Last week Editor George W. Gordon, of the Auburn Dispatch, intimated that a certain Auburn editor had been at a prayer meeting. This caused James A. Barns and John C. Lochner, of the DAILY COURIER, to assert that they were prepared to prove an alibi. That leaves Bro. R. H. Weamer, of the Gazette, to shoulder the balme of being the only religious editor in the town. He should rise up and say, "Why persecutest thou me?"

—The Dispatch blames the democrats for "holding up the Dingley bill in the senate." It is quite a compliment if this is true, when there were only 30 democrats to 40 republicans. But there is consolation in knowing that the 30 were fighting for low prices for what the people have to buy, while the 40 republicans were fighting for high prices for what the people have to buy. Let the common people, now compare the future prices of necessaries with the past prices.

—A great many people watched the big kite last eveniug until the gathering darkness made it invisible. It was the one that Saxby McIntosh has been sending up. In this case he allowed it to reach that point where it could be seen close by the moon. In fact a part of the time it was over the bright face of the moon moving about slightly and giving it something of the appearance of the transit of Venus over the sun's face. It is quite a queer sight. We suppose the string used was at least 2,500 feet long.

—Very few people have an idea of different kinds of merchandise an ocean steamship carries from the United States to foreign ports. The other day the Johnston Line steamer "Vedamore" loaded at the Locust Point docks of the B. & O., at Baltimore, 66 cars of lumber, 4 of starch, 19 of oil cake, 6 of provisions, 1 of organs, 1 of flour, 22 of tobacco, 2 of wire, 3 of sugar, 13 of fresh meat, 20 of sheep or 1699 head, 45 of cattle or 888 head, 3 of lead, 1 of copper, 4 of merchandise and 161 of grain, making a total of 371 cars oads.

—A Lake county farmer read an advertisement for a "flea killer." He answered it with a dollar bill and received a wooden mallet and a block of wood numbered 1 and 2. The directions read: "Place the flea upon No. 2 and hit him with No. 1. If that does not kill him, hit him again."

—Many Auburn people helped swell the crowd at Robinson park Sunday And from the country south and east of town there were also many present. No time since the celebration on July 5, has there been so large a crowd at the park as on yesterday. The special feature of the day was the Sangerbund meeting. Nearly all members of this organization were out from Fort Wayne. Then there was an excursion from Toledo, and altogether the park was well filled with humanity.

Monday's Daily.

—Miss Lottie Muchlfeith of Fort Wayne is the guest of Miss Cecilia Girardot.

—Remember the county teachers' institute begins here next Monday, August, 16.

—Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Schiffli, of Smithfield, were down here yesterday to visit their daughters who live here, Gertrude, Lena and Rosa.

—But few farmers throughout the country are complying with the law in regard to keeping the weeds cut at the side of the road along the entire frontage of their property. And even in town some neglect this matter.

Saturday eve. our streets were jammed full of people who were not only here to listen to the band but to trade and for pleasure. There were large numbers of carriages from town and country, as well as from Waterloo and Garcett.

—Capt. Otto has just added to his stock of war relics a big 20-pound carrot shell, such as he was very familiar with in the war. He served in the artillery, and used that very kind of guns. It can be seen at any time as it stands on his porch.

—Mrs. Violet Bowman, will be here several days this week visiting the family of her father, Rev. W. D. Trover. She was at one time a teacher in our schools and has many friends who will no doubt be pleased to call on her while she is here. Her home is near Chicago.

—Guard W. A. Sutton, who accompanied Messrs. Borst, Dills and Sawvel back here has been dangerously ill, but is reported a little better. Mr. Sutton is suffering with a carbuncle or boil upon the back of his head and neck, from which there was, for a time, some doubts of his recovery.

—Mrs. Howard Trover and little son came today to spend a few days visiting Mr. Trover's people here. She had been visiting at her old home at Seville, Ohio. At the close of the visit here, Rev. W. D. Trover will accompany her on her return to her home which is in Oregon.

—Do you remember the adage that "Prevention is better than cure?" This is just the time of the year to exercise a little care to prevent sickness. Go get some Simmons Liver Regulator, liquid or powder, and take it to rid your body of any poison and tone up the system. "It is a safe and reliable medicine, and a great preventive of sickness."—Rev. Jas. Rollins, Fairfield Va.

—The COURIER is pleased to announce the arrival this morning of a ten pound boy at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Olds on north Jackson-st. In behalf of their many friends we extend the warmest congratulation to Mr. Olds and his estimable wife. It is needto say that the parents are happy, for now they have a girl and boy. Dr. Vesta M. W. Swarts was in attendance.

—The town has caused the Seventh street bridge to be closed as it has been condemned. To repair the bridge would mean an outlay of several hundred dollars and then it would only be a few years till a new bridge would have to be built. The members of the town board and the commissioners held a meeting last week to consult each other concerning this bridge. But little was accomplished at this meeting. They decided to meet later at the bridge, but on this occasion the commissioners failed to appear. Hence the town ordered the marshal to close up the bridge so far as vehicles are concerned.

—The two lectures next week at the institute are likely to be popular, John Shuman, of Waterloo, writes from the Pacific coast, to have seats reserved for him at Mr. Bristol's lecture Tuesday evening. And there are others that are sending word to keep seats for Mr. Hedly's lecture Wednesday evening. In both cases, it is from men who have heard them already.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen. Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

Japan has an income tax. If a taxpayer protests that he is rated too high by the officials he is thrust into a dark room and told to "think it over carefully." Sometimes a man stays there twenty-four hours, buried in darkness and thought, and finally he is apt to agree with the officials that he is richer than he had at first supposed.

A church society of a town up in Connecticut has a favorite form of entertainment called a chronothanatolethron. It is a show in which personages of other times appear in the costumes in which they are supposed to have lived. The advantage of it all is that in the name you get more than value for your money, even if the effort is not a success otherwise.

About $70,000 a year has been saved by the State of Virginia through a reform in regulating criminal expenses. One change which results in a large saving is that which provides that convicts sentenced to the penitentiary shall be sent for by the authorities of that institution, rather than escorted to it by sheriffs or police in the various counties and cities.

There is only one naval power of the first rank—Great Britain. The French navy is barely half as strong, and France must consequently be classified as a sea power of the second rank. As none of the other naval powers is equal to France, they are placed in the third class, which includes Russia, the United States, the Japanese, the Italian and the German fleets.

In France it is not necessary to have a license to keep a dog, but, what amounts to practically the same thing, it is necessary to pay a dog tax, which varies according to the species—a watch dog paying less than a fancy poodle, and so forth. From the returns of this tax it is learned that there are 2,900,000 dogs in France, which bring in an annual revenue of 8,800,000 francs.

EXCUSABLE STEALING.

Could Hardly Blame This Man for Taking a Feather Bed.

An attache of one of the departments who is of a scientific turn of mind was spending a portion of his leave of absence gathering geological specimens in a rather remote region, says a Washington exchange. He had made previous visits and was well known to the inhabitants.

"What has become of Jake Gorby?" he inquired of one of them.

"What's become of Jake Gorby? I dunno what's become o' Jake."

"He hasn't gone to work, has he?"

"Mebbe so. Jake left the township Jake did."

"Well, I guess it is a good riddance."

"It's so considered."

"Did he go of his own free will?"

"Yes. He jis' seemed to take a notion to go an' when he got started there wasn't no stoppin' him."

"It's a pity he was so lazy. He seemed a harmless sort of fellow."

"Harmless! Wal, idees about things differs. If you call lyin' an' thievin' an' gittin' drunk harmless, Jake was a reg'lar angel."

"I hadn't heard that he was in the habit of stealing."

"I don't like to say nothin' about a man behind his back; but the last thing Jake Gorby done was to walk off with the Widder Darby's feather bed."

"The scoundrel! I have heard of stealing pennies from blind men, but to rob a poor widow of her feather bed seems the very depth of heartlessness!"

"No; 'tain't quite right to say that. I don't want to do nobody an injustice. Jake was guilty of a lot of meanness, but I dunno's we ought to lay the feather bed up agin him. You see, the feathers was stuck onto Jake with tar, an' I mus' say the Widder Darby ruther seemed to enjoy gettin' rid of her property thet way."

Unconscious Humor.

Debate in the British House of Commons is ordinarily conducted in a low, conversational tone. Not long ago a burly military member, who was not accustomed to public speaking, delivered an excited harangue on the exile of the Guards to Gibraltar, and nearly emptied the House by the violence of his shouting.

It was like the breath of a roaring blast furnace, and every word seemed to crackle with explosive energy. Members in the benches were at first amused by his unnecessary fervor, and finally wearied by his noisy, ear-splitting declamation. Drawing himself up to his full height, and speaking in tones which were fairly deafening, he shouted:

"If I may be allowed to whisper in the ear of the Government——"

He was not allowed to go on. The members burst into a loud guffaw of laughter, which drowned his voice and seriously disconcerted him. When it was perceived from his look of astonishment that he was unconscious of the real cause of amusement, they laughed again, even more heartily than they had laughed before.

Unconscious humor is not always appreciated. When Herr Rickhert, not long ago, turned contemptuously toward the German ministers and cried out, "We hear nothing upon the ministerial benches, nothing but profound silence!" no member moved a muscle, and nobody laughed; yet whispering in thunder tones was scarcely more ludicrous than hearing profound silence.

O'Connell's most famous Irish bull was delivered at a public meeting in London, and passed unnoticed until the speech was in print. He asserted that the birth-rate in Dublin had diminished at the rate of five thousand a year for four years, and added, solemnly:

"I charge the British Government with the murder of those twenty thousand infants who never were born!"

Nothing could have been more absurd, yet there was not a sign of appreciation from the audience that the great orator had been unconsciously funny.

Comparison of Navies.

According to the latest official report, the Japanese navy consists of two first-class battleships and six projected; one second-class battleship, captured from the Chinese; five armored cruisers, ten second-class cruisers and six building or projected, and seventeen vessels which may be ranked as third-class cruisers. Spain has one first-class battleship and one building, one port-defense ship, eight first-class cruisers and three building, six second-class cruisers, one building; ninety-nine third-class cruisers, three building; thirty-six first-class torpedo craft, two building, and two second-class torpedo craft. The United States has twelve sea-going battleships, two armored cruisers in commission, one ram, six double-turret monitors, fourteen single-turret monitors, besides a considerable number of other vessels.

Poisonous Perspiration.

Human perspiration, if injected into dogs or rabbits, acts like a deadly poison, according to M. Arloing's experiments. Perspiration secreted during hard muscular work has more toxic power than the ordinary kind, while that obtained from subjects whose secretion has been checked by cold is very poisonous.

The Bombay Plague.

In Bombay the plague is carrying off over 500 persons a week still. It is now officially declared that the plague exists in Jiddah, the port from which Mecca is reached.

HINTS ABOUT DIVING.

HOW TO ACQUIRE ABILITY IN THIS RECREATION.

Rules to Be Followed When Rescuing One Who Cannot Swim—A Knowledge of This Art Is Essential to Life Saving.

Saving Persons from Drowning.

The whole secret of making a dive at the first attempt is to have plenty of confidence. Beginners, as a rule, are so nervous that they start to make a dive, but change their mind before reaching the water and turn it into an awkward tumble. It has often been found a good plan for two persons to hold a towel out in front of the diver to show how high he must throw his legs in order to make a clean dive.

The low dive is about three feet from the surface. With the hands over the head take a deep respiration, and in leaving the solid surface throw the feet above the level of the head. In entering the water turn the hands upward and you come to the surface. The prettiest high dive is made when you spring far out, the body almost in a horizontal level, and allow the head and arms to decline toward the water. In making a very high dive the performer changes the position of his body by giving a peculiar quirk to his legs, which has the effect of shooting him into the water head first.

Headers are taken by running and jumping off a springboard. The body is straightened out as in a high dive, and there is but little splash on entering the water. Diving feet first and the sitting jump, with hands clasped over knees, are also sometimes practiced. Flippers are single or double somersaults make backwards or forwards from a board or solid surface.

The plunge differs from the dive in that the former is made head first from a firm take-off, the body being entirely free from spring. You simply plunge into the water and rise to the surface by the guiding of the hands, which are held out in front as in a dive. While in the water the body is perfectly motionless. Good plungers can glide seventy-five feet in this way with little difficulty.

Diving is absolutely essential in life saving, it being necessary frequently to dive for a drowning person. It is also essential to know just how to approach and grip a drowning person and how to release oneself from their oft-times fatal clutch. The following method is nearly about that adopted by the life-saving service of England and the United States. Experience has proved it to be most effective, and it is to be regretted that the directions are not more generally known. Briefly they are as follows:

If held by the wrists take a deep breath and turn both arms simultaneously against the drowning person's thumbs outward, and attempt to bring your arms at right angles to your own body. This will dislocate his thumbs and compel him to let go. If clutched around the neck, bring the knees between the two bodies, placing them against the lower part of your opponent's chest. Then give a quick and sudden push, straightening out your legs at the same time, and throw the whole weight of your body backward. This will press the air out of his chest as well as push him off, no matter how tightly he may be holding.

If clutched around the body and arms, lean well over your opponent and throw one arm in an upward direction at right angles to the body, or draw one arm up between your body and his. Then, with thumb and forefinger, catch his nose and pinch the nostrils close, at the same time placing the palm of the hand on his chin and push outwards. This will cause him to open his mouth for breathing purposes, and he, being under, will swallow water. Choking ensues, and not only is the rescuer let go, but the other is left so helpless that he is completely under control. If clutched high around the body and arms, lean well over and turn one arm in an outward and upward direction, which move will free the arm. You then proceed as in the other case.

About the easiest way of towing a person to shore is to grasp him by the clothes or under the arm and swim on your back with a fast side stroke. If you swim better with the broad stroke, turn over on your face and let the drowning one lie on his back and put his arms about your neck. Or, if you are very strong, hold him up with one arm and swim with the other.

Patient Endurance.

Many think patient endurance is a virtue that outweighs all others in value. There never was a greater error.

Endurance is often so contemptible as to rank with cowardice. Evil is the enemy of progress in manners and morals. The endurance which tolerates evil is a defect worthy of the strongest effort to overcome it.

It takes courage, time, patience, faith to take a stand and make a fight against evil, whether the evil is threatening the nation's prosperity or individual rights and comforts.

We have in all communities laws that exist for the protection of the law-abiding citizens—his protection not only of life and property, but of comfort, of health, of morals.

The laws are for the whole community, for all ages and each sex. They are constantly violated. Why? Because endurance, not in the guise of virtue, but in its common every-day garb of weakness, indifference and laziness, permits these violations, refusing to see the moral degradation that ensues.

Righteous wrath that would express itself openly would put down many evils in their first stages, which, endured, create and strengthen themselves and allied evils, compelling the expenditure of men, money and years of time to overcome.

A Timely Rebuke.

A lady, riding on a car on the New York Central Railway, was disturbed in her reading by the conversation of two gentlemen, occupying the seat just before her. One of them seemed to be a student of some college, on his way home for a vacation. He used much profane language, greatly to the lady's annoyance.

She thought she would rebuke him, and, on begging pardon for interrupting, asked the young student if he had studied the languages.

"Yes, madam, I have mastered the languages quite well."

"Do you read and speak Hebrew?"

"Quite fluently."

"Will you be so kind as to do me a small favor?"

"With great pleasure. I am at your service."

"Will you be so kind as to do your swearing in Hebrew?"

The lady was not annoyed any more by the ungentlemanly language of this would-be gentleman.

Present Decision.

If, instead of being influenced by a hazy and undefined feeling, we bring clear thought to bear upon it, we shall find that the only supreme and final test of conduct must ever be the convictions which we hold at the time.

Not whether any other person or the whole world approve or disapprove, nor even whether we may or may not continue in future years to maintain them ourselves, must be our question, but whether at the present moment we believe in our inmost heart that such a course is the true and right one to pursue.

If this be not our guide—if any other voice, opposing that of conscience, be obeyed—then we act in defiance of our own moral sense, which is plainly the snapping of character.

Uncrowned Rulers.

There are many reigning sovereigns at the present time who have never taken the trouble to be crowned. Among them may be mentioned the German Emperor, the King of Italy, the King of Spain, the Queen of Holland, the King of Bavaria, the King of Saxony.

Cheering Indication.

The fact that $14,225, the largest amount ever paid at one time into the "conscience fund" of the United States Government, has been received within the last year, is a cheering indication that some men are growing better instead of worse.

When some young men fall in love, they show the first symptoms by investing heavily in perfumery.

IN STATES SHOWN BLACK BICYCLES ARE CARRIED AS BAGGAGE

—New York World.

HE WAS A BRILLLANT CLERK.

How a Virginia Prodigy Gave a 10 Per Cent. Discount.

I once had a promising bud of genius in my store down on the James River, said a Virginian to a reporter. I keep a general store there, and this bud, that promised to bloom into seven kinds of a loo loo flower, came to me from the far end of Prince George County, on the introduction of a friend of mine and his, who said as he wasn't good for anything else, perhaps he might be made handy in a store. I took him, just to be accommodating, of course, and promised to give him a chance to rise.

He was about 19 years old, and wrote poetry between times, so I put him to sweeping out as a starter. He could sweep well enough, and after a week I put him to doing the chores, and advised him to study the stock while he was resting.

After about six weeks of this kind of training I concluded he knew enough to take charge of my scrap counter, which was a counter where I put all my old stuff about every sixty days, with the most of it marked in big figures and with the additional information to those looking for bargains that there would be 10 off for cash.

Trade was lively the morning I put him at it, and he was doing as well, if not better, than the more experienced clerks, for I noticed several people getting around his way and getting out pretty quick with what they had bought. I didn't think much about the whys and wherefores until the young fellow came to me at the desk with a suit of clothes in his hands to ask me to explain something. The suit bore a large white card inscribed with a big black "$8."

"I don't quite understand this," says he. "The others I sold were marked $10.75, $11.50, $11.98, $12 and $12.48, and it was easy enough to calculate what 10 off would be and sell them for 75 cents, $1.50, $1.98, $2 and $2.48, but I'll be doggoned if I see how you're going to throw $10 off of an $8 suit, unless you want to give the customer $2, and I reckon you ain't that liberal, even at the scrap counter, are you?"

It mighty near gave me a spasm, that did, concluded the gentleman, and I put another clerk at my discount counter p. d. q.

A HEART OF BRICK.

Curious Method of Prolonging the Life of an Elm Tree.

One of the oldest sights of New Brunswick, N. J., is the elm tree in front of John E. Elmendorf's house, on Albany street. Mr. Elmendorf had the tree lined with brick to keep it alive.

The tree is said to be nearly 200 years old. Several years ago insects attacked it and hollowed its heart out. Then at a Fourth of July celebration a spark set fire to the dry interior and destroyed the greater part of what was left. Only the bark on one side and a little of the wood remained. At every wind the tree shook and seemed in imminent danger of falling. Mr. Elmendorf had given up all hope of saving the elm, when his wife proposed that they wall it up inside. Mr. Elmendorf set a mason at work lining the elm with brick. Fully one-half of the tree is now solid masonry, and it is in a flourishing condition. The side with the bricks faces the street, and is easily seen. It is two blocks from the Albany street bridge. The tree is known as the freak tree and the brick tree.—New York Sun.

Only Carnivorous Horse.

The most extraordinary appetite known in a horse belongs to Billy, a handsome bay owned by A. Decourtieux & Son, the butchers of the Pacific fruit market. Horses are frequently known to show a strong liking for sugar, and instances are related where they would drink beer, but who ever saw a horse that was fond of meat and fish?

Billy's duties are to draw the firm's delivery wagon and his stand is on Merchant street in front of the shop. Here he is often on exhibition, eating with an apparent relish steak, liver, tripe and, in short, almost any variety of meat handed him. Sometimes, after having had his fill of oats and hay, he refuses to munch meat, but this seldom occurs.

Billy's appetite developed several months ago. No one knew of it until one day he was seen to reach into a butcher cart that was tied just ahead of him and calmly begin eating a steak. After that he was fed often with the firm's wares, and many a bet has been won and lost on his appetite.

The horse formerly varied his carnal meals by purloining fish, but he was cured in a manner that was ludicrous to the spectators, but very painful for the equine phenomenon. He reached into a fish wagon one day when his olfactories detected the odor of his favorite smelt, but an active and belligerent crab took offense at the intrusion and promptly fastened to his lower lip. Billy shook his head frantically and whinnied in pain, but the crustacean held on until he was crushed by being banged against the side of the wagon. Since then the horse has kept clear of fish.—San Francisco Call.

A Congressman's Horseshoes.

Congressman Russell, of Connecticut, has something like a bushel of horseshoes which he has picked up. Six or eight fine specimens ornament or disfigure his apartments at the Hamilton in Washington, and the remainder of the bushel, except a few, are stored in an old box at his home in Killingly. The few which are especially reserved from the collection in the box are hanging on the port waist oar which Russell used to pull a winning stroke with in the old six-oared crew of Yale College in '73.

Doctors and Patients.

A physician with a large practice sees strange sights—some humorous, some pitiful, and some irritating. Sir Benjamin W. Richardson, commenting on the fact that these singular sights tend to produce in the doctor's mind the feeling "All things are alike to all," says he once surprised a bishop by saying that the writer of Ecclesiastes must have been a doctor.

Once a woman who kept a fuel store brought her husband to Doctor Richardson in a little cart with his body covered with small coal, under the idea that by this means she was keeping him warm. Another woman, to whom he prescribed an ether mixture, therefore volatile, first made it warm, in order that it might be agreeable to take.

He was called in the early days of his London practice to visit a servant in a large house, and overheard the mistress ask the housekeeper, "What sort of a man is he, and how did he come? Did he drive?"

"I think you'll like him ma'am," replied the housekeeper; "but, poor man! he is only a walking doctor yet."

People made a distinction between the walking and the driving doctor in former days. A physician with a large paying practice used to ride in a chariot which cost three hundred guineas. Now people do not care if a doctor comes in a landau, or a brougham, or a cab, provided he comes quickly.

The old physician was known by everybody as a doctor. He wore a long, broad-tailed coat, kneebreeches, Hessian boots, a frilled shirt with ruffles at the wrists, and a large white cravat of the finest lawn. He carried a cane with a perforated box at the top, which held camphor or some other smelling substance. When he was called to a consultation, he expected to find a table spread with wine-glasses, a decanter of brandy and a bottle of wine.

Why Savages Turn in Their Toes.

In the first place, the foot naturally takes that position when it has never been confined by boots or the ankle distorted by high heels. Convenience is also on the side of the natural position of the foot in the case of the savage, for he has to do much walking through long grass and undergrowth in forests. Consequently his progress would be much impeded if he turned his toes out to catch these obstacles instead of brushing them aside and outward, as he now does. Lastly, the savage uses his foot much more as a help to his hands than we do, and it is obvious that in doing this he must turn his toes in.

About Change of Life.

"I suffered for eight years and could find no permanent relief until one year ago. My trouble was Change of Life. I tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and relief came almost immediately. I have taken two bottles of the Vegetable Compound, three boxes of Pills and have also used the Sanative Wash, and must say, I have never had anything help so much, I have better health than I ever had in my life. I feel like a new person, perfectly strong. I give the Compound all the credit. I have recommended it to several of my friends who are using it with like results. It has cured me of several female diseases. I would not do without Mrs. Pinkham's remedies for anything. There is no need of so much female suffering. Her remedies are a sure cure."—MRS. CALLING THE COWS.

I shall never hear her more
By the reedy Lindis shore,
"Cusha! Cusha! Cusha!" calling,
Ere the early dews be falling;
I shall never hear her song,
"Cusha! Cusha!" all along,
Where the sunny Lindis floweth,
Goeth, floweth;
From the meads where melick groweth,
When the water winding down
Onward floweth to the town.
I shall never see her more
Where the reeds and rushes quiver,
Shiver, quiver;
Stand beside the sobbing river,
Sobbing, throbbing, in its falling
To the sandy, lonesome shore;
I shall never hear her calling,
"Leave your meadow grasses mellow,
Mellow, mellow;
Quit your cowslips, cowslips, come uppe,
Lightfoot;
Quit your pipes of parsley hollow,
Hollow, hollow;
Come uppe, Lightfoot, rise and follow;
Lightfoot, Whitefoot,
From your clovers lift the head;
Come uppe, Jetty, follow, follow,
Jetty, to the milking shed."

THE BABY AND THE WHARF RAT.

THE announcement in the daily newspapers several years ago that the 3-year-old daughter of Millionaire George Ainsley had been kidnapped caused not only intense excitement, but wild consternation throughout the city. Thousands of parents were concerned for days about their little ones, and elder brothers and sisters received strict instructions to keep watchful eyes on the younger members of the families, while nurse maids were sternly admonished to never leave their charges for an instant.

This state of affairs continued for a few days; then interest in the case waned. No more children were stolen, and newspaper reporters were unable to find any further clews. The toilers of the press labored strenuously with the police, but results were not satisfactory, and finally the men who had spent days and nights endeavoring to find some trace of the child were called to other assignments, while all but one of the detectives, who had been instructed to follow up the case, were ordered to the investigation of other criminal matters.

Baby Ainsley had been kidnapped in the public park. The nurse had taken her for an outing on a pleasant afternoon and had sauntered to a bower-like retreat, where, beneath the shade of spreading shrubbery, she had rested for a time on a settee as she watched the little girl, who, with childish abandon, played among the bushes and flowers. An acquaintance happened by, and in the conversation that ensued the nurse forgot the baby for a few minutes. When she thought of her charge again there was no answer to her call. A hasty search followed immediately, but the little one could not be found; and no one about the park remembered having seen her. The nurse hunted despairingly for half an hour, and then informed the policeman whose beat was on the park. In twenty minutes dozens of officers and detectives were searching the city, and by supper time thousands of citizens had learned of the mysterious affair.

During the week following it was ascertained that a new-comer to the Italian colony had been seen on the day of the kidnapping, in the district given up to the sons and daughters of the sunny peninsula, leading a little girl by the hand. He was unknown to the law-abiding residents of that section except by the name of Giovanni. Where he came from, or with whom he lived, could not be learned, as he had been noticed about the district only three or four days, and was always alone. The girl apparently went along with him willingly, and two of the persons who called at police headquarters stated that they heard snatches of his conversation, in substance that if she would be a good girl he would take her to see a lot of pretty birds and some monkeys. So the baby blindly trusted him.

The police became satisfied that the child was hidden somewhere in the Italian section of the city and searched every living place they could learn of, but her whereabouts were not brought to light, and even the reward offered by the heart-broken father for her recovery proved unavailing, although it was afterward ascertained that Giovanni would have been glad to return the child for that sum had he not been in fear of imprisonment for a long term on account of the intense feeling his deed had aroused.

So the father and mother suffered, waiting anxiously day by day for some word of hope, in anguish lest news of the baby's death reached them, yet daily praying that she be taken from earth rather than be brought up in a life of sorrow and shame.

Dennis O'Donnell, "12-year-old by de grace o' God," first attracted my attention in a police station. He, with five other street Arabs, had been caught playing "craps" in Pie alley and had been brought before the sergeant by two officers. I was in the captain's office, and we smiled as we saw the ragamuffins arranged in line before the desk and heard them tearfully explaining that "we wusn't doin' a t'ing," but paid little further attention to them until we heard an angry voice exclaim: "Youse t'ink becuz deyse holes in me clothes I don't luv me mudder."

So original a remark from a street Arab called us at once into the guard room. We wanted to see what manner of boy it was who lived in the street and yet was proud of loving his mother, and we found Dennis with his hands clenched tightly and ready to fight at once with one of the big blue-coated men who had arrested him. The captain demanded an explanation from the officers for the peculiar situation, and was told that Dennis had tearfully pleaded to be allowed to depart in peace because his mother would feel badly to learn that he was in trouble, when the officer tauntingly replied: "You're a nice boy to talk about your mother."

That stirred all the antagonism in the lad's nature and he immediately answered back and prepared to administer punishment to the man who, he thought, had offered insult to Mrs. O'Donnell.

The argument proved effectual with the captain, and Dennis was granted a privilege not extended to the other boys. They were sent to cells for a few hours, where they might repent, but he was asked in to the captain's office to tell why he played "craps" in Pie alley if he loved his mother.

And his explanation was that he did it to get a few more cents than he could earn by selling papers because they needed money to live.

"But," asked the captain, "don't you lose as much as you make?"

"Indade I don't," answered the lad, proudly, "becuz I know how to cheat de oder boys."

No, he did not believe this to be wrong, and I am sure he was honest in his opinion. The theory of the education received by boys of the street is not based on the principle that it is wrong to sin, but that it is to be caught. They are brought up to obey the law through fear of it, not because they are benefited by its observance.

So Dennis saw no harm in cheating at "craps" so long as the other boys were not aware of his methods; and I am quite certain that if he did have any moral doubts on this point, the thought that his mother needed money made a virtue of it.

During the half hour in the captain's office, Dennis gave us some information about his mother and his life. Mrs. O'Donnell and Dennis lived alone in one room on the top floor of a tenement house in Stone alley, which led from Foot street court, that, in turn, branching from Foot street, one of the principal avenues in the district of the poor.

The captain mildly lectured the youth and allowed him to depart, and it was several days before I could gratify the curiosity I felt in regard to the peculiar lad; but in the weeks following, when I had gained "Dinny's" confidence, and become his friend, as well as, I hope, in some respects his benefactor, he told me much of his life.

Mrs. O'Donnell found it difficult to get bread enough for "Dinny" and herself. She was a good woman, but hard work, seasoned plentifully with sorrow, had calloused her heart against mankind, and in time she came to care only for her boy.

As for "Dinny," he recognized no person on earth worthy of consideration except his mother. His companions on the street were only for fun, rough or tender, as they would stand it; the priest was good to him, but was to be shunned if possible; the police were his natural enemies, and school teachers he regarded as parts of the penance the priest imposed at every opportunity.

Blame not the boy. His mother's mind was so taken up with the struggle for existence that her moral sense was unquestionably blunted, and if, in the hard life imposed on her, she could even remember the love for her child, it was an unlooked-for virtue. She found no time and little opportunity for teaching the good in life, even if she thought there was any. His lessons of existence were learned from the boys on the streets, yet down in the heart of the lad there was good, and it only needed opportunity to show itself. He and his mother were creatures of circumstances; they were neither bad nor malicious. He would do anything his mother desired, and she felt that she only lived for him.

Dennis sold newspapers for a living. Between editions he blacked shoes. On rainy days he turned his hand to anything that came along; it mattered little what, if there were a few cents for him; either "craps," or holding horses, or running errands. With nothing to do, he "traveled with his gang," and evenings were spent with a crowd of boys, sometimes not as the police allowed. Summer evenings generally found them about the wharves, not infrequently enjoying the fruits of carefully-planned raids in the little dens which they appropriated and arranged beneath the piers among the piling. These dens were made simply, rough shacks being covered with a few boards which were fastened to the supports of the wharves.

"Dinny's" favorite hang-out was the quarters of the Young Cosmopolitan Associates; or, as it was indicated in rude letters on a board in the den, "Yung Kosmepolitens Assoshates." This was a most select organization, composed of boys ranging in age from 9 to 15 years. To become a member each one must have shown himself a hero, as they termed it. This was not by rescuing a person from death, or doing any other brave act, but by defying the police or doing some deed of a peculiarly dare-devil character. Stealing enough cigars, cigarettes, candy or fruit to supply all the members entitled a boy to enrollment on the list of membership.

The quarters of the "assoshates" were situated about six feet below the level of an avenue running along the water front. One side of the den was formed by a heavy retaining wall, which prevented the waters of the harbor from undermining the street, while the others were made from drift wood and planks stolen from convenient lumber yards. The roof was the floor of a small shed occupied by an Italian fruit dealer, located at the street end of the wharf, which was one of the largest in the city, where clipper ships to and from the East Indies and Australia were wont to load and discharge cargoes. The den was fitted with a few kegs and boxes for seats, and was stored with relics of past raids.

To the difficulty in entering the den was due principally its immunity from discovery. The boys, after getting on the wharf property through a hole in the high fence, where they had removed a board, has to go to one side of the pier and climb down the retaining wall of the street, swinging underneath the wooden flooring as they descended. To go straight down would result in immersion in the dock, where the water was deep enough to allow the big ships to be towed almost to the street wall, but the channel did not extend beneath the wharf, and about ten feet from the water the oozy mud was encountered. Climbing down these stones, and clinging like flies to a wall, was not without an element of danger, but the lads became accustomed to it, and the fact that it required practice to accomplish the feat successfully gave an added sense of security to the retreat. Once in the mud, the boys had to walk a distance of about 150 feet before reaching the shack.

It happened on the 12th day after the kidnaping of Millionaire Ainsley's little girl, that a grand raid, which had been planned several days before, was to occur. The object was the looting of a small confectionery and tobacco store situated on one of the main streets of the district of the poor, at the corner of a small alley, lined with tenement houses. The building in which the store was located was an old one, and there was a window looking into the alley about ten feet back from the street. The frame of this window was very weak, and one of the boys happened to discover that but little force was required to push it in. He communicated this fact to the "assoshates," and the raid was arranged, a committee of eight being appointed by the president to secure the goods contained in the establishment which were most desired by the lads.

There was nothing for the eight raiders to fear except for the presence of a strolling policeman, so three of them were selected to stand guard at the entrance of the alley and see that none came near and surprised the others at their work. By 11 o'clock that night the arrangements were completed and a few minutes after that hour the eight met at the opening to the narrow way and five proceeded to the window, which gave way easily to their combined efforts. Two of the number were then hoisted over the sill and commenced handing the goods out to their companions.

How it was I cannot tell, but from some cause the keen eyes of the three sentinels failed to detect the form of a policeman slowly approaching the alley entrance in the shadow of the buildings, until he was almost on them. Perhaps the officer was suspicious; perhaps not. At any rate, when the wild cry, "Cheese it, de cop," rang out on the night air he surmised that there must be trouble in the alley, and hastened to it. Ten seconds later five madly running boys rushed out just ahead of him, the two inside the store having been gotten out in safety, with the assistance of their three companions. Wildly the five scampered toward the wharf and their shelter, and swiftly the policeman followed them. "Dinny," who had been in the store, and who was the speediest runner, was well in the lead, and the other four were bunched together. As the boys reached the water front avenue another officer heard his colleague's call for assistance, and he, too, joined in the chase. Down by the wharf the pursued and pursuers swept, until the hole in the fence which gave entrance to the wharf was reached, and there the young thieves jumped through, the officers close at hand as they arrived, and narrowly missing the last boy's clothing when a speculative grab was made. The policemen were balked until they could pull another picket from the fence, that there might be sufficient space for them to get through after the scared party of "assoshates." They worked quickly, however, and were in time to see portions of the frightened lads disappearing behind the edge of the wharf. Down in the mud the officers went after them, and by flashes of light through the cracks between planks, they traced the boys directly to the entrance of the shack.

Five lively "wharf rats," however, proved to be more than two officers could handle, especially as three of them had crawled to the top of the retaining wall. So the blue-coats decided to take four of them to the street, and, after calling the patrol wagon, return for the fifth, who happened to be "Dinny." An effort was accordingly made to carry out this program.

Now Dinny O'Donnell knew that his fate would be determined in a short time, and that if he was to escape he had but a few minutes to get away. He thought quickly and decided that his only hope lay in escaping overhead; otherwise he would soon be in the police station.

From his perch on the wall he descried a piece of iron on the floor of the shack. Evidently it was part of a crowbar, and the edge was just what he needed to punch at the planking above. This he did until he found a portion rotten enough to give way to his blows, and, although he met with little difficulty in this, it was by no slight labor that he succeeded in "springing" the board upward enough to allow entrance for his wiry body.

The plank had no sooner slipped back into place than he heard the officers enter the shack and shout for him to come down, but "Dinny" felt secure, and kept quiet. The policemen searched carefully about the den with a lantern and gazed at every portion of the retaining wall, but it did not occur to them that the culprit was above in the Italian's fruit shed, and after a discouraging quest in the haunt of the "assoshates," they went out in the muddy reaches to search for him.

It was while crouching behind an empty orange box in the fruit shed, as the officers hunted through the shack, that "Dinny" heard a piping, childish voice exclaim: "Desus luz dood chillen." This was repeated twice at intervals of two minutes, and then there was a pathetic sigh, as the voice repeated: "Oh, where is my good mamma?"

To the trembling lad behind the box, in terror lest he be found and locked up—wishing, as he thought he never wished before, that he had been good, and praying with what little knowledge he had of heavenly petitions—the voice seemed supernatural, and in his half-dazed condition he immediately came to the conclusion that one of the angels which the good priest had invariably spoken of at the infrequent opportunities "Dinny" gave had been sent to remind him of his sins. Probably under any other conditions he would not have attributed to the mysterious voice anything of the spiritual, but in his fear and lonesomeness and in the darkness his mind was swept with thoughts of his misdeeds, and it was brought forcibly home to him that while he might keep out of the way of the police he could never hide himself from his heavenly father, even in the shack of the wharf rats. He dared in a few minutes to lift his head and peer into the darkness, hoping to catch a glimpse of the imaginary white-winged form, but he attributed his failure to distinguish it to the darkness, still believing that there was an angel in the room. He heard nothing more of the voice during the night beyond now and then a pitiful little sob or a pathetically tender whispering of the word "mamma," but it was not in "Dinny's" power during that time to terror to logically deduce that the sounds came from a human being, and a small one at that.

With the coming of light he was face to face with the problem of escaping from the fruit shed without discovery by the police or the proprietor, and it was while stumbling about the dingy room in search of a convenient window that he noticed with amazement the form of a baby on a tumble-down cot in one of the corners. Like most 12-year-old boys he felt a hearty contempt for toddling children, the thought of their weakness and the idea of their uselessness helping, I suppose, in this instance. Beyond this feeling, however, there was with him the thought that he had been hoodwinked during the long hours of his waiting into the idea that an angel had visited him. So in anger he gazed at the infant who had inspired him with such fear and remorse during the night. His steps had awakened the pale and exhausted little child, and she looked up at him with an expression of fear in her sorrowful eyes, which, however, changed to wonder when she saw a ragged boy standing in front of her. Then tears begun to flow and she said with affecting emphasis: "I want my mamma."

"What?" asked "Dinny."

"I want my mamma," she replied, more mournfully than at first. And, as Dennis understood a wave of pity swept over him, for like a sudden flash of light in a darkened room the thought came to him that he was much like the baby; he wanted his mother, too. Nevertheless, he did not wish to show the tenderness in his mind to so small and weak a person and he gruffly asked: "Where is your mother?"

"Way off," answered the baby.

"Well, I can't help that," he remarked, with more truth than sympathy, and he started to unfasten the window which promised the shortest drop to the wharf, but while strambling to the sill he was startled and stopped by a wild cry, and he heard the baby's voice: "Peas don't go and leave me alone."

Dennis' heart was not so hardened that he could withstand such a piteous appeal, and he turned and told the baby that me must go, but if she didn't want to stay in the dingy place he would take her home with him, and the child, desiring the companionship of the ragged boy, and release from her unpleasant surroundings, happily assented.

Not without difficulty he lifted the girl to the sill and dropped her gently to the wharf. Then he guided her to the hole in the fence, and showed her how to reach the avenue. He stepped out after her, and looked up the street.

Ten feet away there was a policeman waiting for him.

It was at the station and the little girl was identified as the kidnapped baby, and when the story was told of how she was recovered Dennis was not punished for his part in the raid on the candy store. The owner of the fruit store went to prison because he kept the girl in hiding, but the man who took her from the garden was never found.

The last time I saw "Dinny" he told me he was about to study law, through the help given him by Mr. Ainsley, and he was then as fine looking a specimen of young America as one might desire to see, no trace of the roughness of his early life on the street having been left in the refining influence of money enough to live on and a good home to go to. And his mother? Yes, she still finds happiness in her son, and there is pleasure in life for her, too.—Warren Billings, in the oBston Herald.

She Is Mother of Eight Twins.

One of the most remarkable old women in Pennsylvania is Mrs. Mary Ann Cassidy, of Coalport, Clearfield County, who is now 105 years of age. She was the mother of thirteen boys and five girls; nine are living and nine dead. She gave birth to four pairs of twins. Mrs. Cassidy was born in County Fermanagh, Ireland, in 1792, emigrating with her husband and family to this country in 1845. Her husband was killed at Broad Top a few years after coming to America by being caught in a coal shaft.

Mrs. Cassidy was never known to be sick, and never had a physician as mother of her eighteen children. She never went to a dance in her life. For the last twenty-one years she has had her "second sight," and now does not need to wear glasses. Though she is toothless as the day she was born, she can eat heartily of the common fare. She weighed 220 pounds when coming to this country, but during the last fifteen years has dropped to about 200. About a year ago she kissed one of her twin boys as he lay in his coffin, having died at the age of 65 years.—Lynchburg Advance.

From Baby to Dear Old Grandpa.

Doing "stunts."

That seems to be the case with the women who are washing in the old way. You can stand on your head, for instance. Almost everyone could do it, if it were necessary or desirable. But standing on the feet is more natural and more sensible—and easier. So with soap and Pearline. Everyone can wash with soap—many do. But washing with Pearline is easier and more sensible. The hard work of soap is neither necessary nor desirable. Everyone should give up the use of soap and should use Pearline.

Look Out Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled; if your grocer sends you an imitation, be honest—send it back.

THE LEAGUE OF CLUBS.

Thursday afternoon, there was another business meeting of the ladies of the different literary clubs of Auburn held at the Swineford House. The purpose of these meetings is to form a union of the clubs or what is called a "League of Clubs." It is intended to unite them on lines of work that will be beneficial to them and to community in general. They expect to take up different lines of work and have already decided on at least four, namely, education, social science, philanthropy and municipal reform. We believe this movement is a wise one and will result in increasing the enjoyments and the usefulness of these clubs.

Meehan Paroled.

Our readers will remember the COURIER'S court reports of the Meehan case in the issue of January 17, 1895. Several tramps had broken into freight cars at Butler and stolen a lot of goods chiefly clothing. They were caught and arrested, lodged in jail here, and brought to trial early in January. At this trial Geo. Meehan, who claimed to hail from New York City, appeared to have been a sort of leader among them but having made a good impression he was given two years in the pen. When his partners were tried he was put on the stand, and then told a tale so different from what he gave on his first trial that Judge Penfield got disgusted with him, and changed his sentence to five years, and for five years, he went. Now, at the end of about a year and a half, the board of pardons has "paroled" him, that is, he is set free and will remain free unless he commits some offense again, when he can be sent back.

Charles Sahm, of Steuben county, who got two years for helping a prisoner to escape, is also set free on parole.

"The Foot of a Fly"

says an eminent English doctor, "will carry enough poison to infect a household." In summer-time, more especially, disease germs fill the air, multitudes are infected, fall ill, die; multitudes escape. These messengers of mischief do not exist for millions. Why not? Because they are healthy and strong—protected as a crocodile is against gunshot. It is the weak, the wasted, the thin-blooded who fall; those who have no resistive power so that a sudden cough or cold develops into graver disease. We hear of catching disease! Why not catch health? We can do it by always maintaining our healthy weight.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod-liver Oil, is condensed nourishment; food for the building up of the system to resist the attacks of disease. It should be taken in reasonable doses all summer long by all those whose weight is below the standard of health. If you are losing ground, try a bottle now.

Sarsaparilla Sense.

Any sarsaparilla is sarsaparilla. True. So any tea is tea. So any flour is flour. But grades differ. You want the best. It's so with sarsaparilla. There are grades. You want the best. If you understood sarsaparilla as well as you do tea and flour it would be easy to determine. But you don't. How should you? When you are going to buy a commodity whose value you don't know, you pick out an old established house to trade with, and trust their experience and reputation. Do so when buying sarsaparilla.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla has been on the market 50 years. Your grandfather used Ayer's. It is a reputable medicine. There are many Sarsaparillas—but only one Ayer's. It cures.

THE B. & O. EXCURSION

The train that started from Chicago Junction for Chicago passed through here early this morning having on board about 1,000 persons. About 100 persons got on here, as they sold 72 at the Junction and Mr. Sprott sold 22 at the up-town office. At Garrett a second section was made up to carry the people from that place and points beyond.

THE M. W. T.

The above letters do not represent any new secret society as many might suppose. It means the Mother Wallace Tea held last evening at the fine home of the Keeran Sisters on south VanBuren. The attendance is always large, and last evening was no exception, for people have learned that as a social event as well as in its moral features it is always good. There was a program of literary and musical items among which we have the address by Miss Liebrecht of Waterloo. There was a recitation by little Miss Ruth Keeran, a vocal duet by Morris Widney and Miss Mayme Buckley, and the following music by four young people, of whom Dr. Johnston and Margaret Ford played mandolins, Will Buckley the triangle and Zella Rollins the guitar There was a vocal solo by Mrs. Engelman, and the novel music made by Orval Kuhlman, who plays sweet music on bottles partly filled with water. Miss Flora Huffman played accompaniments to the singing. There were nice refreshments such as cake, coffee and ice cream, and altogether it was an evening of rare enjoyment. We predict the M. W. T. will always be popular and the Keeran Sisters have thanks for a pleasant evening for all who came.

EARLY RAILROADS.

(Columbia City Commercial.)

Mrs. Julian, of Warsaw, aged 81 years, was the first woman, according to railroad authority to ride on a railroad train west of the Allegheny Mountains. Because of this fact President Thomson, of the Pennsylvania Company recently sent Mrs. Julian a pass from Warsaw to New York and return. In referring to this fact the Times has the following which we consider of sufficient interest to warrent space in the Commercial whose editor has been acquainted with Mrs. Julian for thirty-seven years:

"It was something over fifty-eight years ago in the fall of 1837 that I started from New York City to travel to Goshen, Ind., where my husband was then stopping. The greater part of the journey was made by boat, taking the canal from New York to Albany. From Albany I traveled by water to Detroit, Mich. At that time there was no Toledo and Chicago and Pittsburg were towns so small the western merchants and men seeking homes in the far west were about the only persons whom I encountered on my journey. Detroit was the place where I took the railroad, the first woman, the railway officers informed me, who had ever done so. I traveled thus to Ypsilanti, Mich., where I was compelled to take a stage coach to White Pigeon, a town in Southern Michigan. From this point to Goshen the trip was made in a two-horse farm wagon. The fare from Detroit to Goshen from New York being $54—rather expensive traveling."

IT WAS A SAFETY.

Bert Robbins' little baby had a rather disagreeable experience a few days ago. He had managed while sitting on the floor, to get off his little stocking and the little safety pin on it got loose, and he very naturally swallowed it. The pin being missed, it was at once feared what had become of it. The little fellow did not seem to have any trouble over it, till a short time before it was found, when for a time he seemed nervous and uneasy. When we consider that the pin was open, its intricate journey was all the more wonderful. The parents are greatly relieved whether the baby is or not.

Kankakee Marsh Lands

A dispatch this week from Laporte, Ind., says: The immense tract of land in the Kankakee region known as the Gifford ranch is being farmed this year by the American farm company. This tract contains about 11,000 acres, of which two-thirds is under cultivation. It was formerly swamp, and was reclaimed by drainage. Mr. Gifford conceived the idea of establishing a colony and met with success. There are now seventeen fine houses and barns on the tract, besides a large structure known as headquarters, where members of the colony obtain supplies. The crops this year promise to be phenomenal. It is estimated that the corn crop will average seventy bushels to the acre. When the entire Kankakee region has been drained there will be an increase of several thousand in population.

THE CANAL OF JOSEPH.

As Useful as Ever at the End of 4000 Years.

How many of the engineering works of the nineteenth century will there be in existence in the year 6000? Very few, we fear, and still less those that will continue in the far-off ages to serve a useful purpose. Yet there is at least one great undertaking conceived and executed by an engineer which during the space of 4,000 years has never ceased its office, on which the life of a fertile province absolutely depends today. We refer to the Bahr Jousuf—the canal of Joseph—built, according to tradition, by the son of Jacob, and which constitutes not the least of the many blessings he conferred on Egypt during the years of his prosperous rule.

This canal took its rise from the Nile at Asiut, and ran almost parallel with it for nearly 250 miles, creeping along under the western cliffs of the Nile Valley, with many a bend and winding, until at length it gained an eminence, as compared with the river bed, which enabled it to turn westward through a narrow pass and enter a district which was otherwise shut off from the fertilizing floods on which all vegetation in Egypt depends. The northern end stood 17 feet above low Nile, while at the southern end it was at an equal elevation with the river. Through this cut ran a perennial stream, which watered a province named the Fayoum, endowing it with fertility and supporting a large population. In the time of the annual flood a great part of the canal was under water, and then the river's current would rush in a more direct course in the pass, carrying with it the rich silt which takes the place of manure and keeps the soil in a state of constant productiveness. All this, with the exception of the traditions that Joseph built it, can be verified today, and it is not mere supposition or rumor. Until eight years ago it was firmly believed that the design has always been limited to an irrigation scheme, larger, no doubt, than that now in operation, as shown by the traces of abandoned canals and by the slow aggregation of waste water which had accumulated in the Birket el Querun, but still essentially the same in character. Many accounts have been written by Greek and Roman historians, such as Herodotus, Strabo, Mutianus and Pliny and repeated in monkish legends or portrayed in the maps of the Middle Ages, which agreed with the folklore of the district. These tales explained that the canal dug by the ancient Israelite served to carry the surplus waters of the Nile into an extensive lake lying south of the Fayoum, and so large that it not only modified the climate, tempering the arid winds of the desert and converting them into the balmy airs which nourished the vines and the olives into a fullness and fragrance unknown in any part of the country, but also added to the food supply of the land such immense quantities of fish that the royal prerogative of the right of piscary at the great weir was valued at $250,000 annually. This lake was said to be 450 miles round, and to be navigated by a fleet of vessels, and the whole circumference was the scene of industry and prosperity.—Engineering.

You Can Have Your Eye Tattooed.

The latest discovery of scientific medical men is that the human eye may be tattooed any color. It is now quite within the bounds of possibility for even doctors to tattoo a man's eye bright scarlet or green. Of course, eyes are tattooed only in cases where one of them is blind and has assumed in consequence a peculiar dead and ghastly appearance. An eye in this condition will entirely disfigure a face, but a modern oculist may color one of these "dead" eyes and restore it to its natural appearance, so that nothing but the closest scrutiny can detect the difference between it and its fellow. The operation of tattooing is performed by first treating the eye with cocaine until it becomes absolutely senseless to pain. When all is ready the part to be operated upon is covered thickly with India ink of the required color. The tattooing is then performed by means of a little electrical machine which operates a specially made needle.—Answers.

The Diver's Heavy Dress.

The dress of a fully equipped diver weighs 169½ pounds and costs about $500. It is made up, among other things, of 8½ pounds of thick underclothing. The dress itself weighs 14 pounds and the heavily weighted boots weigh 32 pounds. The breast and back pieces weigh 30 pounds and the helmet 35 pounds. The greatest depth at which a diver can ordinarily work is 150 feet, though there are rare instances of work being done at a depth of 210 feet, where the pressure sustained is 88½ pounds to the square inch. It is not generally known that the present system of diving was first suggested by the action of the elephant, which swims beneath the surface, breathing meanwhile through its trunk, which it holds above the water.—New York World.

Out of the World.

Members of the Nansen expedition say that so tired did they become of seeing the same faces and hearing the same voices day after day in the course of the slow drift northward that in the end a feeling of irritation became well nigh insupportable, and the men would set off on long walks across the ice, each man by himself, and carefully avoiding his fellows.

DUTIES ARE HIGHER.

Charles H. Evans, whose long service in helping to manage and oversee the U. S. Customs business, has made him an expert in this line, has carefully compared the several tariff laws and found their average rates. He says the original McKinley bill that went into effect in 1890, had an average of about 49 per cent. The Wilson bill showed about 40 per cent, while the present, or Dingley bill is at about 54½ per cent. This shows that the Dingley tariff is the highest we ever had, being more than 5 per cent higher than the McKinley bill the people kicked so against, and 14½ per cent higher than the Wilson-Gorman law.

Table Talk.

The August issue of "Table Talk," outside of its usual useful and entertaining departments, such as "The New Bill of Fare," "Housekeepers Inquiries," "Seasonable Menus and Recipes," and "Fashion Notes," assumes quite the air of camping life, giving an article on "Cooking in Camp" by Cornelia C. Bedford, and a sketch entitled "Memory of Camp Life on the Plains" by Mrs. Grinnell. It also contains the story of "Strange Plants and Fruits as Food," by Etebel Ramsey, and other seasonable and interesting matter. A sample copy will be forwarded, free, to any of our readers who send their name and address to Table Talk Publishing Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

It is Thought by Many

when the Creator said to woman "in sorrow shalt thou bring forth children," that a curse was pronounced, but the joy felt by every Mother when she first presses to her heart her babe, proves the contrary.

Danger and suffering lurk in the pathway of the Expectant Mother, and should be avoided, that she may reach the hour when the hope of her heart is to be realized, in full vigor and strength.

SAD NEWS RECEIVED

Charley Mason, an Auburn boy, Accidentally Killed at Baltimore, Md.

Ed. Mason received the sad news Saturday, of the death of his brother Charley, by accident, at Baltimore, Md.

Killed by Lightning.

Special to the COURIER

Alfred Winebrenner, nephew of Joseph Winebrenner, of this city, was killed by lightning yesterday at Churubusco, Ind. He had been from home about four weeks, and was on his return. It is supposed he sat down on the railroad track to rest and fell asleep, when lightning struck him. He was aged about twenty years.

BLAZE AT GARRETT.

Last evening about ten o'clock some lads were playing in the grove west of the Catholic church at Garrett, when fire suddenly burst out of the barn on Mr. Girardot's place near by. It had such a start that the fire department which came promptly, could do no more than to keep it from spreading to other buildings. It was a total loss together with a woodshed near by. The people there had a chance to try their water works also, and found them very useful, in preventing the falling cinders from setting fire to their roofs.

BRYAN TRAGEDY.

A distressing tragedy took place near Bryan, Ohio. On Wednesday a farmer had threshers, and two neighbor girls came in to help do the house work. After the threshing was done that afternoon and the men sat down to supper, the two girls went into another room. Nothing was thought of this until a pistol shot was heard, and then one of the girls came running in, frantic with fear, calling out that she feared she had shot and killed the other girl. The men ran to the other room and found the girl apparently dying, with a bullet hole over the right eye. They carried her out into the air and sent for a physician. But while they were busy with her, they heard another shot in the room, and going there found that the other girl had shot herself. She died in a few hours. It is supposed she did the deed while crazed with grief over the accident by which she had shot her friend. Just how the first shooting happened, will probably never be known, as the girl who was shot first, will probably die without a return to consciousness. And even if she ever talks it is doubtful if she can tell how it happened. The girls were the best of friends, and belonged to prominent and highly respected families.

A Sad Disappointment

Hicksville News

C. anb W. two of our young society men, went all the was Sunday evening to St. Joe to see their charmers. When they arrived they failed to see them because they had been locked in their rooms by jokers. The boys hung around town for several hours and then started sorrowfully homeward. At the river bridge they stopped and let out their pent up feelings. So many tears were shed in the river that the Spencervillg dam, besides some of the dams that the boys launched, were washed away. Their faces yet bear evidence of their grief. We advise them to return next Sunday armed with a full set of burglar tools and demand their sweet hearts at the point of a cigar case.

BROKE THE RECORD

The Greenler Co. Turned Out Over 60,000 Hoops. Wednesday

Wednesday was a record breaker at the Greenler Hoop factory. Over 60,000 hoops were turned out. On no previous day has the company ever succeeded in turning out this many hoops. They are getting a fine lot of timber now, and of course this tends a good deal toward expediting matters.

George Barney

We publish the obituary of the late George Barney, as found in the St. Joe News. He was one of the most prominent and highly esteemed citizens of the county, and we greatly regret that a full obituary was not prepared by the friends and sent to the COURIER in time for the issue of Aug. 12. We presume it was an oversight. Mr. Barney served two terms as county treasurer. His first election was at the old state election, Oct. 8, 1861 when he had a majority of 360 over Romeo B. Catlin. His second election was Oct. 13, 1863, when he had a majority of two votes over Isaac Hague. He was for many years prominent in business circles at Spencerville, but latterly, as he felt the growing infirmities of age, he had retired from all active pursuits. The writer of this, from an acquaintance of many years, can bear testimony to his worth and many good qualities. His son, John S. Barney, who lost his life in the rebellion, was a member of Gen. Lew Wallace's old regiment, the Eleventh Indiana.

OBITUARY.

George Washington Barney was born in Willsborough, New York, Oct. 13th 1816 and died at his home in Spencerville, Aug. 7, 1897, aged 80 years, 9 months and 24 days. He came to DeKalb County, Indiada, in 1838. and was married to Jane Bratton at the home of Gavin Hamilton in Orangeville, May 28th, 1840. To this union was born eight children, seven sons and one daughter. Only three sons, Solomon, Franklin and Marcus, remain to mourn the loss of a kind and loving father. Stephen M., George W., John S., Lucius and Mary C. Barney preceded him to the spirit land. Mother Barney died in 1879. John S. Barney died at Camp Ford, Texas, while a prisoner, where his remain now lie. He was a private in the 11th Ind, Zouaves. Capt. Lucius Barney died at Hastings, Minn., and his remains were brought home and with other members of the family buried in the cemetery at Spencerville. The funeral services were held in the M. E. church at Spencerville on Monday, conducted by Rev. Foster, and a large concourse of people followed the remains to their last resting place.

Something to Know.

It may be worth something to know that the very best medicine for restoring the tired out nervous system to a healthy vigor is Electric Bitters. This medicine is purely vegetable, acts by giving tone to the nerve centers in the stomach, gently stimulates the Liver and Kidneys and aids these organs in throwing off impurities in the blood. Electric Bitters improves the appetite, aids digestion, and is pronounced by those who have tried it as the very best blood purifier and nerve tonic. Try it. Sold for 50c and $1.00 per bottle at Robbins & McCord's drug store. 2

THE COUNTY INSTITUTE.

Early Morning Showed Many New Faces in Town.

Early morning showed many bright faces in town, and as the forenoon wore on, these became more frequent, with a large sprinkling of faces more familiar to those once engaged in "teaching the young idea how to shoot" poetically speaking, of course. At 9-30 the first session began. Miss Della Weaver played and all stood and sang "America," the grand national hymn that has made the name of S. F. Smith immortal. Rev. T. M. Guild, read a scripture lesson and made a very appropriate prayer. Supt. Coe then addressed the institute briefly giving and outline of the week's work, and lectures. At the close of his remarks, he introduced Prof. Charman, of the state University, who gave his first lesson on methods. There were about sixty teachers present at the opening, besides a number of visitors. By noon this number had been increased to nearly 100, and at the close about 140, a good showing for the first day. Free musicale tonight.

NOTES.

There are many familiar faces, but some we have not seen there before. They are an intelligent, well dressed, and of course well behaved company of people.

The only old soldier in the ranks of the teachers, is Ex-Surveyor A. P. Foltz, who, young as he looks, took a part in the late extremely "uppleasantness" and is entitled to wear the bronze button.

Following is a list of the teachers enrolled in the institute up to Monday evening;

..ustees' Reports.

Township trustees are beginning to understand that the law providing for the publication of the yearly reports to the commissioners, must be obeyed. Last year, but few of them obeyed the law, though the law is plain. This year, there were more of them, for Smithfield, Fairfield, Richland, Union, Grant, Franklin and Jackson are published. So far we have not seen Keyser, Wilmington, Butler, Concord, Stafford, Troy and Newville. In other counties, as far as we have noticed, the proportion is about the same. Perhaps a few more will be publised in this week's papers. But it is now evident that a full statement should be published, giving each item of expense, as well as of the receipts. The intent of the law is to satisfy a demand from the people, that they be allowed to know where every dollar of their money goes. This is but just. And no trustee who has done his work properly need be afraid to have his work examined. It is of more benefit to him than to anyone else. A mere summary of the year's receipts and expenditures is not what the law contemplates. It says the settlement as made to the board of commissioners is to be published. We presume some trustees have failed to publish these settlements because of the expense. But our opinion is that the taxpayers are willing to pay it, and will not complain. There have been so many more and greater items of expense that have been made for things of less value, and then kept from the public, that the public is willing to pay for a publication that will show them fully, the use being made of the public money. And as we said, it will benefit the trustees themselves more that it will anybody else.

MRS. BORST DEAD.

Our people were surprised and pained yesterday, Sunday morning to hear that Mrs Borst, who lived with her son-in-law, Milo Calkin, had suddenly taken worse and died. It appears she arose, dressed herself, and sat down to the breakfast table and attempted to eat. She took a little coffee, and then complaining that she did not feel well, she went back to the bed. She soon came out again, and told them she felt she was dying. They tried to reassure her, and said they hoped it would pass away soon, as she had had simular spells of heart trouble before. But she insisted she felt that this was the last one. They led her gently to the bed, where she lay down and in a few minutes breathed her last. The funeral will be at the residence of Mr. Calkin, the A. C. Wilson home on south VanBuren-st, at 1 p. m. tomorrow. Mrs. Borst was a most worthy lady, beloved and repected by all who knew her.

ADAM MORR.

Adam Morr, an old soldier who lived at the Junction died Sunday, and was buried this afternoon at Woodlawn Cemetery.

MRS. BRANDT DEAD.

Mrs. Geo. Brandt died at the home of her son-in-law, J. W. McKay, at Lima Ohio, yesterday, Sunday morning, Aug 15. Her remains will be brought here for burial, and the funeral will be tomorrow, Tuesday at 3:30 p. m. A letter from Geo. McKay to Frank Eckhart Saturday, stating that she was very low, prepared our people somewhat for the sad news. Mrs. Brandt and her husband, Geo. Rrant, were among the ealiest settlers in Auburn, and few had a wider acquaintance. She was a woman of lovable character, as proved by a long life in our midst.

HITS THE FAKIRS.

A New Order by the Postoffice Department.

Assistant Postmaster General Merritt calls attention to a growing practice of certain business concerns, which, in extending their trade, send registered parcels containing their goods to the smaller postoffices, addressed to fictitious or otherwise unknown persons. The concerns then make some plausible excuse to the postmaster and ask him to examine and dispose of it at reduced price rather than return the parcel. The opening of packages other than by an addessee or on his written order is forbidden by the postal regulations, as has been frequently pointed out by the department, and postmasters are again warned to return them to the sending postoffice.

The Sultan Threatened.

Constantinople special: Placards printed in Arabic characters have been found posted upon the walls of all the ministries, demanding a change in the system of government in the Turkish Empire, and threatening violence unless this is effected. The placards declare that otherwise blood will flow as during the Armenian massacres.

The Minister for War, Riza Pasha, has sent a circular to all the Turkish commanders, directing them to watch their officers. This step is attributed to the increasing discontent visible in Turkey against the present Government.

Attempt Made to Wreck a Train.

An attempt was made to wreck the Baltimore and Ohio Bay Bridge excursion train at Muirkirk, Md., a few miles outside of Washington. It was the first returning train from the resort, and the eight coaches were crowded and the train was running at high speed, when a heavy timber, spiked to ties, was struck before the brakes could be applied. The engine kept the rails, however, and the train was quickly stopped. No damage was done. The wreckers are supposed to have had designs on the pay car attached to the Pittsburgh express, which closely followed the special.

No Anarchist Can Land.

Commissioner General of Immigration Powderly has requested the Treasury Department to cable to United States Consuls in Europe, and principally to those in Spain, France, Italy and Germany, requesting them to keep a sharp lookout for anarchist emigrants to America, and to notify him by cable when any one of them embarks for the United States. They will be deported as fast as they arrive.

Tremendous Wheat Receipts.

San Francisco special: The sea wall is blocked with wheat, which has been pouring into this city for some days. Five steamers are alongside discharging wheat, and huge sheds which are 1,000 feet long by 200 feet wide, are filled to their utmost capacity. All the river boats and scows are busy. Orders have been issued to clear vacant lots near the sea wall to accommodate the grain shippers.

Wants Money Back.

James Casey and wife of Birmingham, were arraigned before Judge Safford at Pontiac, Mich., on the charge of embezzlement from John Arthur of Farmington, and released on $5,000 bail. Years ago Arthur proposed to Mrs. Casey, a full cousin, but was rejected. Arthur never married. Influenced by Mrs. Casey, Arthur turned over to her custody at different times $13,000 and has drawn back $8,000. When he asked for more, he says, Mrs. Casey refused him, claiming that he had made her an absolute gift of the money.

Tow-Boat Blows Up Near Cairo, Ill.

Capt. B. B. Bradley's tow-boat, Fritz, blew up ten miles below Cairo, Ill. Ten men are missing and four are badly scalded. The Fritz was on her way there from O'Brien's Landing with a tow of logs when her flues collapsed. The Ora Lee towed the Fritz into port, and the injured men were sent to the Marine Hospital.

An advertisement appears in a New York morning paper offering for sale the Prince of Wales' yacht, Britannia. She cannot be sold here, as the law passed last winter provides against the purchase of foreign built vessels by Americans.

HARD COAL MINERS MAY STRIKE

Men in Anthracite Field to Begin Organizing at Once.

On the success or failure of the bituminous coal miners' strike depends the inception of a movement by the anthracite miners for higher wages and better conditions. District President Patrick Dolan and the other officials of the United Mine Workers' organization have received several letters within the last few days from different parts of the Pennsylvania anthracite coal region asking for information as to the outlook for the big strike and wanting to know what assurances of victory they have. If the bituminous miners win, the anthracite diggers think they would have an equal chance of securing an advance in wages. If the present strike is lost the attempt for an advance will not be made in the anthracite region. The anthracite miners are poorly organized. At one time their union was strong, but disastrous strikes, in which the men were beaten, resulted in a gradual shrinkage in the union. The United Mine Workers' officials have sent cheerful news in response to the request for an opinion on the outcome of their strike. The intention of the anthracite miners is to get together as many of their fellow workmen as possible before any demand for higher wages is made, and, looking to this end, organizers will begin work at once.

ALL OF INDIA TREMBLED.

Earthquake in the Famine-Stricken Country Was Disastrous.

Additional details of the great earthquake in June, which made all India tremble, received in recent mail advices, confirm the original reports of its severity. In northern Bengal, Assam and Cachar the shocks continued for some time. The mortality in the Cherra hills is estimated at from 4,000 to 6,000. At Goal Para, a tidal wave destroyed the bazaar and sixty lives were lost. The earth is fissured and the country is covered with mud and sand. The telegraph office at Cherra and all pucca buildings were destroyed and the natives were forced to flee for their lives. The country is flooded, as the earth has subsided along the banks of the Bramaputra, causing great damage to the crops. Similar reports are received from many other places.

WOMEN DRAWN FOR JURORS.

Newest Phase of Suffrage Movement in Kansas.

In the drawing of the regular and additional jury panels for the September term of the District Court for Fort Scott, Kan., the names of three prominent women were among the list of jurors. The women are Mrs. A. Kaufman, Mrs. A. M. Douglass and Mrs. M. E. Ross. The women own property and pay taxes and the names were drawn in the same manner as men are drawn. The State law provides that all taxpayers who are electors are eligible for jury service, and as women are electors in municipal elections they are no doubt eligible. Several prominent attorneys are of the opinion they will have to serve unless excused by the court.

PEARLS IN ARKANSAS LAKE.

Property Near Bald Knob Leased to Memphis Syndicate.

For a month or more people living near Bald Knob, Ark., have been finding valuable pearls in a lake near that place. Hundreds of people have been opening mussel shells and many rare gems have been found, some being sold for as much as $300. A special from Bald Knob says that a syndicate of Memphis parties has leased the lake for five years for $10,000. They will build a fence around the lake and begin work with a steam dredger. They will also erect an elegant clubhouse. The lake is said to be the richest pearl producer in the United States.

Cubans Predict a Crisis.

The assassination of Canovas, the Spanish premier, absorbs the attention of public men to the dwarfing or exclusion of everything else. Away down deep there is a fear that the murder may have a more far-reaching significance than the mere revenge of anarchists for the execution of the "Brethren of Disorder" at Barcelona a few months ago. The fear is that it may be the signal for the downfall of the existing Spanish Government and for an uprising of the forces of discontent that have been hammering at the foundations of monarchical Spain for many years. The representatives of the Spanish Government and elsewhere lose no time in putting forward the statement that the murder has no political significance, but that it is merely a sporadic demonstration of vengeance, and that it should be classed in the same category as the assassination of President Garfield and of the French president, Carnot. On the other hand, the Cuban sympathizers joyfully hail the event as an expression of a rising spirit of revolution in Spain and as the precursor of the liberation of the island. The conclusions drawn by the Cuban sympathizers may be far fetched, and the connection between the murder of Canovas and the success of the Cubans may not be clear, but, nevertheless, there may be a support for this audacious theory. Canovas was the only conspicuously strong leader of the bourbon or conservative party in Spain. It was he who put Weyler in command of the Spanish forces of Cuba and directed him to suppress the rebellion, even though in so doing it might be necessary to exterminate the entire Cuban population. It was Canovas who kept Weyler in Cuba and backed him up. He believed in conquering the island and in making terms with the survivors after the subjugation was complete. There is no man in Spain who can take his place. Those facts and conditions are well known in Washington, and when the statement is made that the cabinet will be reformed and the Government go on without interruption or a change of policy a doubt is raised as to the correctness of the prognostication.

Husband's Wild Deed.

After cutting his wife's throat Charles M. Clifford of Chicago ended his own earthly existence by shooting himself with a revolver early Wednesday morning. The murder and suicide occurred in the rooms where the couple lived at 302 Rush street. Musita Clifford, 14 years old, awoke at 6:30 and found the bodies of her father and mother. She notified the neighborhood. Mrs. Clifford was a handsome woman and Clifford was jealous of her.

Battled with Officers.

Two negro desperadoes, Allen Lightfoot and son, had a pistol fight with five officers of the law in Coffee County, Ala. The elder Lightfoot was shot through the heart and killed; his son was shot in both legs and in the shoulder. He will also die.

Spain's Premier Killed.

Senor Antonio Canovas del Castillo, prime minister of Spain, was assassinated by Michele Angino Golli, a Neapolitan anarchist, at Santa Agueda, Sunday afternoon. He was shot three times, and fell dying at his wife's feet.

Starvation for Many.

The British steamers Islander and Gees have arrived at Dyea, Alaska, with about 500 prospectors, which increases the number on the Dyea and Skaguay trails to fully 1,500. Later reports have come in to the effect that the Skaguay route is open to the lakes, and that it is about forty-five miles long. It is a zig-zag course over the mountains and the road is very soft. There are 200 or 300 head of horses in the trail, and they will soon tramp the road to a deplorable condition. The probability of one man in ten reaching the Klondyke is remote. Old Alaska prospectors, some of whom have wintered in the Yukon and know what to expect, are becoming frightened and turning back. Not that they fear the hardships, but that they are apprehensive of famine on account of so many men rushing headlong to the mines without enough provisions to last them two months. The best evidence that those upon the ground regard the situation with more or less alarm is the fact that many are paying 20 cents per pound to have freight packed across Dyea Pass. This is an increase of 3 cents per pound since the sailing of the Alki, at which time 16 and 17 cents was charged. Twenty cents is the regular rate over the Dyea or Chilkoot Pass route. This increased and exorbitant charge is due to a scarcity of horses. Without pack animals, of some description, it appears to be next to impossible at this season to get freight and outfits across the divide.

BLOODY PRISON FIGHT.

Two Massachusetts Desperadoes and Several Officials Shot.

A most desperate and bloody attempt to escape from State prison in Charlestown, Mass., took place in the rotunda of the institution Tuesday morning. As a result Herbert A. Willis, a prisoner serving a life sentence for murder, and his brother Everett Willis, aged 18, lie at the point of death. Officer E. S. Darling, 72 years old, who for forty-one years has been on the State prison force, is also at the hospital, suffering from bullet wounds and severe bruises, and his recovery is doubtful. Four other officers of the State prison, E. H. Witham, J. H. Townsend, F. E. Benjamin and J. L. Abbott, are suffering from various slight wounds. The shooting was the result of a desperate attempt of Herbert A. Willis to escape from prison, aided by his brother, who had been admitted to visit him. The two desperadoes sought to hew the way to freedom for the convict by shooting down every man who could in any manner bar their way. Only the coolness of the prison officers prevented the State prison from becoming the scene of general massacre. Herbert Willis was sent up Feb. 13 last to serve a life sentence. He had been convicted of murder in the second degree at Taunton. He had terrorized the community in Plymouth County for months before that time, riding around at night on a bicycle and holding up defenseless people wherever he met them. He finally wound up his career by committing murder, his victim being Fred Strange, a bicyclist, whom he shot in order to steal his wheel. He is only a little over 19 years old.

AFTER AMERICAN GRAIN.

Large Fleet of Vessels Sails from England in Ballast.

The largest fleet of vessels that ever left England in ballast has sailed within the last week for the Delaware Breakwater and Hampton Roads for orders. Their owners have found it more profitable to send them without cargoes than to have them wait. The machinery of some of them is rather antiquated, but the demand for steam tonnage has induced their owners to give them another trial in competing with the more modern craft. Several vessels arrived at the Delaware Breakwater from Europe in search of business. Large purchases of grain have been made in this country by Italy, Austria, France and Egypt, countries which rarely before have purchased cereals in the United States. Several charters have been effected at Philadelphia to carry grain to Marseilles, Genoa, Trieste and Alexandria and other Mediterranean ports.

KID FILLED WITH WIND.

Boy Makes a Pneumatic Tire Out of His Brother's Stomach.

Mrs. George Ruthman of Beaver Falls, Pa., heard a peculiar noise on the back porch of her residence. She found her two sons, one aged 7 and the other 1 year old, in a corner. The babe was on his back. The elder brother had inserted the tube of a bicycle pump in the baby's mouth and was filling him full of wind as fast as he could work the pump handle. The infant was unconscious and its little stomach was inflated like a balloon. The mother pulled the tube from the child's mouth and the air followed with a sharp sound like the exhaust of an air brake on a railway train. The baby recovered consciousness.

Chicago's Fire Loss.

Chicago's loss by fire during the first six months of the present year was $359,749 greater than for the corresponding period of 1896. The loss on buildings was $445,198 and on contents $530,856. Total loss above insurance, $70,185. During the six months the department answered 2,915 alarms, or 28 more than for the same period of 1896.

NEW ROAD TO WEALTH

HERE'S A BACK-DOOR ROUTE TO THE KLONDYKE.

Gold Field May Be Reached in Two Months Over the Hudson Bay Trunk Line to the North—Travel Easy and Expense Light.

Overland to the North.

A back-door route to Klondyke has been discovered. By it travelers from Chicago may reach the gold fields within two months, or possibly six weeks, if an immediate start is made. Two hundred dollars is said to be sufficient for the trip. Railways and steamboats largely cover the route and supply stations are placed at convenient intervals all the way.

This back-door route or inside track, as it is called, is simply the old Hudson Bay trunk line to the north. It has been in use nearly a century. A railroad official has called attention to the route. To travel over it passengers from Chicago must go to St. Paul and there take train over the Canadian Pacific. Leaving St. Paul at 9 o'clock in the morning, the international boundary at Portal will be crossed at 4 o'clock next morning. At 2:22 the following morning the Chicagoan will find himself at Calgary, where he will leave the main line of the Canadian Pacific and travel to Edmonton, a point 1,772 miles from Chicago, and where the rail portion of the journey ends. The railroad fare from Chicago is $53.65. A stage ride of forty miles will bring him to Athabasca Landing. Here he will find a continuous waterway for canoe travel to Fort Macpherson at the north mouth of the Mackenzie river, from which point the Peel river lies south to the gold regions. From Edmonton to Fort Macpherson is 1,882 miles.

There are only two portages of any size on the route—that from Edmonton to Athabasca Landing, over which there is a stage and wagon line, and at Smith Landing, sixteen miles, over which the Hudson Bay Company has a tramway. With the exception of five other portages of a few hundred yards, there is a fine down-grade water route all the way. Wherever there is a lake or a long stretch of deep-water navigation the Hudson Bay Company has small freight steamers which ply during the summer months between the portage points. From Edmonton a party of three men with a canoe should reach Fort Macpherson within sixty days, provided they are strong and of some experience in that sort of travel. If winter comes on the traveler can change his canoe for dog trains and reach Klondyke with much less difficulty than on the Alaska route.

The great advantage claimed for the inland route is that it is an organized line of communication. Travelers need not carry any more food than will take them from one Hudson Bay post to the next, and there is abundance of fish and wild fowl along the route. They can also get assistance at the posts in case of sickness or accident. If lucky enough to make their "pile" in the Klondyke they can come back by the dog-sled route in the winter. There is one mail to Fort Macpherson in the winter. Dogs for teams can be bought at any of the Hudson Bay posts which form a chain of roadhouses on the trip. Parties traveling alone will need no guides until they get near Fort Macpherson, the route from Edmonton being so well defined. It is estimated that a party of three could provide themselves with food for the canoe trip of two months for $35. Pork, tea, flour and baking powder would suffice.

Parties should consist of three men, as that is the crew of a canoe. It will take 600 pounds of food to carry three men over the route. The paddling is all done downstream except when they turn south up Peel river, and sails should be taken, as there is often a favorable wind for days. There are large scows on the line manned by ten men each, and known as "sturgeon heads." They are like canal boats, but are punted along, and are used by the Hudson Bay people for taking supplies to the forts.

AZCARRAGA IS MINISTER.

Queen Regent Names a Temporary Successor to Canovas.

The queen regent of Spain has appointed Gen. Azcarraga minister of war, provisional premier in the place of Senor Canovas, who was assassinated at the sulphur baths of Santa Agueda by an Italian anarchist. Gen. Azcarraga, the new premier ad interim, and the cabinet, are preparing to take drastic measures looking toward the suppression of the anarchists in Spain. There is but one prevailing sentiment throughout the nation, and that is that force must at once be used to handle these men. Politicians of all shades will back up the Government in whatever repressive measures it may decide to carry out against the reds.

The selection of Gov. Azcarraga for president of the Spanish council bodes ill for Cuba, if his star continues in the ascendant. Don Marcelo de Azcarraga Palmero's military career extends over a period of forty-six years. He was born in Manila, in the Philippine Islands, in 1832. At the age of 18 he became a second lieutenant in the cavalry and was sent to Havana. He returned to Madrid in 1864 and entered the war office, where he was made a lieutenant. He received his commission of captain in 1866 and was again sent to Cuba in 1867. He became chief of staff of the governor general of Cuba in 1863 and lieutenant general in 1864. He has shown himself to be an adept intriguer, if not an able director of armies.

A CONGRESSMAN'S AFFLICTION.

Mr. Henderson Must Soon Submit to the Operation of Amputation.

Congressman David Bremner Henderson of Dubuque, Iowa, must soon submit to the operation of amputation of the leg at the knee, as the result of an old wound received in battle. Mr. Henderson was living on an Iowa farm when the war broke out. He was just 21 and enlisted as a private in the Twelfth Iowa Volunteers. He became a lieutenant in that regiment. In 1863 he received a wound below the knee. The leg was cut off at the wound, but it never quite healed. Yet he returned to the army in 1864 and came out as a colonel. After the war Mr. Henderson studied law. He was assistant United States district attorney for two years. His law connection has always been with the firm of Henderson, Hurd, Lenehan & Kissel. He has been elected to every Congress since and including the Forty-eighth. Mr. Henderson used an artificial leg and has always suffered from the wound he got in the army. His strong constitution has carried him through, but now a new operation is necessary, which will, it is hoped, cure the trouble.

GREAT MOVEMENT OF GRAIN

Causes a Tremendous Demand on the Western Railways.

The following, compiled from figures given by representative railway officials in Chicago, shows the number of empty cars the Western trunk lines are hiring to carry the crops this fall:

Railroad.	Cars.
Illinois Central, in Illinois	12,000
Northwestern, in Minnesota and Dakota	2,000
Northwestern, in Iowa	2,000
Northwestern, in Nebraska	2,000
Rock Island	10,000
Alton	4,000
Santa Fe, in Kansas	7,000
St. Paul, in Minnesota and Wisconsin	5,000
Chicago Great Western, in Missouri	3,000
Burlington, in Iowa and Nebraska	12,000
Total	59,000

Already the tide is setting eastward from the prairies of the West that promises to grow in volume until it fills every channel of trade, and packs the Eastern ports to overflowing. Railroad officials and persons interested in transportation the country over are making preparations to meet the demands to be made upon them.

Empty cars are being collected from every possible quarter and sent as rapidly as possible toward the points in the West where they will be most readily available to receive cargoes of the bountiful crops and bear them toward the seaboard. Many of the greater roads are having new cars built as rapidly as possible, and others have borrowed large numbers from those roads which are likely to have less demand for them. But by whatever manner of means is necessary cars are being secured in every possible way to meet the emergency, which gives promise of being the most exacting the railroads have ever had to cope with.

The tremendous figures given in the foregoing table—59,000 cars—are indicative of a great movement in grain, to which railroad men and shippers are looking forward with the most implicit confidence. At the same time, the terminal and intermediate stations are having all they can do to take care of the grain that is now coming in to them.

SPENT THE FIRM'S MONEY.

Disclosures Are Made in the Case of Miss Alice M. Barret.

The motive for the suicide of pretty Alice Barrett, the Boston typewriter and bookkeeper, who at first was thought killed by lightning, has been disclosed. Codman & Codman, her employers, who have held to a theory of murder, now announce that expert accountants discover that their bookkeeper had stolen $3,000 and falsified the accounts and burned the cash book with a view to hiding the proofs of her dishonesty, and that they are convinced that she killed herself because of unfortunate speculations with the firm's money. This clears up the mystery, accounting as it does for her life of extravagance and her speculations. The examination of the books shows that the money was taken in small amounts and carefully covered on the books.

SUNK NEAR SITKA.

Steamer Mexico Strikes a Rock and Goes Down in 500 Feet of Water.

The steamer Mexico on Aug. 5, while going into Dixon entrance from Sitka during a heavy fog at full speed, struck West Devil's rock. After two hours the steamer sank in 500 feet of water, stern first. The captain exhibited great coolness and with the officers did everything that was possible. The passengers and crew were saved with their baggage in small boats. After rowing till midnight they arrived at Mettlakala. The ship is a total loss.

Judge Murphy at St. Louis refused to allow a 12-year-old boy to take the witness stand in his court to testify in a murder case because the boy did not wear a coat. The case was postponed a day for the boy to get his coat.

INDIANA INCIDENTS.

RECORD OF EVENTS OF THE PAST WEEK.

Brazil Young Man Charged with Intention to Blow Up a Brick Kiln—Valparaiso Farmer Meets a Cordial Welcome in Chicago from Sharpers.

Planned an Explosion.

Guy Tate, a prominent young man of Brazil, was arrested Friday, charged with placing seven sticks of dynamite under a brick kiln, arranging them so that when a fire was started in the kiln the dynamite would explode, demolishing the plant. Tate and John Veen own the brick yard and it is claimed that some disagreement between the two men caused Tate to commit the crime. The dynamite was found just in time to prevent a disastrous explosion, as arrangements were being made to start fire in the kiln.

Crow's Narrow Escape.

Melvin Crow, a farmer from Valparaiso, walked right into the arms of Pete Johnson at the Union depot in Chicago when the train from his town arrived. Johnson dresses like a clergyman, and as Crow had $1,800 in his possession Johnson told him how glad he was to see him. He also stated he was an agent for the Civic Federation, and that his duty was to look after farmers who came to the city. Crow explained that he knew a thing or two, and that he had planted his money close to the sole of his shoe. Being told that that was the very place the robbers searched first, he accepted the suggestion of giving the money to his protector, who also invited him to go to the scene of the terrific explosion. Detectives Gibbons and Lavin watched the transfer of the money and then arrested Crow's new friend, who is said to be one of the most clever confidence men in the country. The money was recovered and turned over to Crow.

All Over the State.

Mrs. B. Frank Bratton, aged 52, died of paralysis at Muncie, where she had resided all her life.

Peter Miller, the oldest settler of Ervin township, is dead at Kokomo. He lived sixty years in the same house.

At Valparaiso, Conductor William M. Campbell, aged 41, was struck by his train while switching and fell on another track, crushing his skull. He resided at 7822 Paulina street, Chicago.

Two hundred and seventy teamsters employed on the gravel road being built near Brazil struck, as the contractor, W. H. Kattman, informed them that the price for hauling a yard of gravel would be reduced from $1 to 80 cents. The strikers have formed into a body and refuse to allow teamsters to work at the reduction.

The Indianapolis tax board hurled a bomb into the corporation camp by announcing that it had increased the assessment of the Citizens' Street Railway Company from $1,900,000 to $3,000,000, and of the Indianapolis Gas Company from $1,050,000 to $1,500,000. This action was taken on appeal from the County Board of Review by two private citizens.

The potato crop in the vicinity of Columbia City will be the shortest in years owing to the ravages of the Colorado potato bug. Farmers have been fighting these pests from early spring, but they multiply so rapidly that they cannot be eradicated. Whole fields of potatoes have been abandoned as worthless and farmers will scarcely have potatoes enough for home use. Similar reports come from all over the northern part of the State.

The committee of 100 organized to suppress the saloons in the residence part of Muncie, which are in operation in violation of the Moore law and Muncie's ordinance, filed charges against Harry Hope, Thomas Sullivan, John House, Paul Karlin and John Mehan, all saloon men in the outskirts of the city. Two have been convicted in the Supreme Court, two others stand convicted in the Mayor's court, and there are others to come.

The wheat crop in northern Indiana has been harvested and thrashing is in full blast. The yield in Lagrange, Elkhart, St. Joe, Laporte, Steuben and Dekalb is, on the whole, superior to that of last year. In most localities it will average from twenty to thirty-five bushels an acre, while some fields yield over forty bushels. Farmers are storing the grain, believing the price is going upward. Oats promise a great yield, while the corn crop will be nothing short of phenomenal.

Mrs. Eliza Walton, aged 80, was kidnaped Wednesday afternoon from the home of her son-in-law, Milton Nay, three miles east of Lebanon. It is alleged her son, Thomas Walton, entered the house in the absence of Nay, and, putting the aged woman in a buggy, drove rapidly away through the woods. About a mile from the house he met Nay, who barred the gate at the entrance to the road and held Walton a prisoner for four hours. Marshal Witt arrested Walton. Mrs. Walton will decide in court whom she will live with. The cause of the contention, it is said, is the fact that Mrs. Walton draws a pension of $24 a month.

A Clinton dispatch says: The corn law passed by the Legislature, which provides that sixty-eight pounds shall constitute a bushel of corn, is a dead letter in Indiana and much complaint arises from farmers because of its evasion by the grain dealers. The dealers, when asked the price per bushel, reply they are not buying corn by the bushel, but that they are paying 22 cents for seventy pounds of the cereal. They say the law does not require them to buy corn by the bushel or does not prohibit them buying by the pound. This evasion of the statutes is being felt more by the farmers in the bottoms of the Wabash valley, who were holding their stocks for the rise in price. The defense of the dealers is that they cannot do business on the basis prescribed by the law, owing to competition in the States to which the grain is shipped.

Robert L. Felton, a prominent business man of Valparaiso, was stabbed in the abdomen by Benjamin McClure, a Chicago printer. The men quarreled over a dog which attacked McClure. The wound is a serious one. McClure is still at liberty.

The majority of Griffith, Democrat, over Lee, Republican, in the special election for Congress in the Fourth Indiana district, is 1,152. Holman's majority last November was 825. The Populists had no candidate against Holman, but H. W. Browder was their candidate this year. He received about 600 votes.

The large stables of the St. Meinard Monastery at St. Meinard were burned. The college building and abbey were barely saved.

Barney Reidt, engineer of the ill-fated freight train which went through the Wabash river bridge at Portland, died at Geneva. When the wrecking crew pulled the cars from the bed of the river, the body of a young man come to the surface. From letters in the pockets of his coat the corpse was identified as August Roth of Newport, Ky., who was beating his way, probably home. He looks to be about 18 years old. His relatives were notified, but are too poor to care for the body.

SING A SONG.

If you'll sing a song as you go along,
In the face of the real or the fancied wrong;
In spite of the doubt if you'll fight it out,
And show a heart that is brave and stout;
If you'll laugh at the jeers and refuse the tears,
You'll force the ever-reluctant cheers
That the world denies when the coward cries,
To give to the man who bravely tries;
And you'll win success with a little song—
If you'll sing a song as you go along!

If you'll sing a song as you plod along,
You'll find that the busy, rushing throng
Will catch the strain of the glad refrain;
That the sun will follow the blinding rain;
That the clouds will fly from the blackened sky;
And the stars will come out by and by;
And you'll make new friends, till hope descends
From where the placid rainbow bends;
And all because of a little song—
If you'll sing a song as you plod along!

If you'll sing a song as you trudge along,
You'll see that the singing will make you strong;
And the heavy load and the rugged road,
And the sting and the stripe of the tortuous goad
Will soar with the note you set afloat;
That the beam will change to a trifling mote;
That the world is bad when you are sad,
And bright and beautiful when glad,
That all you need is a little song—
If you'll sing the song as you trudge along!

RAMAPO PASS.

In the summer of 1781 the forces of Washington lay six weeks at Dobbs Ferry on the Hudson. Every day Sir Henry Clinton, who was in command of the British in New York, had been expecting an attack, and we now know Washington had been preparing to move against the city, but the failure of Count de Grasse, who was holding the French fleet at the West Indies, to co-operate with the troops on land, had compelled him to abandon the project, and he had decided to move rapidly to the south and attack Cornwallis, who was then in Virginia.

But he was very desirous that Clinton should not suspect his plan, for he might prevent the march or send reinforcements to Cornwallis, and either action would hinder, if it did not defeat, his project. So the American commander bent all his energies to deceive the British, and make them think that New York was still the place to be attacked. Indeed, we know that even after the march was begun the French troops, who went by the way of Perth Amboy, there stopped to build ovens and boats, and gave out that they were about to attack the posts on Staten Island and then move against the city. There were other means that Washington used, however, to produce the same impression even before his army left Dobbs Ferry, and it is with one of these that this story has to do.

"I want to see Dominie Montagnie!" said an orderly to a company of men who were seated near a tent in the camp at Dobbs Ferry.

"There he is over there," replied one of the soldiers, pointing to a young man not far away.

"That Dominie Montagnie!" said the orderly. "Why he's only a boy."

"Boy or not, he's one of the stanchest Whigs in all this region. There isn't a better man in all the Continental army," replied the soldier.

The orderly left, and as he approached the young man shrewdly scanned his face. Evidently he was satisfied with what he saw, for he at once addressed him:

"Is this Dominie Montagnie?"

"Yes," replied the young preacher, returning the look to the officer.

"Well, Gen. Washington wants to see you at once."

"Wants to see me? What for?"

"I don't know. Come with me and you will soon know."

Young Montagnie asked no further questions, but arose and accompanied his guide to the quarters of the commander. He had never spoken to him before, but he shared fully in the feeling of respect which all the army had for their leader, and he was somewhat abashed when the General rose to receive him, and could scarcely reply to the kind words he spoke when he was presented.

"Yes, I have known of you," said Washington, "and from all I can hear I am certain I can rely upon you. Is this true?"

"I try to do my best, General," said Montagnie modestly.

"That's right. Now, I have a very important commission for you," and the General paused a moment to note the effect of his words, but the young man only bowed, and he continued: "I want to send some despatches by you to Morristown. You will cross the river at King's Ferry, go up by Haverstraw and through Ramapo Pass."

Montagnie looked up quickly at the words. "Ramapo Pass." Yes, he knew the place, and too well. It was a narrow defile among the hills of New Jersey, and already had been the scene of some of the most exciting events in the Revolution. And now the cowboys and skinners held it, and if he should once fall into their hands he knew what would occur.

"But, General," he ventured to stammer, "Ramapo Pass is one of the headquarters of the Tories, and I shall surely be taken if I try to go that way. Why may I not go by the upper road? I am familiar with every foot of the country."

"Young man," said Washington, stamping his foot in real or pretended anger, "your duty is not to talk but to obey."

The young preacher saw that all remonstrance would be in vain, and although he could not understand why he should not be left to select his own route, especially since he was to go through a country he knew thoroughly, he only bowed his head and promised to do his best. "When am I to go?" he inquired.

"Now. Just as soon as you can get ready."

Just at dusk, dressed in citizen's clothing, and with the despatches sewed inside the lining of his sleeve, young Montagnie was carried across the river and started on his journey. Even a horse was denied him, but the hard young Continental cared little for that, and all night long he kept steadily on his way.

It was about half an hour before sunrise when he came near to Ramapo Pass. "My time has come," he said to himself. "If I can once get safely through this place I have no fear of the rest of the way." But he was more excited than he knew, and he was breathing rapidly as he entered the pass. He grasped his heavy walking stick more tightly and glanced about him. The passage between the hills was becoming very narrow. Beside the roadway there was only a narrow little strip of land and the swift-flowing stream that ran noisily on its way. The steep hillsides rose abrupt' and rocky. The damp, cool air of the early morning, the noise of the stream, the threatening cliffs and bowlders, which might conceal some of his enemies, all increased the nervous dread of the messenger, and he quickened his steps. Once through, his greatest danger would be passed.

"Hark! What was that? He stopped and listened, and in a moment he knew he had not been deceived. He could hear the sound of approaching horsemen, and they were coming rapidly down the road behind him.

He glanced behind for a hiding place, and already had started to climb the cliffs, when he caught sight of the approaching men and realized that he could not gain a place of concealment before they would be near enough to see him. Perhaps they had already discovered him. There was nothing left but to resume his place in the road, walk on as though he neither feared nor suspected anything, and keep on as bold a face as possible. But if his face was bold, it was the only thing bold about him, for his heart sank when he saw the six men enter the pass, and bring their horses to a walk when they noticed the stranger.

He could see their faces now, and his alarm increased when he recognized the leader as Richard Smith. He had been at Goshen when his father, Claudius Smith, along with Gordon and De la Mar, had been hanged. Montagnie knew what a desperado Claudius Smith had been, and what a terror his gang of cowboys had been in Orange county and along the borders of New Jersey. Many rewards had been offered for his arrest, and about a year and a half before this time he had been captured at Oyster Bay and taken to Goshen, where he was chained to the floor of the jail and a strong guard placed over him.

All his efforts to escape had been in vain, and with his two companions he had been hanged, as Montagnie himself knew, for he had been in Goshen on that very day. But Smith's son Richard had been avenging the death of his father, and the poor Whigs in that region had been suffering more at his hands than they had from his father. These were the thoughts that were passing rapidly through the mind of the messenger, and there was this desperado, Richard Smith, approaching, and with him five men as desperate as he at his back. What villainous-looking men they were. He grasped his walking-stick more firmly and tried to appear calm.

"Good morrow, gentlemen," said Montagnie.

A gruff word was the only reply, but each man was glancing sharply at him. Evidently they were suspicious, but, as they passed on, Montagnie breathed more easily. The danger was almost passed and in a moment he would be beyond their sight.

But he was not to escape so easily. Without turning his head he was aware they had stopped and were watching him. The moment was a critical one. Would it never come to an end?

"Hold, stranger," called one of the men. "You travel early."

The messenger stopped, for there was nothing else to be done, and waited their approach. They soon gathered about him, and he knew his only hope lay in being calm.

"Yes," he replied, "and neither are you late in your start."

"Whither might you be bound?" said Smith, ignoring his words.

"Oh, up the road here, among the hills."

Smith laughed derisively as he replied; "That won't do. Up the road may lead you to Morristown, or it may be New York. You'll have to give an account of yourself."

The young preacher glanced quickly about him. Should he try to fight? Six men, armed and mounted, were before him, and they would think no more of shooting him than they would a squirrel by the roadside. But the leader had not failed to note his hesitation, and he turned to his men and said: "Search him, boys. If he's straight it'll do no harm; and if he isn't, it's the thing to be done."

In a moment Montagnie had forgotten his caution. If the papers were found they would perhaps kill him, and if he must die he would sell his life as dearly as possible. He had been so quiet that the two men who approached were taken off their guard when he suddenly whirled his heavy stick and struck one of them a heavy blow and then turned to the other. With a bound he leaped over the fallen men and started for the cliffs. It was a desperate venture and every moment he expected to hear the sound of their guns. He struggled on, however, unmindful of everything but his own desire to escape.

"Don't shoot! Don't shoot!" he heard Smith call. "He may be worth more alive than dead. Ha! ha! Who would have thought such a peaceful looking youngster would have given such a rap?" and he laughed again when he saw how angry his companions were. "Take after him; be quick or he'll get away."

Montagnie was struggling desperately to make his way up the hillside. For a moment he thought they had abandoned the pursuit, although he wondered why they didn't shoot, but he soon understood it all when he saw two of the men coming toward him. They had known of a path, and by taking it had been able to gain the heights above.

To attempt further flight was useless now, and without a word he followed his captors to the road beneath.

"Take him up to the hut, boys," said Smith and the messenger soon found himself in a rude log house about 200 yards from the road and concealed among the defiles of the hills.

"Now search him," said the leader, and the men immediately began to do his bidding. His three-corned hat was cut into pieces, but nothing was found in it. Next his coat was taken off, and in a moment one of them exclaimed: "Here's something; it's inside the lining," and he cut open the sleeve and took out the dispatches, which he tossed to Smith. The leader quickly opened them, and as he read the others watched him keenly.

"It's a good find, boys, and all right. That's what comes of making a general out of a farmer. Who was the fool that tried to hide this in the lining of a sleeve?" he inquired, turning to Montagnie. "Why, it's the very first place we'd look into. And you must have been drunk to think you could get through Ramapo Pass with them. You don't look like a lack-wit, but you must have been not to have taken the upper road. But Clinton will be glad to get this! Now, boys, what shall we do with this fellow, hang him or send him away?"

"Shoot him," said the one whom the messenger had struck. "It's none too good for him."

"We'll see about that a little later," replied Smith. "We've got to get this letter to Clinton the first thing we do."

Two were left with the prisoner as a guard and the others soon rode way. For three days and nights Montagnie lay in the hut, bound hand and foot. Not for a moment were the cords loosened, and each day his guard told him they were about to take him out and hang him and leave his body on a tree by the roadside as a warning to all Whigs. The preacher had fully resigned himself and expected daily the threat would be put into execution.

On the fourth day Smith returned, and, after a hurried consultation with the guards, rode away. The prisoner's hands were loosed, and his aching limbs were rubbed by the guard, but he had no other thought than that he was being prepared for his execution. Accordingly when in a few hours he was bidden to follow them out of the hut he glanced on every side for the rope he thought to see dangling from some tree. As he walked his thoughts were somewhat bitter against Washington. Why had he insisted upon his coming through Ramapo Pass? If he had been left to his own device he would have taken the upper road and never would have fallen into the power of those desperadoes.

"Can you ride," said one of the men abruptly.

"Yes," replied the preacher. Were they about to mount him on a horse and then start the horse off after the noose had been adjusted? He had heard of that plan having been used.

But he had no time for meditation, for they came to a place where three horses were waiting. Almost before he knew what had occurred, the prisoner found himself mounted and riding rapidly along the road, with one guard on either side.

What could it mean? He saw no rope and not a word was spoken. On and on they went, and gradually it dawned upon the young man's mind what the destination was to be. Nor was he mistaken, for he soon was carried across the river and placed in the old Sugar House prison in New York, one of the famous provost prisons of that day.

"You're a great one," said the guard o Montagnie the next day. "Those letters you had were all about Washinton's plan to attack New York. But Clinton can take a hint, and everybody in the city is getting ready to receive the rebels." Then he took from his pocket a copy of Rivington's Gazette, which contained a long account of his capture, the nature of the dispatches he had carried and the use Sir Henry was making of the information he had gained.

Suddenly, as the guard finished his reading, Montagnie laughed aloud.

"What are you laughing at?" asked the angry guard as he left. "I don't see anything funny in that?"

But the prisoner did, and all his bitterness toward Washington had vanished in a moment. Now he understood it all. Washington had intended all the time to have him taken prisoner with those dispatches on his person and thus to hold the British in New York while he started for Virginia.

How well he held them we know from the fact that when Sir Henry next heard of him he was already beyond the Delaware, too far away to be pursued, and it was too late to send word or aid to Cornwallis.

As for Parson Montagnie, he was not long kept a prisoner, for the war was soon ended; but for years it was his delight to tell the story of his capture. "I had read about the Greeks holding the pass of Thermopylae," he would say, "and keeping out the enemy; but I kept the enemy in by failing to hold the pass at Ramapo."—Atlanta Constitution.

A Valuable Fowl.

Henry W. Brodt, proprietor of the Commercial Hotel of this city, made a remarkable discovery yesterday, which confirms the theory of geologists that the small gravel-bottom creeks southeast of here contain gold washed from the sides of the knobs. Andrew Blackall, a poultry dealer here, purchased some chickens of a farmer who lives in Finley township, on one of these gravel streams, close to the Knobs. One of the fowls, a large rooster, he sold to Mr. Brodt, who had it prepared for dinner. The surprise of the cook can be imagined when, on dressing the chicken, she found in its craw a nugget of what appeared to be gold. It was taken to a jeweler, who pronounced it a pure specimen of the precious metal. Its weight was found to be thirty-eight grains. The nugget is a bright, solid lump, in its natural state, which shows that the gold is a native product of the county.—Indianapolis News.

ALL WANT AN OUTING

NOT ALONE HEALTH SEEKERS WHO FLOCK TO RESORTS.

In Every Community Are Hundreds Who Want a Few Weeks of Gypsy Life—How the Vacation Season May Be Enjoyed.

Hints on Camping.

MANY of those who flock to the seashore, to the mountains and to Europe each year during the hot months of summer, are not purely health seekers or fashionable folk. It seems as if in every community, city or urban, there are countless thousands who have enough gypsy blood in their veins to feel a longing when the first warm days come on, to get away into the woods and fields, away "into the heart of the hills," to breathe the fresh air untainted. There are many to whom such a vacation means rest from nerve strain and toil that has become distasteful, whose pocketbooks will not suffice for summer hotels and fine wardrobes. And there is many a man—yes, and many a woman—who, used to all the refinements of life, looks back upon days of primitive freedom spent under a roof of canvas as among the happiest ever known. One never forgets such resting times, and before the tan is off the face, or the nerves again acknowledge business influence, the heart is longing for another privilege of living as the birds live.

Vacation during the past ten years has come to mean much, both in city and country, with the busy denizen of the metropolis as with the resident of the average country village, and the isolated farmer, as well, the keynote of longing is rest and change. All crave the beneficent boon, all appreciate it. It is a delightful break in a monotony that otherwise would seem rapid and unendurable. It is not enough for the city resident to visit the brightest of parks, for the country resident to wander in home forests. Other parks and other forests must fill the eye. A break, a change, travel, new society, new scenes, must intervene, if it is only for a brief fortnight, and the spirit returns to its cares and labors rejuvenated and ardent for the work beyond.

With a great majority of people, "camping out" is the most delightful of summer experiences, and from the first warm days till the time when the frost falls the mere mention of rod or reel or rifle sets the sportsman's blood a-tingle. In his fancy he can catch the odor of the pine woods on a bright, crisp morning; he can hear the loons on the lake, and the solitary screech of a night owl; he can see the "shiners" glisten in the sun, and hear the cool splash as they go down to tempt the gamy bass.

The best time for camping, some say, is in June; it is in July and August and September and October, according to other good authorities. The fact is, it all depends on what you are going for and where you are going. If you are after big game, fall is the ideal season. That's when a crack of the rifle in steady hands brings down a deer. That's when, lying flat down in the grass which a hoar frost or two has bleached to the color of his dead-grass colored corduroys, the sportsman creeps up with bated breath, when whir, whir, zip! and down comes a duck or a fluttering partridge. And the forest is a dream of beauty. But the hot summer days tempt many a veteran camper to fly from business long before autumn. "Fish?" remarks one. "I tell you it's always cool enough to fish. It's never hot when you row out in midstream, cast your line and wait for the tug."

The novice in camping is sure to burden himself with cumbersome superfluities, while he is likely to omit indispensable requisites. But with a proper tent, a small oil stove, blankets, lanterns, dishes, campstools, and a couple of packing boxes, the primitive becomes the luxurious. One who has never been camping would be surprised to see the variety of tempting dishes that can be prepared over a campfire. With proper provision, there is no reason why the bill of fare should not include the perfection of the best table, only that the beefsteak broiled on the coals, and the brook trout just fresh from the brook, cannot be duplicated outside of a camp fire environment. There are, of course, vexatious moments, when the novice makes a sad jumble of the eggs, or the cook of the day is shut out from congenial pleasures temporarily, but this is made up for when the camper proudly dresses his first 10-pounder, or brings in a brace of birds just plump enough to be luscious and tender.

Of late years this camping out idea has taken magical hold of church choirs, classmates, secret and temperance societies, and large parties of mutual acquaintances.

As many as 100 members of a lodge, for instance, plan for a two weeks camping out. A committee of arrangements takes charge of all details. The camping site is generally near some popular summer resort, where there is a lake, woods, hotels and ready transportation. This little city enjoys itself thoroughly. The merry crowd takes storms as novel experiences, mishaps as something to talk about when home is reached. The idea is a growing one, and has been reduced to the minimum, so far as expense is concerned.

Vacation to some, however, either means a long visit to some relatives at a distance, and amid strongly contrasting surroundings, or a tour of the fashionable or lively summer resorts. There is not much of rest for the bright-spirited person in such a course. Pleasure is the ruling influence—boating by day, picnics, driving, tennis; a dance every night, and meals up to the menu of a three-dollar a day city hotel.

ON LAKE CHAUTAUQUA.

The experience is an expensive one, for everything costs. The roving, unsatisfied element invariably appears in the professional tourist. Summer vacation means change of air and change of scene, and there are many folks who are continually changing their summer resort. To have sojourned last year at Long Branch means a month in the White Mountains this season, or a summer at Newport this year indicates a residence at Saratoga Springs next season. We Americans are the most restless, changing, unsatisfied people on earth.

There is a certain class of city people, however, who cling to their favorite mountain or lake, the kind of people who do not like the roaring sea and the board walk. They want quiet, mountain air and scenery always. So it appears that, after all, Saratoga Springs, Lake Chautauqua, the Thousand Islands, the Catskill Mountains, Lake George, the Adirondack Mountains and the New England coast have their regular visitors, and they are among the people with whom going to the country is almost as easy as it is for those more fortunate ones who have their own country homes. There is another smaller class of summer tourists who go to Europe for their outing. The hard times, the higher steamship rates, the advancing prices for living in England and on the continent and the desire for retrenchment have reduced this class considerably, and many people who once belonged to that body have sought country homes for the season.

Niagara Falls, celebrated as Nature's wonder throughout the entire universe, has a large number of summer visitors. The big hotels there on both the American and the Canadian sides of the Niagara River are crowded with guests, many of them from foreign countries. There are many points of interest about Niagara City, and the big falls are not alone the attraction.

Not many miles distant is the far-famed Lake Chautauqua, one of the most magnificent bodies of resh water in the world. The lake is some twenty-six miles long and from two to six miles wide. Steamboats ply its waters, and there are big hotels at each of the dozen landings along the shore. It is an ideal summer resort and a decided favorite among people residing in Buffalo, Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Cleveland and the South and West.

Then there is Echo Lake, in the Adirondacks, Lake George, Delaware Water Gap, Mount Washington, and innumerable places where profound enjoyment has been reduced to a science. There are the Thousand Islands, free to all visitors, and camping parties and excursionists may locate where they will on promise not to commit needless depredation. In a prettily shaded rock in a pleasant cove a student can pitch an "A" tent and spend the summer vacation in the midst of the life and beauty of the river at less expense than he could have boarded in the dullest of country towns.

Of the Western resorts and midsummer attractions for the tourist and recreation seekers none can compare with the great lakes, and more particularly the shores of Lake Superior. It is an outing in itself to but ride along the shores of this famous lake. For hours one can ride along the shore, whose irregularities provide a wide diversity of scenery in woods, among rocks and every few minutes close beside the closed ends of the great bays which spread out into an ocean-like endlessness of water.

A LAKESIDE NYMPH.

There are many points of interest to be found in a voyage of the lakes, differing from those found anywhere else in this country. There are the celebrated pictured rocks, the Indian tribes of the North, the famous copper mines and scenery unsurpassed.

People residing in Chicago, St. Paul and other cities, and in the country contiguous, resort every summer to hotel and cottage life at Delavan and Waukesha, at Lauderdale Lake, Benton Harbor, Mount Clemens and Put-in-Bay Island. All along the great lakes are scattered beautiful places of resort, and some have economical features that give the slim pocket-book a fair chance.

The person who gets the most good out of his few weeks of summer vacation does not own a cottage at any resort. He goes to a different place each year, never makes the same trip twice. It is the most tiresome thing in the world to be obliged to go to the same cottage, and have the same neighbors, and do the same things, and dress in the same fashionable sort of clothes that you do all the rest of the year. After such a season one feels as if he must now take a rest elsewhere, and he needs it far more than he did at the beginning of summer.

Don't go where you will meet any one you know if you can help it. Don't go to the same place you have gone, perhaps, for years. Go to some new place not a fashionable resort, but one which is comparatively new to everybody, some wild place where civilization has not ruined the natural beauty of the scenery. Get near to "Nature's heart" and stay there. Fill your days with out of door pleasures. Lie on the pine needles somewhere in the North woods and take in all the good, clear, sweet breath of the woods and study by observation everything or anything in Nature. Dream—dream all day long, and sleep and eat. It will not be necessary to lay any command down to eat, for any one who spends his time in the woods by the lakes cannot help but eat. The appetites of sojourners in those regions are something astounding.

Above all, don't hurry. Whatever you do take your time. This is a time of general relaxation and should not be utterly spoiled by trying to crowd too much pleasure into a short time. Take all you can leisurely and conveniently and leave the rest for another season.

A couple of stanzas by Dr. Van Dyke just expresses the true idea of a vacation:

Only an idle little stream,
Whose somber waters softly gleam,
Where I may wade, through woodland shade,
And cast the fly and loaf and dream.

Only a trout or two, to dart
From foaming pools and try my art.
No more I'm wishing, old fashioned fishing
And just a day on nature's heart.

THE QUESTION OF THE VACATION SEASON—WHERE TO GO?

PIGEON FAMILY ON A SHIP.

Female Made Her Mate Sit on the Eggs During the Voyage.

On board the Neptune liner Delano, Captain James, which arrived recently from Rotterdam, is a clear case of petticoat government.

When the Delano left Rotterdam a pair of pigeons were occupying a loft on the vessel. On the voyage across the Atlantic two eggs appeared in the nest, over which there was a real pigeon chuckle that drew the attention of the crew, and investigation proved that a family was expected. Great care was taken by the sailors in wild weather to see that the mother and her eggs were not rolled out or washed by the seas.

Then the sailors discovered that there was more petticoat government visible in the treatment of the male by the female than was recognized in the ethics of the married men who were on board. As an instance it was seen that after the mother had taken a "dog watch," keeping the eggs warm, she would catch her better half by the collar and drag him into the nest and make him take her place on the eggs. No sailor would stand such treatment as that without complaining to the British Consul or the Board of Trade. The male pigeon performed his duties without a murmur and the eggs in the nest promise to yield a sea crop of pigeons.

Again the female dragged the male into the nest and made him take his place on the eggs. Then she stood outside the nest and spruced her plumage, which she had disregarded at sea. Then looking several times into the home and seeing that everything was all right she raised her wings and flew away. At tea time she had not returned and Captain James is bothering his head as to what he will do with the orphans if the father follows the mother. He hopes that Immigrant Commissioner Robinson will not put him under the same bond that he does when stowaways escape from ships.—Baltimore Sun.

Dodging the Question.

It is dangerous to possess a reputation for superior knowledge or wisdom. It is hard to live up to it. Next in importance to knowing everything, perhaps, is to be ranked the ability to conceal one's ignorance.

"Brown," said Jones, "Smith and I here have had a dispute, and have agreed to leave the decision to you. Which is right—'To-morrow is Friday,' or 'To-morrow will be Friday?'"

"To-day is Saturday, isn't it?" said Brown, after some reflection.

"Yes."

"Then neither one of you is right."

And he waved them aside.

Dangers of Smoking.

While many surgeons deny the existence of "smokers' cancer," others indicate tobacco as the cause of cancer of the lips and nasal fossae. The disease from this cause is said to be lobulated epithelioma, sometimes of horny tissue. It shows particularly among smokers who pay no attention to the cleaning of the mouth, who smoke short clay pipes to the bottom, and who use an inferior quality of tobacco. The under lip or part of the tongue most in contact with the overheated stem of the pipe is most frequently attacked. These neoplasms grow in the base of the tongue and on the tonsils of those who have lost their teeth, and who hold the pipe deep in their mouth. The weight of the pipe is a source of irritation, and the cancer is found on the side where the pipe is held. Contagion from two men using the same pipe may result. When an early operation is performed on cancroids situated on the lip the prognosis may be favorable, but the reverse is the case when the tonsils or tongue are attacked. Smokers should use a pipe with an amber mouthpiece, and it should never be smoked to the bottom. Acrid tobacco should be avoided.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

A Short Term.

The shortest period that a member of parliament has represented a constituency is two hours. Lord George Hamilton was re-elected as member of the Ealing division of Middlesex, on being appointed secretary of State for India, and the parliament to which he had been admitted was dissolved within two hours after his election.

Toy Soldiers.

The majority of the tin soldiers sold in this country are manufactured at Wurtemberg, where some of the best artists are employed in their designing. The painting of the figures is done by women at their own homes.

There are some bright spots in a woman's life; for instance, when she goes home on a hot day like this, and takes off her corsets.

TRUE VERDICT

Rendered By Farmers for the Superior Disc Drill.

Below we have a few testimonials from some of our best farmers regarding the Superior Disc Drill. We believe it to be our duty to furnish the best tools that are made and we never rush any new thing until we know that it is right after the most careful experiments. The drills have all been sold with the broadest guarantee possible and the men that we have asked to give us a recommend all said to us: "Write your testimonial as strong as you can, because you cannot praise them to highly." Call and see the drills and use your own judgment in the matter.

Yours Respectfully,
BROWN, CULBERTSON & BOLAND.

Auburn, Ind. Aug 5, 1897,
Messrs. Brown Culbertson & Boland,

GENTLEMEN:—The Disc drill I purchased of you is, in my estimation, enough better than the old style hoe drill that I would rather have it at the price than to get a hoe drill for nothing. I can drill through corn stalks, weeds, straw, or manure, crosswise or lengthwise, on sod without the least trouble in clogging the drill, in wet ground where a hoe drill will not work, it never cloggs. I have just threshed my oats and got machine measure 78½ bushels per acre which is 28½ bushels more than I ever raised either broad cast or drilled with hoe drill, and I believe for the reason that I used the Disc Drill. I have used it now three seasons and unhesitatingly say to my neighbors. Don't buy anything but a Superior Disc Drill. It is easy draft, convenient to change quantity of seed per acre and not a fault of any kind.

WILLIAM McKINLEY

LaOtto, Ind., August 2, 1897,
Messrs. Brown, Culbertson & Boland,
Auburn Ind,

In reply to your inquiry about the Disc Drill which I have used now six seasons, I will say that it suits me perfectly. I would buy no other, even at at a great deal less price. I can use it in cornstalks, manure or foul ground without any trouble. I think I have raised enough more grain by using this in preference to a hoe drill to pay for it.

Yours Truly,
WINFIELD GORRELL.

Auburn, Ind., Ang. 7, 1897,
Messrs Brown, Culbertson & Boland,

GENTLEMEN:—The Superior Disc Drill I purchased of you is so far as I can see perfect in every respect, runs light, drills in all kinds of trash, whether cornstalks, weeds, manure straw or clods, and its double force feed is far ahead of anything I have ever seen. You can not say enough for it.

JOHN M. KETCHAM.

Auburn, Ind., Aug. 5, 1897.
Superior Drill Co.
Springfield Ohio,

GENTLEMEN:—I have been asked by B. C. & B. your agents here, to make a statement of what I know about your Disc Drill. I have used your Disc Drill and I like it better than any I ever used for the following reasons: It runs lighter, it will not choke in any kind of soil, wet or trashy. It works better than a hoe drill in cloddy ground and you can put grain any depth desired, shallow or deep. I would buy nothing else.

Yours Truly,
A. BARTLES, Supt. Co. Farm.

LaOtto, Ind., Aug. 1897,
Messrs. Brown, Culbertson & Boland,
Auburn Ind,

GENTLEMEN:—The Disc Drill which I have now used six seasons I consider the best drill made. It is a positive double force feed whether sowing a small or large quantity to the acre. Its steel frame is rigid, the hitch is so constructed that there is no weight on horse's neck and it is very light of draft. It works better than any drill I ever used in any condition of the soil. Tell your customers I say to buy nothing but the Superior Disc Drill.

Truly Yours,
DAVID SIMON

Garrett, Ind., Aug. 17, 1897,
Messrs. Brown, Culbertson & Boland,

DEAR SIRS: In reply to your inquiry about the Superior Shoe Drill which I purchased of you seven years ago, it has been all that any one could ask for. It wears well and draft is light, works in trash and cloddy ground where a hoe drill would not work, and in clean ground it is as good as the very best. Grain comes up much quicker than when drilled by a hoe drill, which is a great advantage when it is necessary to sow wheat late on account of fly.

Respectfully,
JOHN YARD, JR.

The First Daily Courier.

The DAILY COURIER as it now exists first saw the light March 4, 1895. But there is an earlier one, that dates back into the early 80's. We have forgotten the exact year, but believe it was in 1881. At the county teachers' institute in November of that year. C. P. Houser, then publisher of the Dispatch, and the writer, then as now in charge of the COURIER, talked over the matter and concluded it would be a nice thing for the institute, for the cause, for Auburn, and incidentally for two ambitious newspaper men, to run a daily during the week's session of the institute. So a partnership "limited" to one week, was formed, and material ordered, extra help engaged and several pencils sharpened. The looked for Monday came, the paper started, extra editors were put on. We remember one of these was O. Z. Hubbell, now a member of the legislature from Elkhart county, but then a resident of Butler. We think another was Mr. Keep now at the head of the Waterloo schools. And "there may have been others." We all, editors, printers, pressmen and devil, worked far into the nights to get out that daily, so it could be laid before the teachers and citizens next day. The labor was immense, for it had to be mainly new matter and it was a point of pride to have the work of the institute reported. Some of the copies were sold; more were given away, and some were "left over." At the conclusion of the week, the two proprietors, got together, looked over accounts, settled up and paid all bills, and then each went to his ledger and entered up in the "loss" side, $9.71, And the firm of "Barns & Houser, Limited" passed into history

To Detroit, $2.

On Sunday Aug. 29 the Wabash will run another special excursion from Peru to Detroit. The train will leave Auburn at 9 a. m. and arrive at Detroit at 1 p. m. Tickets will be good to return on any regular train on Sunday or Monday. The fare from Auburn will be $2.

Persimmon Reunion.

A reunion of the Persimmon Brigade will be held at Indianapolis Sept. 14, during state fair week. All survivors of the 115-116-117 and 118 Regiments composing the Brigade are asked to be present.

OLD SETTLERS' MEETING.

The Young People's Christian Union of Churubusco, Ind., will serve nice warm meals for 20 cents on the day of the Old Settlers' Meeting at Blue Lake Aug. 25th, 1895. No one need bring their dinners unless they desire to do so, as ample arrangements have been made to accommodate all.

Junction Foundry

Some people make mistakes of one kind and another. But the farmer who wants to increase his crops and reduce his expenses, will make no mistake if he buys his plows and points, land rollers and general repairs of O. W. Werntz & Co. Auburn Junction.

Call For County Orders.

All outstanding county orders issued prior to March 4, 1896, Number 1496 Series O, will be paid if presented to the County Treasurer. Interest will stop Aug. 13, 1897.

Sol omon Miser.

This old resident died Wednesday, Aug. 11, at 8:30 a. m. The funeral is tomorrow, Sunday at 2 p. m., at the Tamarac church north of Auburn.

SCHOOL BEGINS.

The Auburn schools will begins on Monday week, August 30. All interested should make a note of this so as to be ready for the first day.

QUITE A SHOW.

The bones an exhibition by Fischler's that we spoke of last evening, are really wonderful things. They must be seen to be appreciated. The monster was dug up in the Cherokee Strip a part of the Indian Territory and is evidently a marine or water animal, several hundred feet long. Only the parts about the head and nose, and the bones of the large fins, with a few joints of the spinal column were saved. But it is is enough to show what a monster it must have been been.

MRS. CHRIS ASHELMAN

Died at Home In Toledo, Ohio, Tuesday.

News reached Auburn last evening of the death suddenly of Mrs. Chris Ashelman at Toledo, O. Particulars concerning her death are meager. Her remains will be shipped to Auburn tomorrow and the funeral will be held at the M. E. Church at 2 o'clock p. m.

NEW FIRE ALARM.

The regular meeting of the town trustees, was held Monday night. Chairman Potter was absent at the opening and Trustee Fitch voluntarily took the president's chair. Minutes of the last meeting were read, and the motion ordering the publication of an ordinance in the paper whose bid was the lowest, was stricken out as it was of no avail, as the ordinance as passed and signed, fixed its publication in the COURIER.

I. M. Johnson appeared for a third time and asked the board to have a new sidewalk built on the north side of Hugh Culbertson's property. The board directed Mr. Johnson to petition for said walk that they might see who wanted it.

I. M. Zent was present and asked the board to have a strip of land 30 feet wide lying north of the Wabash right-of-way, between Jackson and VanBuren street, vacated. And also to show on the records that the road now in use be the property of the town. Mr. Zent proposes to give the town a deed for the present roadway and he asks the town for a deed to the 30 foot strip lying north of said railway. Mr. Zent and the town attorney D. M. Link, will arrange the matter satisfactorily. [The road from Mr. Zent's house west to VanBuren-st is not shown on the town map. This right-of-way was allowed the town by Geo. Emley, as a mere matter of convenience, as it would extend the Avenue to Jackson st,—Ed.]

The Home Telephone proposes to put in a new fire alarm system, with drop switch board. In substance their propositition is to place a phone in the home of each fireman, and as consideration for this, the Hoosier boys were to have their allowance of $100 per year go to the Home Telephone Co. In a written form signed by the secretary, the Hoosier boys recomended the above arrangement. Then the town are asked to pay on additional $100, for the construction of the new line, buy the switch board, etc. After once up the Telephone Co will always keep same in repair. Thus a complete fire alarm system showing just where the alarm was turned in from, can be had at the cost of $100. A daily test of the line will be made, so it will always be in readiness. By this arrangement every person who has a Home telephone can turn in an alarm of fire and tell just where it is. By another apparatus, every member of the Hoosier Co. can be called by one ring and all informed just where the fire may be. The proposition is a very liberal one on the part of the Telephone company and the town instructed the attorney to draw up a contract and have the same ready for acceptance at the next regular meeting.

The commissioners having decided to build the new Seventh-st bridge. The town board find it their duty to locate same. They accordingly met at the bridge at 12:30 Tuesday to locate same.

The matter of water works and sewerage was not given much attention as Attorney Link had been absent from the city and had not looked up all points of law connected therewith. The general belief of the board is that the sewerage at least should be put in this fall yet and also the mains for waterworks.

The following bills commanded some attention of the board. The bill for new lanterns for the Hoosier boys was specially mentioned as being too high. But finally upon motion of Potter they were allowed, as follows:

Monitor Mfg. Co., screen wire	$ 1 95
Hoosier Boys, quartely allowance	25 00
AUBURN COURIER, pub of notices	19 00
Fire Extinguishers Mfg. Co, 6 lanterns	30 00

WILL WED.

There will be a quiet wedding in town tomorrow evening, August 18, at which the contracting parties are Capt. Frank Lahnum of this place and Miss Libbie Keys, of Hutchinson, Kansas. It will be at the residence of the bride's brother, J. W. Maxwell. Capt. Lahnum is at the head of the Auburn Rifles, and a popular young man. The bride, we are informed is one of the leaders of society in her native town. The COURIER welcomes her to her new home city, and hopes both may enjoy all possible happiness and prosperity. Rev. J. D. Brosy will be the officiating minister.

$1,000 REWARD!

To Whosoever Will Disprove the Truthfulness of the Following Statement.

Believing that there has been more McCormick Binders and Mowers sold in DeKalb County during the season of 1897, than all other makes combined we give below the names of the purchasers. We do this for the reason that one of our competitors think they have done something wonderful by selling six binders, They have been telling that the McCormick people have only sold three binders and scarcely any mowers in DeKalb County. Favors for machines can be won only on their merits not by abuse and falsehood. However the old saying "you find the most clubs under the best apple tree." Bring on your clubs. McCormick agents will sell the machines, because people will have them, as it only costs a trifle more for the best than for inferior goods.

The following are the names of purchasers of binders not including any second hand machine.

Besides the above named purchasers, there has been sold by agents from outside DeKalb county a number of McCormick binders and mowers in this county which are not included above. And, more than this, there were a large number of McCormick orders for mowers taken that were not filled, as it was impossible to get any mowers after June 15th, as the popularity of the McCormick machines—though they make one every minute—is so great that they could not supply the demand The total of this year's sales is only an average of the past.

HAND HURT

Orlie Crew Gets His Fingers torn In a Shaper.

Tuesday's Daily.

Orlie Crew had the two middle fingers of his right hand badly cut in a "shaper" at the body factory this morning. He was running a piece through the machine and thought he had put it through, past, the knives, and reached around, to take hold of the other end. But it had not got through, and he put his fingers against the knives, instead. The two fingers were caught on the back near the ends and the blades of the machine dug in under the nails making ugly wounds, that bled freely, but he will not be crippled. He will have a very sore hand. Dr Hines dressed his fingers and he is now able to walk about.

The Musicale.

Tuesday's Daily.

Last evening saw the Opera House crowded to the doors, for all knew there was to be a rare feast of music And so there was. Every number but two was filled, the lacking ones being those of Mrs. Miser, of Waterloo, and Dr. Buchtel, of Auburn, both being unavoidably absent. The chorus singing was of the highest order. The solos by Mrs. F. M. Merica, Mrs. Tella Moore and Mrs. F. J. Yesbera were fine, and the same may be said of the piano music of Mrs. Shull and Mrs. Garwood, Miss Thomson and Miss Sembower, and the violin solo of Mr. Reyher, who is a pupil of Miss Stella Merica. The one that attracted most attention was the duet by Oryal Kuhlman and Miss Lindbery, Mr. K. playing sweetly on a series of bottles partly filled with water. They were loudly cheered, and called back. The same happened with the little Misses Aileen and Helen Garwood, who are great favorites for they not only sing sweetly, but are so well trained in all they do. Miss Sembower also was encored. Little Miss Halter, of Garrett, did splendidly in her recitation "Bill, the Engineer," was called back and gave the "Didn't we, Charlie," piece that is so popular. The whole program was grand. Dr. Bristol lectures this evening we hope every seat will be taken.

A Surprise.

Tuesday Aug. 10, James Dirrim, of Butler, was surprised at his home at Isaac Dirrim's by a large gathering of relatives and friends about 10 a. m. who came with filled baskets, and at about 1 p. m. all present were served with a grand dinner, after which all had a good visit. It was his 88th birthday. William Dirrim, of Auburn, was also surprised with a purse containing $8.50 which the friends and relatives presented him. Of those present were Isaac Dirrim and wife, Mamie Dirrim: Ettie Jacobs, Ervin Crane and wife, Miss Lana Crane, Luther Crane, Mrs. Milton Dirrim, Miss Lulu Dirrim, Gladys & Harrison Dirrim, Dr. Brown and wife, Fred Oberlin and wife, Carris Oberlin and wife, Miss Mertie Oberlin, Wesley Dirrim and wife, Miss Emma Dirrim, E. Prowl and wife, Robert Dirrim and daughter, Amos Dirrim, Miss Jennie Dirrim, Miss Mina Dirrim, Irvin and Ida Oberlin, William Dirrim, of Hamilton, William Dirrim, of Auburn, Mrs. John Picker, Miss Sophia Picker, George Quince and wife, and Pauline Quince, of Auburn, Miss Ethel Long, M. P. Barker and wife, Mrs. J. Obrien, Isaac Barker and son Paul, Chester Barker, wife and son, Mrs. William Dirrim, Rev. Aber, of Ohio.

Concerning the Death of Charley Mason

A few days ago the COURIER mention the death by accident of Charley Mason at Baltimore, Md. At the time we were unable to learn any of the particulars concerning the sad accident. Wednesday Ed Mason received a letter and copy of telegram from his father who is at Fitzgerald, Ga., which he had received from Baltimore from the firm by which Charley was employed. We give the letter in full which shows that his remains have been properly interred. It reads:

BALTIMORE, Aug. 7, 1897.

DEAR SIR: I wired you this morning that your son Charles had been killed by falling down the hatchway of a vessel, and asked if you had any instructions in regard to the body, but as yet have received no reply. I have had the remains embalmed and buried in the meantime. Your son has been working for some little time, and last night while unloading a cargo of iron from a vessel, he made a misstep and fell down the hatchway and fractured his skull. We sent him to the hospital and did everything that was possible to be done to save his life, but of no avail. He lingered until 6 o'clock this morning, when he died. If you have any instructions in regard to his remains, if you will let me know, I shall carry them out. Permit me to sympathize with you in your bereavement and also on Charlie's account, as we had become very much attached to him.

Yours very truly,
WM. MCSHANE.

In the matter of the estate of Enos Weaver deceased. } In the DeKalb Circuit court.

Notice is hereby given that upon petition filed in said court by William H. Dills Administrator of said estate, setting up the insufficiency of the estate of said decedent to pay the debts and liabilities thereof, the Judge of said Court did, on the 22nd day of December 1879 find said estate to be probably insolvent, and order the same to be settled accordingly. The creditors of said estate are therefore hereby notified of such insolvency, and required to file their claims against said estate for allowance.

Witness, the clerk and seal of said Court, at Auburn, Indiana, this 16th day of August, 1897.

MICHAEL F. LONG, Clerk.

Too True.

"Pshaw! You never come to the point."

The young girl seated at the table seemed nettled at his remark. Her face flushed, but she restrained her anger by biting her lip and giving sundry vicious little digs with her foot at the rug in front of her chair. Even the casual observer would have said that they were lovers. There was a look of complacent satisfaction on the face of the young man as he sat watching the girl. It was an expression that comes only to one when he realizes that the object of his love is wholly his own. The careless indifference of his tone showed that he felt secure in her love, and had no fear that an idle word dropped in jest would precipitate anything more serious than a lovers' quarrel—a mere trifle, which a honeyed word and a little caress at the proper time would smooth over in a moment.

"Pshaw! You never come to the point."

As the young girl remained seated at the table his words seemed to keep ringing in her ears. While they had angered her, she had never attempted to contradict him. Indeed, as the moments passed on she had ample opportunity to reflect that what he said was only too true.

It was no wonder the impetuous lover, as he sat impatiently watching her, said that she never came to the point. She was a woman, and she was trying to sharpen a lead pencil.

Killed by a Nail in the Boot.

An inquest was held recently concerning the death of George Wood, aged 32 years, lately residing at North Kensington, England. The evidence showed that about six weeks previous the deceased complained of a nail in his boot having punctured his foot. Afterward the toe began to swell, and he complained of hoarseness. Early one morning he had a sudden spasm and his jaw became locked. He was removed to the infirmary, where he died the next day. Dr. H. P. Potter said, when admitted the deceased back was arched; he had spasms of the limbs; he was unable to take food, his jaws being locked; and there was marked lockjaw. There was a small puncture in the foot, which was swollen. Death was due to asphyxia, following tetanus, the result of a punctured wound in the foot, caused by a nail in the boot.

Willing to Assist.

"How shall we check the Sunday bicycle?" demanded the president of the Christian citizens' reform league.

"Same as trunks," courteously suggested the commercial tourist who had wandered in merely because he saw a crowd.

Sir Emerson Tennent, in his "Ceylon," says that the water pink, or spinifex squarrosus, has its seeds contained in a globular head, composed of a series of spine-like processes. When the seeds are ready for dispersion, these heads become detached from the plant, and roll along the shore, propelled by the wind, and with extreme velocity. The ball, as it rolls, drops its seed, which at once germinate and strike root. Moreover—an important provision for this useful plant—the ball will float, giving it an additional chance for a wide change of location.

—The mind has much to do with the physical condition of a man. A year or so ago, says an exchange, we saw an old gentleman walking with a cane and he appeared tottering and as if one foot were in the grave. The picnic at Hopewell in Jackson township was largely attended Saturday and passed off nicely. There was one little hitch, however in the management, one faction desired to sell cigars among the other articles usually found at such places while others objected. But the purchasing committee had the cigars on hand and as soon as they were offered for sale, bills were posted conspicously all over the grove reading, "No Smoking Allowed." But those who were in the habit of smoking, did so. No body can prevent people from smoking cigars manufactured by the Auburn dealers.

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

London has 14,000 policemen, Paris has 6,000 policemen, New York has 3,800 policemen. The ordinary arrests in New York in a year are 85,000, in Paris 100,000, and in London 150,000.

A Boston tailor sewed a button on a stranger's coat in his shop a few days ago, and soon after the stranger's departure found that the gold watch and chain had disappeared from his own vest pocket.

John Lakey laughed so hard at a ball game near Carlisle, Pa., when the ball struck another spectator's hand and bounded high in the air, that he couldn't close his month again and had to be carried a mile and a half to a surgeon.

An era of unusual railroad construction seems about to open in Oklahoma and Indian territories. Twelve lines, with a mileage of over 1,700, have been projected, some have been surveyed, and others are now under construction.

Near Boise City, Idaho, 400 feet below the earth's surface, there is a subterranean lake of hot water of 170 degrees temperature. It has pressure enough to ascend to the top floor of most of the houses and will be piped to them for heating purposes.

The exports of copper from the United States for the first five months of the year has been as follows: 1894, 32,739 long tons; 1895, 25,615; 1896, 48,521; 1897, 49,509. The total deliveries in Europe for the first five months of 1897 amounted to 89,164 tons.

The city directory of Washington, D. C., contains forty George Washingtons, seven Martha Washingtons and nineteen Mary Washingtons. "The bearers of these names vary in color from a light gingercake tint to an ebony black that rivals the ace of spades."

Burmah grows a hard wood called pyinkadoe, which, the British have found, makes excellent railroad sleepers. The wily Burmese, however, who sell the wood, having discovered that the British engineers know little about it, have taken to dyeing cheap wood a reddish color and palming it off for pyinkadoe.

An eminent physician states that typhoid fever can be washed out of the system by water. He gives his patients what would amount to eight or ten ounces an hour of sterilized water. In cases of cholera, where the system secretes a large amount of fluid, enormous quantities of hot water are of great benefit.

Red tape was recently illustrated in Paris. A pensioned policeman who had not drawn his allowance for two quarters presented the usual certificate that he had not died since the last payment. The money for the last quarter was paid, and then he was compelled to get a certificate covering the previous six months.

It is said that by the end of 1892 about ten tons of diamonds had been yielded by the South African mines, valued at £60,000,000 sterling. They would fill a box five feet square and six feet high. The annual product is now about half a ton, and some 8,000 persons, of whom rather more than one-fifth are white, are employed in the works.

The reclamation of submerged land in Jamaica bay, Long Island, has now been in progress for about four years. In this bay are about forty to fifty small islands which will be gradually reclaimed. The present plan of improvement includes about twenty-two islands, embracing about four square miles of territory, and some of this land is now ready for occupation.

Nourishing liquids and drinks can now, it is said, be sterilized by a process which does not alter their flavor. Heat alone is sometimes inapplicable for this reason. Mr. Kuhn has applied both heat and pressure by the simple process of heating in a closed vessel, which retains the vapor, and thus produces a great pressure on the liquid. Milk, beer, cider and wine are easily sterilized in this way.

A Parisian work on the morphine habit says it is most prevalent in Germany, France and the United States, and, strange to say, that the medical profession furnishes the largest number of morphinists—40 per cent. Men of leisure come next with 15 per cent., then merchants, 8 per cent. Of 1,000 fiends 650 were men and of the female victims women of means furnish 43 per cent. and wives of medical men 10 per cent.

One of the first specimens of the new Chassagne process of photography in natural colors to reach this country has come to Assistant Secretary Adee at the state department from United States Consul Frank Mason at Frankfort. It is a large photograph of a beautiful American woman taken in Paris. The reproduction of the delicate flesh tints, as well as the more pronounced and brilliant colors of the dress and accessories, including a great vase of flowers, is remarkably true to nature. In his letter transmitting the picture Consul Mason says that the process marks a distinct epoch in reproductive art.

A valuable disinfecting compound for purifying the atmosphere is described in a Berlin journal. Oils of rosemary, lavender and thyme, in the proportion of ten, two and a half, and two and a half parts respectively, are mixed with nitric acid in the proportion of thirty to one and a half. Simple as it is, the vapor of this compound is said to possess extraordinary properties in controlling offensive odors and effluvia.

An improved diving bell of great capacity, moving along the sea bottom by means of screws moved by electricity, is on exhibition in Paris. It is the invention of an Italian named Piatti Del Pozzo. He states that it can be worked at very great depths and holds air enough to supply the crew for forty-eight hours without renewal. It is lighted by electricity, which also furnishes motive power for any tools that may be used. On tipping over the cases of ballast the bell rises to the surface itself.

The iron industry in the eastern part of Cuba overshadows all other interests. Two American companies in that vicinity employ 1,400 men and ship to Pennsylvania mills nearly 50,000 tons of ore per month. The ore is very rich. From 1828 to 1840 Cuba also shipped to this country over $3,000,000 worth of copper ore, but this branch of trade has lapsed considerably. American capital was busy in the development of numerous new deposits of manganese ore when the revolution broke out.

An explorer recently found in Egypt a bronze bowl and a series of iron tools of forms quite unlike any known in Egypt, and they are thought to belong to an Assyrian armorer about 670 B. C. These tools, comprising three saws made for pulling, not pushing, one rasp, one file, several chisels and ferrules, a scoop-edged drill, two center bits and others, are of the greatest value in the history of tools, as showing several forms of an earlier date than was thought possible. They are probably of Assyrian origin.

WAR IMPOSSIBLE.

Why a Conflict with England Could Not Take Place.

The possibility of war between England and America, the two great English-speaking, civilized and civilizing powers of the world, is certainly regarded on this side of the Atlantic, and probably on both, as infinitely remote. During the height of the so-called Venezuelan crisis a little more than a year ago nothing was more remarkable than the calm and pacific tone in relation thereto shown by the English people and the English press, in sharp contrast to the belligerent attitude, to say nothing of the commission of a flying squadron, evoked by the now historic telegram of the German Emperor. All this is now ancient history. But the difference in feeling was clear and unmistakable. Every Englishman believes in the unfortunate possibility of an Anglo-European war. No Englishman believes in the in the real possibility of an Anglo-American war. The two countries are united by ties of blood, religion and language. They have vast financial and commercial relations. They would, in the event of war—whatever its result—inflict on one another incalculable damage and loss. They have no conflicting interests, territorial or otherwise—Canada not excepted—sufficient to justify such an international calamity. All these circumstances should combine to render such an event impossible. These considerations directly affect my argument. Half the exports from the United States to England are, in fact, breadstuffs, and of this commodity alone these exports supply more than one-third of our yearly national consumption. To deprive American wheat producers and grain shippers of their most valuable market would inflict material injury on American prosperity. Let us suppose that a combination of European powers against England declared food to be contraband of war. Such a declaration of international law has generally been opposed to American policy on general international grounds. For the special reasons mentioned above, and again to quote Mr. Balfour, "this theoretical prepossession would be stimulated by the strongest motives of personal interest." At the same time it may be remarked that Uncle Sam would hardly declare war in order to enforce this view, except for his own land.—North American Review.

Living Up a Tree.

Years ago a Louisiana planter, aptly named Wildeson, went to establish himself on the Rama River in Nicaragua, where he raises bananas and rubber-trees with profit. A Mr. Drew, who visited him on business, describes his three-story house as literally built in a tree—a sturdy eboe tree—sixty-three feet from the ground.

To get up and down between the ground and the house an elevator is used, so constructed with block and tackle that the person using it raises himself or controls his descent by means of a rope.

There is also a chicken-house suspended from a limb into which the poultry is collected at night. After a day of free picking and strolling, the feathered bipeds come of themselves to be raised to their roost.

A good snake story goes with the rest. Mr. Drew says: "A thing that struck me curiously was the sight of a twelve-foot boa-constrictor gliding about on the ground at the foot of the tree, climbing over the roofs of the laborers' cabins, even entering them, and in general making himself perfectly at home on the plantation.

"'Nobody'd think of harming him,' said the old man to me when I spoke to him about the big snake. 'He's perfectly harmless to any one, and he keeps the place clear of mice and moles that eat the roots of my young banana and chocolate trees. Eat chickens! Never knew him to do such a thing.' Still, while they're little, I don't put temptation in his way, but keep them in a snake-tight coop of wire-netting.'"

Politics of the Day

CONGRESS AND THE TRUST.

The Democrats have no quarrel with the tariff that is not the quarrel of the people.

It may be noted that the Republican press is not entirely silenced by the money power and occasionally an earnest protest against the iniquities of this, the greatest robber act of modern legislation, is raised by stanch Republican newspapers. Harper's Weekly, in discussing the tariff, says: "The great central fact in the history of this measure is the continued domination of the sugar trust over Congress. There is some pretense of dispute as to whether the House or the Senate was victorious in the final arrangement of the sugar schedule. But it matters little which scheme for increasing the profits of the sugar trust was adopted. The people who speculate in sugar securities have expressed their opinion of this legislation in Wall street. The common stock of the trust was selling at 110 when the work of making the bill was begun, and after the conference report was made the stock sold at 146."

If the Republican party had been guilty of no other crime against the people than the passage of the Dingley tariff bill, that would be sufficient cause to create a protest so strong and universal as to produce the downfall of that organization; however, when the tariff is simply one instance of greed and rapacity selected from many cognate acts proposed, it is difficult to imagine how these banded robbers can have the assurance to demand still further suffrage from American citizens.

In order to show the absolute subserviency of Congress to the sugar trust, it is only necessary to refer to the fact that Secretary Gage proposed an internal revenue tax on the advance importations of sugar, which would have converted $6,000,000 into the treasury of the United States, and would not have cost the trust a single cent, but, on the contrary, would have left the combine with at least $6,000,000 bonus to its credit, and Congress paid no attention to the suggestion. Let the people reflect seriously on these indisputable facts and record their indignant protests at the ballot box in 1898 and 1900.—Chicago Dispatch.

Object Lesson from Mexico.

The fall in the price of silver and its effect on Mexico are the "object lessons" now most talked about by the Republican newspapers.

Some time ago the leader of the Republican party made a remark to the effect that it would be better to "open the mills than the mints." This remark was quoted largely, commented on loudly and given the widest publicity. The mints have not been opened, and the mills remain closed.

The mints in Mexico are open and the advocates of a monometallic gold currency, speaking apropos of the fall in the price of silver, announce in tones of triumph that it will have the effect of curtailing the business of the Mexican importer. What does that mean? Simply that the mills of Mexico will have to open to supply the home market.

The making of an alliterative phrase is not so productive of prosperity as the making of articles of domestic use by the manufacturers of a nation, working full time to supply a native demand. On every occasion when the goldite goes to Mexico for an argument against silver, the best he gets is the worst of it.

Mexico will open still wider her mills, give employment to more labor, save her money to spend at home, decline to enrich foreign manufacurers, dispense with European luxuries and prosper more brilliantly than ever. A few more "objec. lessons" from Mexico ought to settle the currency question.

Federal Extravagance.

Economy in governmental affairs seems to have become a lost art. Expenditure has increased out of all proportion to the growth of the country.

The cost of carrying on the government has steadily appreciated from $338,342,513 in 1867 to $530,083,030 in 1896. From this it will be seen that it costs about $200,000,000 more to run the government now than it did thirty years ago.

There is no evidence that legislators are careful in considering the matter of expenditures. The people of the United States have been forced by the stringency of the times to study the question of personal economy. Would it not be a good idea for the general government to lighten the burden of taxation by exercising some thought on this question also? There is much said about the necessity of revenue, but little is heard about the need of retrenchment.

General prosperity cannot be secured through lavish expenditures of public money. While wage-workers are obliged to accept reduced pay; while farmers must be content with smaller prices for products; while merchants and manufacturers must make the best they can of dwindled profits, the lawmakers in Congress lavish the people's money and levy increased taxes to supply the funds.

Home Consumption Not Sufficient.

With enormously enlarged productive capacity, a circumstance which is partly responsible for the great depression of prices the past few years, we have deliberately closed the outlet which has been built up at the cost of so much enterprise and effort. Protectionists maintain that it is only necessary to look to the domestic consumption, but the time for that has passed in spite of our 73,000,000 of population. Our great iron furnaces and steel works and machine shops have capacities far in excess of the consumption of our most prosperous period.

Already Showing Evil Effect.

Consumers are early learning that under the Dingley bill they are confronted by a hard, tangible condition and not a mystical, intangible theory. Prices of all necessaries are going up without the least promise of an increase in the income of wage-earners. New York grocers have advanced the price of sugar 6-10 of a cent a pound. This is just a starter. From this increase the Sugar Trust will reap a reward of $25,000,000, as the Dingley bill intended it should. There has also been an advance of from 10 to 25 per cent. on all woolen goods. The new law has caused an advance in the price of hides, and an increase in the cost of boots and shoes from 30 to 50 cents a pair will follow.—St. Louis Republic.

Growth of Bimetallism.

The Republican press has evidently received instructions from the money power to announce that "free silver sentiment is dead."

These instructions are followed obediently by most of the goldite newspapers, but the New York Commercial Advertiser refuses to stultify itself. "We had hoped that the sharp defeat which the nation inflicted on the regular Democracy last year," remarks the Advertiser, "might have some chastening effect and deter the party leaders from repeating the costly blunder of indorsing the free silver and pro-socialist planks of the Chicago platform. This hope, however, has not been fulfilled. The Democratic organizations in all the States outside of New York, where contests are pending, continue in the hands of the free silverites."

It is not a matter of very great importance to the Democracy that Republican newspapers solace their readers with the false idea that the free silver sentiment is declining, but it is gratifying to know that there are some newspapers in the ranks of the opposition that have independence enough left to admit the fact that free silver doctrine is growing.

The fact of the matter is that never before in the history of the United States since the demonetization of silver began has the belief in bimetallism been more widely held or more firmly cherished than it is to-day. It is, perhaps, just as well that goldites should flatter themselves with false hope, but it is also important that Democrats should know and appreciate their own strength.

Gold monometallism is losing ground among the people, because the legislation of the Republican party is so palpably against the interests of the people. When the campaign of 1898 is ended there will be many Republican newspapers ready to confess that the free silver sentiment is growing, and in 1900, with the election of a free silver President, the confession will be forced upon them all.

McKinley's Bad Pardon Record.

Within three weeks the President has released three men who had embezzled large sums of money intrusted to their care, although in each case the offense had been most flagrant, and in none was any just reason for clemency presented. These three pardons, following one another in quick succession, constitute an alarming indication of weakness on the part of the President. They indicate that Mr. McKinley is liable to yield to the appeal of any wife, daughter or sister of a criminal who gets to Washington to plead for his release on the ground that he was good to his family while he was wrecking a bank and making a lot of people beggars.—New York Evening Post.

Government by Injunction.

This government by injuction is the most absolute despotism and the most flagrant usurpation known to organized society. The power of the federal judges, as construed by themselves, is greater than the constitution or the fundamental rights of man. It suspends the freedom of speech and of the press. It destroys individual liberty. It exceeds in pretensions and in performance the exploded doctrine of the divine right of kings. No greater menace to our liberties could be devised than the federal judges' arbitrary assumption of omnipotence and infallibility.—Kansas City Times.

Squaring Accounts with Trusts.

The situation is just this: An aggregation of trusts and monopolies elects the President, controls Congress and taxes the people generally, not for the purpose of raising revenue for the support of the government, but for the sole benefit and aggrandizement of the combination. The act whose passage they have secured by combination, virtually prohibits the importation of foreign goods similar to their own, and gives them a monopoly of the home market and ability to extort their own prices.—Atlanta Journal.

More of Prohibition than Protection.

Senator Allison thinks that the ad valorem tax imposed by the new tariff bill will be about 60 per cent. The McKinley act average was 49 per cent. The average of the present tariff is 39 per cent. The first tariff bill enacted for the protection of manufacturers averaged 8 per cent. On many articles the duty proposed in the present Dingley-Aldrich-Allison measure is greater than the value. It is time that the protectionists should swap names with the prohibitionists.—Philadelphia Record.

Retrenchment Necessary.

The time is coming, and it may not be far away, when we must arrange to govern our expenditures by our income, and make them conform not only to that, but also to the problem of our great national debt, which one day we hope to extinguish. Let our Congressmen be educated up to the necessity of restricting the expenditure, instead of making provision to increase income by additional taxation to meet lavish expenditure, and we will be nearer the right track.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Dingleyism the Last Straw.

The Constitution is of the opinion that the country is on the eve of the greatest Democratic revival ever known in the history of the republic. All the signs and symptoms point to it. The people have come to the end of their patience. The tariff monstrosity, enacted for the benefit of the trusts, is the last feather that will break the camel's back. We are about to witness one of those epoch-making revolts that sometimes occur in the history of parties, and it is to be on a scale commensurate with the reforms to be wrought, and the wrongs to be righted.—Atlanta Constitution.

Money and the Crops.

Republican newspapers are congratulating themselves and the people over the good crops. In this everybody will join them, for good crops are undoubtedly worthy of congratulatory mention. But there is one crop which the Republicans are using all their power to diminish, and, unfortunately for the people, they have it in their power to lessen that crop. They cannot reduce the quantity of corn and wheat and oats and cotton, but they can curtail the quantity of money. It is just as important that the people should have a plenteous supply of money as it is that they should have a generous return from the fields of agriculture. The mines of silver and gold which abound in the United States will furnish abundance of money if the Republican politicians will open the mints to coin the bullion.

The fruits of the farmers' toil cannot be moved without money. The prices he receives must be meager if there is a meager supply of money. The manufacturer cannot dispose of his goods if the people have not the money with which to buy. The folly of contracting the currency is never so apparent as during the days of bounteous harvest. The crime against the people in closing the mints is never so patent as when the farmers' bins are overflowing with grain and his pockets are empty. Set the mints in motion and the mills will open. Provide the people with plenty of money with which to do business and business will be done. The growth of money should parallel the growth of crops. Then prosperity will come.

Time for a Change in Iowa.

The State house should be cleaned of the contaminating influences of the tax-increasing, extravagant, peculating officials of the present administration. The time for looking after the interests of the common people a little instead of fostering those of the corporations, trusts and money power has arrived. Through the medium of the Democratic organization the necessary reforms can be brought about, but in no other way.—Keokuk Constitution-Democrat.

McKinleyism on Top for a Time.

McKinleyism in an aggravated form is on top. But public opinion may change again. President McKinley, of all men, has had reason to mediate upon its variableness. It is quite possible that in the supreme moment of his jubilation he was haunted by an apprehension that the time might not be far away when the country would reject, with intensified disgust, this large dose of the nauseous medicine that sickened it in 1890.—Rochester, N. Y., Herald.

Exchange Comment.

There are surface indications of sufficient proportions to justify the belief that Tom L. Johnson expects to tie ugly knots in somebody's political clothing before the close of the Ohio political swimming pool.—Washington Post.

When trusts attempt to cover too much ground they become topheavy and work out their own destruction. Hence the new billion-dollar proposition backed by the Standard Oil managers is not as threatening as it seems.—Minneapolis Tribune.

Simply because he confesses that if he is in the next Congress he will quite likely be the leader of the minority doesn't signify that Speaker Reed is inspired with the gift of prophecy. The veriest blockhead in the country could have told Mr. Reed as much.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

Force the merchant to pay an outrageous tax upon his goods; let the merchant add the tax to the selling cost of his goods. The consumer buys the goods and thus refunds the tax to the merchant, but—the foreigner pays the tax! If you don't believe it, ask Dingley.—Indianapolis News.

Our State administration has a striking way of showing partiality to the farmer—pile taxes on life insurance and building and loan stock, reduce the assessments of corporations, refuse to enforce the anti-trust law—what a charming record! The farmer may be chump enough to take fine words as an apology for hard knocks, but we doubt it.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

It is painful to note that right in the beginning of the tariff-made prosperity that the immense cotton mills of Fall River, Manchester and Lawrence are shutting up. In his closing speech on the tariff bill just enacted Mr. Dingley told us that the bill would "open up new opportunities for our own labor, which will be the beginning of that prosperity that was dispelled in 1892." Now it is in order for Mr. Dingley to explain why his bill doesn't work.—Utica (N. Y.) Observer.

Two Impromptu Jokes.

The story goes that Charles Matthews, Theodore Hook and Tom Hood were strolling one evening on the outskirts of London, when Hook proposed a match as to whether he or Hood could make the best joke on the spur of the moment, with Matthews as umpire. "Done," said Hood. Scarcely were the words spoken when they espied a signboard, the owner of which, wishing to advertise that he sold beer, had unluckily worded the anouncement, "Bear sold here." "Oho," said Hook, "I supose that bear is his own bruin." "Well done," cried Mathews. "You'll have hard work to beat that, Tom." At that moment they turned a sharp corner, and came in sight of a small, tumble-down house standing in the midst of a wretched little plot of worn and trampled grass, just in front of which was displayed a huge board with the inscription, "Beware the dog." Hood looked warily around him in all directions, and finding no dog anywhere visible, picked up a broken piece of brick and scribbled underneath the warning, "Ware be the dog?"

An English paper which has been taking a ballot on the subject of favorite names for boys and girls received 4,000 replies. A list of 31 boys' and 33 girls' names was submitted, and the voting showed Harold and Dorothy to be the two most popular appellations.

Electrical Plants in United States.

Few people realize the magnitude to which the electrical industry has grown in the United States. In electric lighting alone there are more than 10,000 plants in operation, and the combined capital employed is more than half a billion dollars. At least $100,000,000 is invested in electrical appliances used in mining, and about $15,000,000 in electric elevators. One of the most important developments in this branch of science has been in the direction of electric railways, in which nearly a billion dollars capital is employed. Altogether the combined capital invested in all electrical enterprises in the United States is $1,500,000, exclusive of that employed in the manufacture of electrical machinery, which is at least half a billion more.

James M. Woolworth Has Aided the Development of His State.

James M. Woolworth, the president of the American Bar Association, is one of the leading lawyers of the West. He has practiced law in Nebraska for forty years, and his reputation has extended far beyond the boundaries of Nebraska. His father before him was a lawyer in New York State, and was an eminent educator also. For many years he was the secretary of the board of regents of the State university. Young Woolworth was graduated from Hamilton College at 20, and began the practice of law at 25. He gave big promise from the start, and might have won success in the East, but he preferred the breezy West, and went to Omaha in 1856. He became city attorney, was a member of the Legislature, and paid no small attention to politics, but the fascinations of the game did not win him from his law practice. He aided in the framing and adoption of the Constitution. Like his father, he has taken much interest in public education and served some time as a regent of the high schools. Mr. Woolworth has written somewhat, principally on lines concerned with the law and State economics. He has published several addresses on education and social science, and holds the degree of LL. D. from Racine College, L. H. D. from the University of Nebraska, and D. C. L. from Trinity College, Toronto, Ont. He is a Democrat.

Nautilus Eggs

The youngest student of geology or fossil hunter knows what an ammonite is, but perhaps he does not know that the only living representative of the very large family of ammonites is the pearly nautilus, an interesting creature allied to the cuttlefish, about the growth of which in its younger stages hitherto little has been known.

In order to study the subject completely, Dr. Arthur Willey of University College, London, sailed for the South Seas, two and a half years ago, in search of the eggs of the pearly nautilus, and it has recently been reported to the Royal Society—under whose auspices the research has been undertaken—that after considerable trouble, and by the construction of a submarine cage, in which specimens of the nautilus were fed daily, a number of eggs had been secured.

Each egg is as large as a grape, and is deposited separately. It is necessary, in order to understand the structure and manner of construction of the beautiful chambered shell of the nautiles, that the gradual growth of the young in the egg should be carefully observed, and doubtless by now this hitherto blank page in the book of knowledge has been filled in.—Chambers' Journal.

"Brilliant" Surgery.

It is not how much one does in the world, but how well one does it that is of real account. An amusing story is told of Sir Astley Cooper when on a visit to Paris. He was in the company of a great French surgeon, who was curious to know how many times his English contemporary had performed a certain wonderful feat of surgery. Sir Astley Cooper replied that he had performed the operation thirteen times.

"Ah, but, monsieur, I have done him 160 times," was the astonishing answer of the Frenchman.

He triumphantly noted the blank amazement on Sir Astley's face, and when his statement had had time to be thoroughly appreciated, allowed his curiosity to lead him to another question.

"How many times did you save life?" he asked.

"I saved eleven cases out of thirteen," was Sir Astley's reply. "How many did you save out of the 160?"

"Ah, monsieur, I lose dem all," said the Frenchman; "but ze operation was very brilliant."

The debt of New Hampshire is now $1,667,767.45, having been reduced $159,973.92 last year. The State's revenue last year was $696,265.48, and it cost only $536,291 to run the State through the year.

Any worship that does not have man for its ultimate object, that does not tend to uplift him and make him juster, wiser, kinder is idolatry.

Pistols and Pestles.

The duelling pistol now occupies its proper place, in the museum of the collector of relics of barbarism. The pistol ought to have beside it the pestle that turned out pills like bullets, to be shot like bullets at the target of the liver. But the pestle is still in evidence, and will be, probably, until everybody has tested the virtue of Ayer's sugar coated pills. They treat the liver as a friend, not as an enemy. Instead of driving it, they coax it. They are compounded on the theory that the liver does its work thoroughly and faithfully under obstructing conditions, and if the obstructions are removed, the liver will do its daily duty. When your liver wants help, get "the pill that will,"

TRICK BIKE RIDING.

TWO CLEVER AMERICANS PERFORMING IN LONDON.

Riding with the Front Wheel Off—Climbing Through the Diamond Frame—Vaulting from One Pedal to Another—Result of Patient Practice.

Mastery Over the Wheel.

There are many men and women who give exhibitions of "fancy" bicycle riding, but the palm belong to Mr. and Mrs. Valdare, whose performances have never been rivalled, either in this country or abroad.

STEERING WITH FEET.

The machines they use are of average weight, and similar in appearance to thousands of the Mr. Valdare American bikes. commenced his cycling career in 1888 on an old-fashioned high machine. He was then 14 years old, and used to ride through the streets of Denver, Col., from his home to school on one wheel, having dispensed with the other as superfluous.

The manager of some traveling circus noticed the boy and persuaded him to join his troupe. On the old high machines, however, trick-riding was comparatively easy. It was only when the safety suddenly became the craze that Valdare saw his opportunity of venturing on an absolutely new field. The difficulties are so much greater than on an ordinary that no comparison can be made. Both the Valdares practice two or three hours a day to keep proficient in their work. But in spite of everything they can never be sure that all their tricks will be successful.

As is nearly always the case with performances such as the Valdares give, a comparatively easy trick is quite as likely to appeal to the public as one to which they have devoted week after week of practice to accomplish. The most difficult performance that Valdare takes part in is riding his machine with the front wheel taken off altogether. He does this standing on the pedals, stooping slightly to hold the steering-head tube in both hands, the body thrown forward at an angle of at least 10 degrees in front of an imaginary line drawn from the axle upwards. In this position lies the secret which it took the best part of a year to discover and appreciate.

There is literally no position which is impossible to the Valdares on their machines. They climb over them and through them and round them until you begin to think some supernatural agency is preventing the bicycles from falling.

The trick which entails the greatest strain physically is that in which Valdare draws the front wheel by sheer strength from the ground and rides along gally with his machine pawing the air, like a rearing horse.

Once in Cincinnati he rode one-third of a mile in this extraordinary position in 1 minute 17 3-5 seconds. Until he dismounted he had no idea what the strain had been. The moment his feet touched the ground they gave way as if every muscle had been paralyzed.

To climb through the diamond frame of his machine is another amusement in which Valdare indulges. It can be done by any one who cares to imitate his movements, provided they possess the Heaven-sent gift of patience.

Valdare commences by standing on the left pedal with the left foot, and, swinging the right leg to the same side, he thrusts it through the frame, sinking down till head and shoulders are even with the front wheel on the left side. Then, with both hands grasping the tire of the front wheel, which is turned at right angles, he swings the head and body back on a level with the frame. Now the head is put through, and the easier half of the trick is accomplished.

He has still to come up on the farther side, and to do this must shift his hands from the wheel to the handle-bars. Thrusting the right shoulder well forward, he grasps the left handle with the left hand from the right side of the machine, keeping the right hand still on the front wheel. Then he lies well forward and straightens up, swinging the left foot over the saddle, and taking care the while not to put too much weight on the right-hand pedal, since there is nothing to prevent the machine starting backwards and throwing out the balance. What could be more simple?

There are several pretty exhibitions which Mrs. Valdare gives alone. In one she mounts her machine with her back turned to the handle-bars and rides it thus round and round, sometimes steering with one hand, sometimes folding both arms before her.

In another, keeping her left foot on its pedal the whole time, she swings her right leg over, and placing it on the brim of the wheel, lowers the machine till it rests on the right pedal. From this posture, and without even touching the ground herself, she throws the machine to an upright position and starts off as if there had been no interruption whatever.

When riding at full speed she will now and then spin her front wheel the same side of the machine; or another trick, in which she and her husband swing round and round each other, changing from one side of the machine to the other, while, as if by magic, it continues to run diligently about the stage.

An Electric Hansom.

The new electric hansom which is now plying in New York has some advantages over the ordinary hansom as well as over the motor car. The reader will see from the idea that a "fare" can easily step in and out, while his view is unobstructed by the horse. A speaking tube enables him to speak with the driver, and an electric lamp to read by night. There is no vibration, and the motor is noiseless in action. The electricity is carried in accumulators under the seat of the driver, who controls the starting, stopping, and brake mechanism by hand levers. The vehicle runs on pneumatic tires, and a bell warns people of its approach. It can attain a speed of twenty-five miles an hour on a level road, but fifteen miles an hour is regarded as the most suitable rate.

For Indigestion.

Among the many remedies for indigestion is the agreeable one of the rocking chair. An excellent medical authority declares that the slow, rocking motion after meals stimulates the digestive functions and gives marked relief. The patient ought to be placed in an almost horizontal position.

INVENTOR OF BULLET-PROOF CLOTH FACES LEADEN MISSILES.

THE bullet-proof cloth invented by Brother Casimir Zeglen of the Catholic Order of the Resurrectionists was successfully tested in Chicago the other afternoon on the roof of a building at West Twelfth street and Ogden avenue. Brother Zeglen stood behind a framework of wood, iron and armor plate, with an opening in it big enough to expose his chest. He placed the bullet-proof coat over his chest, and then Lieut. Sarnecki of the Austrian army fired several shots from a revolver from a distance of ten paces. The bullet-proof cloth did the work. The bullets barely entered the cloth, and could be picked out easily. On the other side of the cloth there was only a small mark to show for the shot. One shot was fired from a 50-caliber revolver. Zeglen's chest was free from any abrasion. There was a corps of physicians present to see the test. After several shots had been fired at the inventor's protected chest, Dr. F. S. Westerchulte put on the armor and had the lieutenant fire at him. He said when the bullet struck it felt as if he had been gently patted by a child. All those present declared the test a complete success.

ROLL ON, OH BOAT!

Curious Concern That's Going to Cross the Atlantic in a Jiffy.

A Canadian inventor has devised a craft which he is confident will solve the problem of quicker ocean travel. This new boat is in the invention of a lawyer, Mr. F. A. Knapp. In it, he says, he will be able to cross the Atlantic ocean in 48 hours, and thus completely revolutionize all present methods of navigation.

Perhaps the best illustration of the principle involved in this vessel is furnished by the paddle wheel of an ordinary side wheel steamer. Imagine the paddle wheel to be 110 feet in width and 20 feet in diameter. The stationary paddles on the outside cylinder of this vessel will correspond to the paddles on a paddle wheel. In the center of this huge paddle wheel imagine a cylinder 12 feet in diameter, braced strongly to the outside cylinder, with a shaft in the center of this 12-foot cylinder, and connected with a vessel one would have an ordinary paddle wheel in shape and principle. But in the vessel now under construction in place of the shaft there is a third cylinder, which, as before stated, is joined to the outside or revolving portion of the vessel by ball bearings.

Inside this third cylinder a platform will be constructed, on both sides of which engines of 150 horse power will be placed. By means of friction these engines will cause the outside cylinders to revolve rapidly, while the inside cylinder retains its equilibrium. It is intended to provide passenger accommodations within the inside, or third cylinder. The present idea of the inventor is to utilize the space between the inner and outer surface of the revolving cylinder for the storage of cargo. The ends of the inner cylinder will be open, and as they will be eight feet above the water no trouble is expected from waves.

DISTINGUISHED CANADIAN.

Felix Gabriel Marchand, the New Premier of Quebec Province.

Felix Gabriel Marchand, the new premier of the provincial government of Quebec, is one of the most distinguished sons of the province. Mr. Marchand has been honored by the republic of France with the title of "officer of public instruction." He was given this title in 1881. He did valuable service for the dominion during the Fenian raid. At that time he was a lieutenant colonel and won special mention for his bravery. He was in command of the brigade that moved to the front at the time of the engagement at Eccles Hill in November, 1870, and his men made a splendid record for themselves. Mr. Marchand's father was an old resident and native of Quebec, but in 1832 he settled in St. John, N. B., and became one of the most prominent citizens of the town. The premier-elect was born in St. John in 1832 in a quaint old house, which still stands. He afterward came to Quebec, where his public career for the past twenty-five or thirty years has been of brilliance and usefulness to the State.

A piece of pianoforte wire recently tested at the Watertown arsenal showed the extraordinary strength of 206 tons per square inch. The wire was one-twelfth of an inch in diameter; large sizes gave a tensile strength of 135 tons and upward per square inch. The metal contained 0.85 per cent. of combined carbon.

By the census of 1890 it appears that persons of German nativity or extraction comprise nearly 11 per cent. of the total population of the country. They numbered over 2,000,000 in the North Atlantic States and more than 4,000,000 in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska and Kansas.

The White Man's Grave is a ghastly name, well deserved by the Sierra Leone coast, but, according to Lieutenant Colonel Trotter, who has been settling the Anglo-French boundary in that region, the Hinterland of Sierra Leone is more like the white man's paradise. This Hinterland is a fertile district, with plenty of water, capable of producing almost anything, suitable for cattle raising and healthy for Europeans—quite unlike the coast line.

The London Spectator is becoming alarmed at the growing sentiment against immigration in this country, and wonders what is to become of the surplus population of Europe if we erect an effective dam against it. "It is more than probable," the Spectator says, "that within twenty years immigration as we now know it will be prohibited all over the world, and that Great Britain, Germany and Italy will be compelled to meet the problem of growing populations without any relief from departures to other climates, a change which will almost compel some grand alteration in the social systems of Europe."

She Was Still Twenty-five.

Apropos the fact that it takes femininity a long, long time to pass the 25-year mark, a story is told of a charming English woman. About five years ago she met the Prince of Wales.

"You are young enough," said his royal highness in the course of conversation, "for me to be able to ask your age."

"Twenty-five," was the ever-ready rejoinder.

About one year ago the Prince of Wales met the same woman a second time.

"What is your age, I wonder?" he ventured again, with an amused twinkle in his eye.

"Twenty-five," calmly declared the fair prevaricator.

"But you said that the last time I met you," remonstrated the prince, with a smile.

"Well, sir," laughed she of the smooth tongue, "would you have me contradict myself?"

Germany's Big Rate of Increase.

The German people, who in 1816 numbered only 25,000,000, are now more than 45,000,000, and their present rate of increase is greater than that of any other European nation. They add yearly 115 to every 10,000 of their population, while the United Kingdom adds 101 to the same number, and France only 26.

Bull Fight in Pennsylvania.

William Seely finished his Sunday chores and turned the cows out to pasture and then went into the stall where the young bull was chained up to turn him out also. Unhooking the chain, Seely started to drive the beast out, but he was not in the humor for going and turned upon the farm hand with an angry bellow. Seely had nothing with which to defend himself and the bull had him at his mercy. Penned in the narrow stall, the young man was knocked down by a terrible thrust of the bull's horns and trampled upon and jammed against the partition. He cried wildly for help and bravely fought for his life, but the odds were so greatly against him that there was small hope for his escape. In the narrow confines of the stall, however, the maddened beast had little room to move about, and this was the farm hand's advantage. His cries for help finally brought his employer, and with a pitchfork he managed to divert the animal's attention sufficiently to permit Seely to crawl out to safety. Bleeding from a score of cuts and bruises from the hoofs and horns, Seely was hurried to the hospital. He will recover.—Philadelphia Record.

An Abominable Legacy.

A tendency to rheumatism is undoubtedly inherited. Unlike many other legacies, it remains in the family. The most effectual means of checking this tendency, or of removing incipient rheumatism, whether preexistent in the blood or not, is to resort to Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as soon as the premonitory twinges are felt. Nullifying the influences of cold, exposure and fatigue, the Bitters not only fortifies the system against their hurtful consequences, but subjugates malaria, liver and kidney complaint, dyspepsia and nerve disquietude.

His Heart Was Washed.

Report is made of a most interesting surgical operation performed at Parma, Italy, by Professor Camillo Verdelli, in the presence of all the physicians of the Parmese hospital and with very satisfactory results. This operation was nothing less than the washing of a youth's heart—the first of the kind, the washing apparatus employed being one lately invented by Professor Riva. After making the necessary incision Professor Verdelli first cleaned the pericardium of the patient, a 12-year-old boy, of the pus which had there accumulated, and then proceeded to wash the heart with a strong solution of soda biborate—borax. The attendant success was indicated by the fact that no further complications arose, the boy doing well and at once advancing to complete recovery and it is stated that the eminent professor has received numerous appreciative communications relative to his skill from all over Europe.—New York Tribune.

A Strange Disease.

Kansas recently reported a case which was one of the most rare in the medical history of this country. It was that of a negro who was afflicted with a disease only ten cases of which have ever been known in the United States. A member, such as a finger or toe, afflicted with this disease amputates itself without the aid of a surgeon's knife. The first thing noticed by the patient is an absence of feeling in the member. Then a slight furrow forms around it and steadily deepens until the member drops off without pain or the loss of blood. It is common on the west coast of Africa among the negroes, but it has never been known to assail a white man.

BAD MANAGEMENT.

The Board of Commissioners at the session a week ago, settled with all the corporation school boards and township trustees, except Waterloo. The board of that town was unable to make a proper settlement. Among other defects, it was found that they had for a year or two allowed their tuition fund for paying teachers to run way down below their needs so that they have not been having money enough to pay their teachers. But the teachers had to be paid, and so in order to get the money to do this, they issued orders against this fund. This they are not authorized to do. The most liberal construction of that part of the statute is, that when they hire their teachers, they must have on hand, together with what they will receive during the year, enough money to pay these wages. Thus, if they will need $1,800 and they have $700 on hand, and know they will receive $1,900 more during the coming year, they are all right, for then they can pay the year's wages and have a fair balance left to carry over to the next year. Of course, a larger balance would be better, and the most prudent trustees carry over a larger balance in this fund. And it is very unwise to allow this fund to get into any other condition. The Waterloo board will find this a very costly mistake. They can deal unwisely with any other fund better than with the tuition fund. Now, we understand they have only $83 to start the new year with. This will not begin to pay a month's wages, and they will get no more from the county treasury till about December. In the meantime, what is to become of their schools? How are their teachers to exist? They have no right to even contract with a teacher, unless they have on hand, or know they will receive during the year, at least money enough to pay him. Where will they find the law for charging the tuition fund with the interest on borrowed money? If they let their levy run low in order to be popular, they will learn that tax payers are willing to pay for school expenses, but not the additional and needless expense of interest, nor suffer a loss of time in their school terms. And now while we are discussing this, we remember that the Waterloo Press has now and then hinted that Auburn and even DeKalb county, ought to go into the hands of a receiver. Suppose we suggest a receiver for the Waterloo school corporation.

THE NOXIOUS WEEDS LAW.

A Misapprehension as to Its Provisions and Effect.

(The Fort Wayne Sentinel)

Much has been said and written of late concerning an act of she last legislislature providing for the cutting down and destroying of briers, thistles, burs, docks and other noxious weeds by owners of lands along public roads, says the Miami county Sentinel. Notwithstanding that this particular act has frequently been spoken of, it is not clearly understood by the majority of people, for without a careful reading, one is apt to place a common sense construction on it, which is the wrong constructions as it happens. People generally understand that the law requires all property owners to destroy the noxious weeds growing on public highways the length of their lands, between July 1st and August 20th. Most people, by this time, are also aware that persons so employed shall be entitled to $1.25 for each day of eight hours in length so employed, which amount shall be deducted from his road tax.

Section three of this act is not so well understood and this is the portion of the act which many newspapers of the state have wrongly interpreted, and hence the farmers and others who do not have access to the acts of 1897 have been misled. In case a man neglects to cut his thistles, briers, etc., by the 20th of August the supervisor of said disrtict shall get someone else to do it, but right here, let it be said, not at the expense of the man who failed to do his duty, as nine persons out of every ten suppose. If A is called on to cut B's weeds and it takes him a day to do it, he cannot draw on B for his pay, but simply has that amount deducted from his (A's) road tax. A must be a resident property owner of said district, otherwise the supervisor cannot employ him to destroy B's weeds. The law does not provide for the punishment of B in any manner for its violation and hence it is a dead letter. If A has any interest in the condition of the roads proper, he will insist on being permitted to work out his road taxes in a manner that will result in most good for himself and the public in general. Instead of destroying B's weeds he will insist on improving the road bed. It will thus be seen that the road supervisor has a difficult job on his hands. He can employ no one but a property owner and if he can find no property owner, in his district who is willing to cut and destroy his neighbors weeds, the weeds will have to go on growing, that's all. The law doesn't amount to as much as the paper on which it can be written and it will not be enforced for the reason that it has nothing behind it to enforce it.

AN ALL AROUND THIEF.

(Fort Wayne Journal)

Sheriff Melching believes that, in his capture of Clarence Upton, he has run down the author of nearly all the petty thieving that has been going on in the city during the past spring and summer. Upton has displayed a very conspicous disregard of the laws of meum et tuum, and the robberies to which he has confessed range away up in the calendar, from the theft of a clothes pin, to driving away with a wagon and team, with a yellow dog under the wagon. Yesterday Sheriff Melching noted some peculiarities about Upton's clothes, which recalled a memory of something in the past, and he casually took a glance into the prisoner's hat. It bore the firm name of Friend's Enterprise. Mr. Melching looked up his notes and found the clothes worn by Upton, to correspond with a description of a suit stolen from John Monninger, St. Joe township. Mr. Monninger's house was entered on July 5, while the family was at Robison park. The farmer was brought in, and he at once identified the clothes as property. Upton was ordered to strip, and every article of clothing he had on had been taken from Monninger. The sheriff provided the prisoner with an outfit, and Mr. Monninger went home with his property, which had evidently not been worn a great deal by Upton. That gentleman confessed to having robbed Monningers's house. Sheriff Melching is on the trail of a buggy and harness, which were stolen from Mr. Joe Bell, of Jefferson township, three weeks ago. Upton was asked about this theft, but he only smiled a significent smile, and refused to talk. The sheriff is confident, however, that Upton, stole the buggy. Mr. Melching is also looking for two watches, stolen by Upton, and will go to Wells county today, with the hope of locating these and some other stolen property.

PETOSKEY LETTER

TO THE EDITOR OF DALY COURIER.

PETOSKEY, MICH., Aug. 11, 1897:—I thought a brief discription of our vacation at Petoskey might interest the readers of the COURIER. We arrived in Petoskey on the 15th of July and it seemed to us that Petoskey was not much cooler than Auburn. We reside by the side of a river and can see Trayers Bay. We take steamer rides on the bay nearly every day. There is not very good bathing here as the bay is too stony, but rowing is the best I can do. When we do bathe they have bathing slippers to wear. My brother, Ralph, reminds me of an ostrich in the sand, for as you all know when an ostrich has its head covered it thinks it is hid. Well, Ralph will stick his eyes and nose in the water and then he claims every bit of him is under. Mamma and Miss Nellie Buckley say they must go down and go in bathing, and they almost get their toes wet but not quite. One day the bay was very rough and we all went down to the dock, as we intended to go to Harbor Springs to Indian School on the steamer, but as you know mamma is a very daring person on water she took the train and Ralph and I went by steamer and the boat rocked worse than a cradle. Ralph got sea-sick and a good many others on board. When mamma goes out on the peir she keeps smack in the middle, and we boys do or we know what to expect. A very peculiar thing in this water that there is not at Auburn, you can see bottom at a depth of 20 of 25 feet. The fishing at present is not very good, as the large fish have all been caught. Ralph worries a great deal that he can not have Mr. I. M. Zent here to play with. My mother does not (while I am around) do much flirting but I cannot say whether she does or not, when I am not present. It is very cool in the evenings here.

Oden, a place several miles from here is situated on Crooked Lake, and to get over my head I would have to go out over a 100 feet from shore. We expect to go to Bear Lake this afternoon. Well I think it is a long and tiresome job to write letters, so I will stop.

Resp. Yours,
CARL BROWN,

Weak Lungs

Hot weather won't cure weak lungs. You may feel better because out of doors more, but the trouble is still there. Don't stop taking your because the weather happens to be warm. If you have a weak throat, a slight hacking cough, or some trouble with the bronchial tubes, summer is the best time to get rid of it. If you are losing flesh there is all the more need of attention. Weakness about the chest and thinness should never go together. One greatly increases the danger of the other. Heal the throat, cure the cough, and strengthen the whole system now. Keep taking Scott's Emulsion all summer.

For sale by all druggists at 50c and $1.00.

No Need of Protection.

Lord George Hamilton, in answer to a question in the house of commons on Tuesday why the government had bought 7,708 tons of rails for the East Indian railway of an American firm, returned a conclusive and interesting answer. He said it was because the American bid was less by 8,675 pounds sterling than the lowest British bid.

That is to say, we can furnish steel rails in the open market at almost exactly a quarter of a cent a pound cheaper than the English can furnish them.

Yet a statute to which President McKinley put his signature, provides that there shall be levied as an import duty upon:

"Railway bars, made of iron and steel, and railroad bars made in part of steel, T. rails and punched iron or steel flat rails, seven-twentieths of 1 cent per pound; railway fishplates or splicebars made of iron or steel, four-tenths of 1 cent per pound."

Which means that the American buyer of steel rails has to pay a third of a cent a pound more for the domestic product than he can buy the foreign product for, even when in the open markent outside the tariff wall, the American producer can undersell the foreign producer a quarter of a cent.

BIRD CANNIBALISM.

An Odd Little Bird of New Zealand, Which Eats Its Dead.

A curious little bird is the weka, which is found in the Alpine region in the South island of New Zealond. It is described by Mr. Arthur P. Harper, B. A., in an account of his explorations. This weka, as soon as he sees your camp pitched, takes possession of it, says an exchange. He neither respects nor fears man and is an incorrigible thief. He eats anything from a cartridge to a member of his own family—for he is a cannibal. "I remember one instance of this," writes our author, "when our dog unfortunately killed a young bird before we could prevent it, which was too small to eat. The parents made a decent show of grief over their loss and then, being quite sure that the little one was dead, they proceeded to eat its still warm remains." The weka fights all comers for undisturbed possession of the camp he has annexed. His histrionic talent is great and he can sham death to perfection. But for the fact that he is a first-rate scavenger he would, to his human host, be an intolerable nuisance. After some weeks of tenderness and self-sacrifice the weka all at once becomes a brtual husband and father. That is when the youngsters have grown up, and, as he thinks, are able to forage for themselves; still, he is unnecessarily harsh, not to say shamelessly selfish. If his place of sojourn be rich in food, he banishes his wife and children; if it be not, he treks else-whither. The egotistic fit lasts until next he becomes a father, and then altruism is hardly the word for his self-renunciation. Let Mr. Harper describe him and his wife: "The parent birds while rearing their young hardly eat anything themselves and grow as poor as a church mouse; everything they find is carried to the youngsters. When a pair has only one chick it is very ludicrous to see them rushing up to it and jostling one another in their eagerness to give it a piece of bacon or bread, and sometimes asking it to try a piece of a jam tin, or tempting it with a choice copper cartridge-case." The weka would appear to be as good a camp companion as one could wish for, with his tameness, impudence and almost human power of expression. He is a bird with small, unformed wings, unable to fly, and varying in size from a partridge to a pheasant.

APPRECIATED PROTECTION.

Just as the good natured looking young bicyclist in the very neat knickerbocker suit came down the steps of the nine-story red brick building and was preparing to mount the finest wheel in the world, the sandy whiskered man with the Russian leather notebook and pencil stub in his right hand stepped forward.

"Pardon me, sir," he said, "but even in the apparently harmless pleasures of wheeling lurks sudden death or serious injury, and often want and distress."

"Perhaps so," said the bicyclist, cordially, pausing for a moment to examine a pedal.

"Sometimes," said the saldy whiskered man, "a man is cut off in the very prime of life and usefulness and leaves his family unprovided for, when a little thought and foresight would have left them plenty. I consider it almost criminal negligence for a man not to insure his life to protect his loved ones. Perhaps you have children?"

"Three," said the bicyclist, taking hold of the handle-bars.

"Is your life insured?"

"No."

"Do you know that over 30 per cent of fatal accidents last year in this city happened to bicycle riders?"

"Wouldn't be surprised."

"Right now, before it is too late, you'd better let me write you a few thousand. I represent some of the best companies in the world. Just think of the comfort, the security in knowing that poverty will not harm the ones you love if you should be taken away. Think of the immense value of life insurance."

"I do," said the bicyclist. "I realize from the bottom of my heart what you say is true."

"Then let me show you some of my special rates. This non-forfeitable"—

"I don't care to insure."

"But, consider, sir, when yau realize the importance"——

"I realize it all right," said the bicyclist, placing one foot on the step. "I've just been in and collected a check for ten thousand my husband was insured for. He scorched into a dray last March. Good morning."

The sandy whiskered man watched the bicyclist skim down the street, and remarked as he leaned against an awning post and chewed his pencil:

"Darn these bicycle suits, any way!"

The Destruction of Sodom.

An attempt to give a scientific account of the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah has been made by Dr. C. Diener of Vienna. A study of the peculiarities of the Dead Sea basin, and of the site of the overwhelmed "cities of the plain," leads him to conclude that a violent earthquake must at some time have occurred there, which affected the entire basin, and was accompanied by the inundation of the shores. An old volcanic crater on the eastern side of the sea was, he thinks, simultaneously thrown into the eruption through the disturbance produced by the earthquake. These occurrences would supply the principal phenomena mentioned in the Scriptural account.

The Montpelier Shoot.

As we had a garbled, statement of this affair and have not till now been able to get a full account, we publish here the full report as given in the Montpelier papers. Auburn men were not in the first day's shoot, so we give only the second. The Leader says:

In the second shoot, prize $25, A. B. Steel smashed 14 out of 15 targets, while George Yesbera was close second with the lucky 13. In the next Steel dropped away down breaking only four plates as the ten sailed away. Yesbera was right and tied Streator and Tarney for first gold, 8 crocks apiece.

Steele was simply fooling them, for in event 4, he smashed glassware right and left. Only three out of twenty got away from him, Streator second with 16 and Shamberger third with 15. Ten blue rocks left the trap in front of Greer in the next course, a consolation shoot, and each one sought earth again in a very attenuated and powdery condition. This was the first straight score made, but the performance was afterward duplicated by Yesbera, Spross and Beckner and twice by Tarney. Zeiters, Butler and Pipher did well in several shoots, but it seemed to be off days with Freeland. Yesbera shot steadily throughout both days and carried off several neat little purses. In the Williams county shoot, Pipher took first with 9, Yesbera and Zeiters second with 7, and Shamberger third with 6. Altogether the first shooting tournament of Montpelier was a grand success.

BAD MANAGEMENT.

The Board of Commissioners at the session a week ago, settled with all the corporation school boards and township trustees, except Waterloo. The board of that town was unable to make a proper settlement. Among other defects, it was found that they had for a year or two allowed their tuition fund for paying teachers to run way down below their needs so that they have not been having money enough to pay their teachers. But the teachers had to be paid, and so in order to get the money to do this, they issued orders against this fund. This they are not authorized to do. The most liberal construction of that part of the statute is, that when they hire their teachers, they must have on hand, together with what they will receive during the year, enough money to pay these wages. Thus, if they will need $1,800 and they have $700 on hand, and know they will receive $1,900 more during the coming year, they are all right, for then they can pay the year's wages and have a fair balance left to carry over to the next year. Of course, a larger balance would be better, and the most prudent trustees carry over a larger balance in this fund. And it is very unwise to allow this fund to get into any other condition. The Waterloo board will find this a very costly mistake. They can deal unwisely with any other fund better than with the tuition fund. Now, we understand they have only $83 to start the new year with. This will not begin to pay a month's wages, and they will get no more from the county treasury till about December. In the meantime, what is to become of their schools? How are their teachers to exist? They have no right to even contract with a teacher, unless they have on hand, or know they will receive during the year, at least money enough to pay him. Where will they find the law for charging the tuition fund with the interest on borrowed money? If they let their levy run low in order to be popular, they will learn that tax payers are willing to pay for school expenses, but not the additional and needless expense of interest, nor suffer a loss of time in their school terms. And now while we are discussing this, we remember that the Waterloo Press has now and then hinted that Auburn and even DeKalb county, ought to go into the hands of a receiver. Suppose we suggest a receiver for the Waterloo school corporation.

THE NOXIOUS WEEDS LAW.

A Misapprehension as to Its Provisions and Effect.

(The Fort Wayne Sentinel)

Much has been said and written of late concerning an act of she last legislature providing for the cutting down and destroying of briers, thistles, burs, docks and other noxious weeds by owners of lands along public roads, says the Miami county Sentinel. Notwithstanding that this particular act has frequently been spoken of, it is not clearly understood by the majority of people, for without a careful reading, one is apt to place a common sense construction on it, which is the wrong constructions as it happens. People generally understand that the law requires all property owners to destroy the noxious weeds growing on public highways the length of their lands, between July 1st and August 20th. Most people, by this time, are also aware that persons so employed shall be entitled to $1.25 for each day of eight hours in length so employed, which amount shall be deducted from his road tax.

Section three of this act is not so well understood and this is the portion of the act which many newspapers of the state have wrongly interpreted, and hence the farmers and others who do not have access to the acts of 1897 have been misled. In case a man neglects to cut his thistles, briers, etc., by the 20th of August the supervisor of said diartict shall get someone else to do it, but right here, let it be said, not at the expense of the man who failed to do his duty, as nine persons out of every ten suppose. If A is called on to cut B's weeds and it takes him a day to do it, he cannot draw on B for his pay, but simply has that amount deducted from his (A's) road tax. A must be a resident property owner of said district, otherwise the supervisor cannot employ him to destroy B's weeds. The law does not provide for the punishment of B in any manner for its violation and hence it is a dead letter. If A has any interest in the condition of the roads proper, he will insist on being permitted to work out his road taxes in a manner that will result in most good for himself and the public in general. Instead of destroying B's weeds he will insist on improving the road bed. It will thus be seen that the road supervisor has a difficult job on his hands. He can employ no one but a property owner and if he can find no property owner, in his district who is willing to cut and destroy his neighbors weeds, the weeds will have to go on growing, that's all. The law doesn't amount to as much as the paper on which it can be written and it will not be enforced for the reason that it has nothing behind it to enforce it.

AN ALL AROUND THIEF.

(Fort Wayne Journal)

Sheriff Melching believes that, in his capture of Clarence Upton, he has run down the author of nearly all the petty thieving that has been going on in the city during the past spring and summer. Upton has displayed a very conspicous disregard of the laws of meum et tuum, and the robberies to which he has confessed range away up in the calendar, from the theft of a clothes pin, to driving away with a wagon and team, with a yellow dog under the wagon. Yesterday Sheriff Melching noted some peculiarities about Upton's clothes, which recalled a memory of something in the past, and he casually took a glance into the prisoner's hat. It bore the firm name of Friend's Enterprise. Mr. Melching looked up his notes and found the clothes worn by Upton, to correspond with a description of a suit stolen from John Monninger, St. Joe township. Mr. Monninger's house was entered on July 5, while the family was at Robison park. The farmer was brought in, and he at once identified the clothes as property. Upton was ordered to strip, and every article of clothing he had on had been taken from Monninger. The sheriff provided the prisoner with an outfit, and Mr. Monninger went home with his property, which had evidently not been worn a great deal by Upton. That gentleman confessed to having robbed Monningers's house. Sheriff Melching is on the trail of a buggy and harness, which were stolen from Mr. Joe Bell, of Jefferson township, three weeks ago. Upton was asked about this theft, but he only smiled a significent smile, and refused to talk. The sheriff is confident, however, that Upton, stole the buggy. Mr. Melching is also looking for two watches, stolen by Upton, and will go to Wells county today, with the hope of locating these and some other stolen property.

PETOSKEY, MICH., Aug. 11, 1897:—I thought a brief discription of our vacation at Petoskey might interest the readers of the COURIER. We arrived in Petoskey on the 15th of July and it seemed to us that Petoskey was not much cooler than Auburn. We reside by the side of a river and can see Trayers Bay. We take steamer rides on the bay nearly every day. There is not very good bathing here as the bay is too stony, but rowing is the best I can do. When we do bathe they have bathing slippers to wear. My brother, Ralph, reminds me of an ostrich in the sand, for as you all know when an ostrich has its head covered it thinks it is hid. Well, Ralph will stick his eyes and nose in the water and then he claims every bit of him is under. Mamma and Miss Nellie Buckley say they must go down and go in bathing, and they almost get their toes wet but not quite. One day the bay was very rough and we all went down to the dock, as we intended to go to Harbor Springs to Indian School on the steamer, but as you know mamma is a very daring person on water she took the train and Ralph and I went by steamer and the boat rocked worse than a cradle. Ralph got sea-sick and a good many others on board. When mamma goes out on the peir she keeps smack in the middle, and we boys do or we know what to expect. A very peculiar thing in this water that there is not at Auburn, you can see bottom at a depth of 20 of 25 feet. The fishing at present is not very good, as the large fish have all been caught. Ralph worries a great deal that he can not have Mr. I. M. Zent here to play with. My mother does not (while I am around) do much flirting but I cannot say whether she does or not, when I am not present. It is very cool in the evenings here.

Oden, a place several miles from here is situated on Crooked Lake, and to get over my head I would have to go out over a 100 feet from shore. We expect to go to Bear Lake this afternoon. Well I think it is a long and tiresome job to write letters, so I will stop.

Resp. Yours,
CARL BROWN,

Weak Lungs

Hot weather won't cure weak lungs. You may feel better because out of doors more, but the trouble is still there. Don't stop taking your because the weather happens to be warm. If you have a weak throat, a slight hacking cough, or some trouble with the bronchial tubes, summer is the best time to get rid of it. If you are losing flesh there is all the more need of attention. Weakness about the chest and thinness should never go together. One greatly increases the danger of the other. Heal the throat, cure the cough, and strengthen the whole system now. Keep taking Scott's Emulsion all summer.

For sale by all druggists at 50c and $1.00.

No Need of Protection.

Lord George Hamilton, in answer to a question in the house of commons on Tuesday why the government had bought 7,708 tons of rails for the East Indian railway of an American firm, returned a conclusive and interesting answer. He said it was because the American bid was less by 8,675 pounds sterling than the lowest British bid.

That is to say, we can furnish steel rails in the open market at almost exactly a quarter of a cent a pound cheaper than the English can furnish them.

Yet a statute to which President McKinley put his signature, provides that there shall be levied as an import duty upon:

"Railway bars, made of iron and steel, and railroad bars made in part of steel, T. rails and punched iron or steel flat rails, seven-twentieths of 1 cent per pound; railway fishplates or splicebars made of iron or steel, four-tenths of 1 cent per pound."

Which means that the American buyer of steel rails has to pay a third of a cent a pound more for the domestic product than he can buy the foreign product for, even when in the open markent outside the tariff wall, the American producer can undersell the foreign producer a quarter of a cent.

BIRD CANNIBALISM.

An Odd Little Bird of New Zealand, Which Eats Its Dead.

A curious little bird is the weka, which is found in the Alpine region in the South island of New Zealond. It is described by Mr. Arthur P. Harper, B. A., in an account of his explorations. This weka, as soon as he sees your camp pitched, takes possession of it, says an exchange. He neither respects nor fears man and is an incorrigible thief. He eats anything from a cartridge to a member of his own family—for he is a cannibal. "I remember one instance of this," writes our author, "when our dog unfortunately killed a young bird before we could prevent it, which was too small to eat. The parents made a decent show of grief over their loss and then, being quite sure that the little one was dead, they proceeded to eat its still warm remains." The weka fights all comers for undisturbed possession of the camp he has annexed. His histrionic talent is great and he can sham death to perfection. But for the fact that he is a first-rate scavenger he would, to his human host, be an intolerable nuisance. After some weeks of tenderness and self-sacrifice the weka all at once becomes a brtual husband and father. That is when the youngsters have grown up, and, as he thinks, are able to forage for themselves; still, he is unnecessarily harsh, not to say shamelessly selfish. If his place of sojourn be rich in food, he banishes his wife and children; if it be not, he treks else-whither. The egotistic fit lasts until next he becomes a father, and then altruism is hardly the word for his self-renunciation. Let Mr. Harper describe him and his wife: "The parent birds while rearing their young hardly eat anything themselves and grow as poor as a church mouse; everything they find is carried to the youngsters. When a pair has only one chick it is very ludicrous to see them rushing up to it and jostling one another in their eagerness to give it a piece of bacon or bread, and sometimes asking it to try a piece of a jam tin, or tempting it with a choice copper cartridge-case." The weka would appear to be as good a camp companion as one could wish for, with his tameness, impudence and almost human power of expression. He is a bird with small, unformed wings, unable to fly, and varying in size from a partridge to a pheasant.

APPRECIATED PROTECTION.

Just as the good natured looking young bicyclist in the very neat knickerbocker suit came down the steps of the nine-story red brick building and was preparing to mount the finest wheel in the world, the sandy whiskered man with the Russian leather notebook and pencil stub in his right hand stepped forward.

"Pardon me, sir," he said, "but even in the apparently harmless pleasures of wheeling lurks sudden death or serious injury, and often want and distress."

"Perhaps so," said the bicyclist, cordially, pausing for a moment to examine a pedal.

"Sometimes," said the saidy whiskered man, "a man is cut off in the very prime of life and usefulness and leaves his family unprovided for, when a little thought and foresight would have left them plenty. I consider it almost criminal negligence for a man not to insure his life to protect his loved ones. Perhaps you have children?"

"Three," said the bicyclist, taking hold of the handle-bars.

"Is your life insured?"

"No."

"Do you know that over 30 per cent of fatal accidents last year in this city happened to bicycle riders?"

"Wouldn't be surprised."

"Right now, before it is too late, you'd better let me write you a few thousand. I represent some of the best companies in the world. Just think of the comfort, the security in knowing that poverty will not harm the ones you love if you should be taken away. Think of the immense value of life insurance."

"I do," said the bicyclist. "I realize from the bottom of my heart what you say is true."

"Then let me show you some of my special rates. This non-forfeitable"—

"I don't care to insure."

"But, consider, sir, when yau realize the importance"——

"I realize it all right," said the bicyclist, placing one foot on the step. "I've just been in and collected a check for ten thousand my husband was insured for. He scorched into a dray last March. Good morning."

The sandy whiskered man watched the bicyclist skim down the street, and remarked as he leaned against an awning post and chewed his pencil:

"Darn these bicycle suits, any way!"

The Destruction of Sodom.

An attempt to give a scientific account of the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah has been made by Dr. C. Diener of Vienna. A study of the peculiarities of the Dead Sea basin, and of the site of the overwhelmed "cities of the plain," leads him to conclude that a violent earthquake must at some time have occurred there, which affected the entire basin, and was accompanied by the inundation of the shores. An old volcanic crater on the eastern side of the sea was, he thinks, simultaneously thrown into the eruption through the disturbance produced by the earthquake. These occurrences would supply the principal phenomena mentioned in the Scriptural account.

Just Out of College.

"Yes," said the young man just out of college, "I am willing to do anything to make a living—that is, of course," he added, "in any position that brings in at least $2,500 salary."—Somerville Journal.

The Montpelier Shoot.

As we had a garbled, statement of this affair and have not till now been able to get a full account, we publish here the full report as given in the Montpelier papers. Auburn men were not in the first day's shoot, so we give only the second. The Leader says:

In the second shoot, prize $25, A. B. Steel smashed 14 out of 15 targets, while George Yesbera was close second with the lucky 13. In the next Steel dropped away down breaking only four plates as the ten sailed away. Yesbera was right and tied Streator and Tarney for first gold, 8 crocks apiece.

Steele was simply fooling them, for in event 4, he smashed glassware right and left. Only three out of twenty got away from him, Streator second with 16 and Shambarger third with 15. Ten blue rocks left the trap in front of Greer in the next course, a consolation shoot, and each one sought earth again in a very attenuated and powdery condition. This was the first straight score made, but the performance was afterward duplicated by Yesbera, Spross and Beckner and twice by Tarney. Zeiters, Butler and Pipher did well in several shoots, but it seemed to be off days with Freeland. Yesbera shot steadily throughout both days and carried off several neat little purses. In the Williams county shoot, Pipher took first with 9, Yesbera and Zeiters second with 7, and Shambarger third with 6. Altogether the first shooting tournament of Montpelier was a grand success.

The Institute.

Thursday's Daily.

Everything is going on finely, and even today, with the matrimonial reunion going on across the street the attendance and attention are good. Prof. Aley and Prof. Charman, and Mrs. Cammack divide the time, and give instructions that is very interesting and valuable. They have won golden opinions. The lecture of Mr. Headly last evening, was well attended and of course the lecture was good, though the audience were better suited with Dr. Bristol. Tonight the lecture by Mrs. Commack will be in a new field and as she always interesting, we look to see a full house. There is no admittance but a voluntarily collection will be taken to assist the W. C. T. U. in defraying expense. Supt. Coe, has shown himself a master of the situation, and has made this, his first institute, a perfect success. The high line of success reached by Mr. Merica, will be continued under his administration. There is no question about this. Tomorrw closes the week's session.

Friday's Daily.

Today closes the institute of 1897. and a very pleasant and and profitable one it has proved. The weather in the main, has been very agreeable, and the ladies could dress as tastefully as they pleased. And the teachers seemed to have made up their minds to stay and get all the good and all they enjoyment to be had. The last lecture was that of Mrs. Cammack, last evening. It was in a comparatively new field, and being illustrated with maps, gave one a practical idea of the evils resulting to the physical system from an indulgence in either beer, strong drink or tobacco. Surely no teacher will feel like using either after hearing the very clear statements she made. The singing was very fine, being the work of W. B. Brown, Vest Zimmerman and Geo. Quince. At the closing song, a number of skillful young ladies glided around among the audience, and in about the time it takes to tell it, they had presented their "baskets," collected from churches and got a collection of small change to help the W. C. T. U. to defray the expense of Mrs. Cammack's work. These girls ought to be made deconesses in their several churches.

The work of today, went on very much as usual, though of course the attendance was not equal to that of yesterday. At 3:30 they adjourned and went to their homes with strength renewed and a feeling that they had attended a pleasant meeting. The total enrollment was 222.

NOTES.

They had a picture of the teachers taken yesterday afternoon, by Hoffman which is very fine.

We found the young man who quietly had a chew of fine cut on the sly. They are gradually becoming scarce, we are pleased to state.

We also talked with the young man who persists in saying "I have saw," and the young lady, who believes it proper to use "I have went and have came," but the number of such is diminishing, thanks to thought, observation and study.

Teachers are very much as all the rest of us used to be. We noticed one evening a boy and his girl start in a hurry from the Gandy block to go across to the institute. They went across to the public square, turned west on the Esplanade to Main-st thence south to Ninth-st, thence east to Cedar-st, thence north along the line of said street to the place of beginning," Then they went to the Opera House and listened to the lecture.

And in conclusion the COURIER still thinks that the girl teachers are much prettier than the boy teachers.

KILLED!

By a Lake Shore Passengertrain Three miles West of Waterloo.

Thursday's Daily.

At 1 o'cluck this afternoo, Orvil Triplet, eldest son of Al Triplet, who lives three miles west of Waterloo, and grandson of Charley Triplet, of Waterloo, was killed by the Lake Shore passenger train. He, with a sister and brother, attempted to cross the railroad just after a freight had passed, and not noticing the passenger train, Orvil walked in front of the iron monster and was killed instantly.

TAKE IN YOUR HITCHING POSTS.

Thursday's Daily.

The iron business seems to be picking up. At least this is what Fred Yesbera thinks. Last night Mrs. Yesbera was awakened by a strange noise in front of the house, and, on looking out, saw a couple of men trying to pull up their hitching post. It is a little iron man, a cute affair, and it is supposee they wanted just that kind of a one for themselves. Mrs. Yesbera called to them to stop, but they paid no attention. Then she woke Fred and started down stairs, followed later by Fred, who wanted to see his wife scare the fellows before he interfered. She did scare them, and they jumped into a buggy and lit out. And the little cast iron jockey still defies burglars as of yore.

The Search Light.

Friday's Daily.

Last evening the persons in charge of the search light now being arranged for the Auburn Carnival, made a first test of its working. It was put upon the roof of the Davenport Block, and was put in operation very successfully. It was turned in various directions, throwing an intense light on every point towards which it was thown. It will be operated frequently so that the men in charge will be able to use it propeyly at the Carnival. It is to be used then in showing various pictures and scenes, groups and allegorical figures, and will be something entirely new. In fact many peple never have seen even the search light itself.

AND HE WINKS.

It is fun to see the number of people who stop at G. H. Yesbera's store to admire the life-like little darkey that stands in the window and winks at you. He is a comical little fellow and proves a drawing card. We don't know how he winks, but suppose he is like Coxey—has wheels in his head. But you almost feel as if he knows what he is doing. Stop a minute and take a look at him.

Important Plant.

The notice of the bedspring factory that we publish to-day is a more important matter than many are aware of. The proprietor, who also is the patentee, has pushed the making and selling of them into distant parts of the world, especially into the Dominion of Canada and into Great Britain. At least 2,000 men are at present engaged in the making or sale. Those who are posted in these things, say it is an excellent article.

THEY PROVOKED.

Lawyers sometimes quarrel in earnest. In witness whereof, we quote a case that was tried yesterday before 'Squire Walter. Attorney Mountz of Garrett, accused Attorney Sharpless of the same place, of collecting his fee in a case not yet begun, which we suppose is improper. Attorney Sharpless claims the idea arose from some oversight. So he called Mountz a liar, and Mountz struck him. They were separrted, however without further legal blooodshed. Mountz we suppose felt a little guilty and he went before a justice, plead guilty, and paid his fine. Then the local deputy prosecutor, Mr. Stoner had Sharpless arrested for "provoke." Sharpless took a change of venue to 'Squire Walter of this place, and the case came up yesterday. L. J. Gengler of Garrett and D. M. Link of Auburn, were attorneys for Sharpless, while the Prosecutor, was best man for Mountz. They had a jury composed of D. C. Caruth, J. J. VanAuken, W. S. Purdy, E. C. Foltz, E. T. Cochran, Sam Miller, Wes Lahnum, Mr. Bush, from Wilmington, and others whose names we did not get. It was a hot case, and the jury wrestled over the matter all the evening. And finally they found they could not agree. Ten were for convicting Sharpless on the charge of "provoke" and two for aquittal. Neither side would back down, and they were finally discharged. We talked with one of them and he very sensibly said he thought both should have been fined.

Horses Strayed or Stolen.

Tuesday night two horses belonging to Christian Barth, who resides about 3 miles southeast of Waterloo, either strayed away or were stolen. They were probably stolen, as farm horses are not apt to stray out of the neighborhood, and Mr. Barth's folks have looked all over that vicinity, but up to this, Friday morning, have heard nothing of them. This morning, Mrs. Barth came the the COURIER office and gave the information, and we request any one who knows of such stray horses, to get word to them. They are about ten or twelve years old, a black mare with white hind feet.. and the other a a sorrel gelding. She was going also to put the matter in the hands of the sheriff, in hopes he might be able to get some trace of them.

HORSES FOUND.

Saturday afternoon Curtis Watt, who resides a mile and a half north of Concord, came to this office and reported that he had found the horses belonging to Christian Barth. It appears that on Tuesday night, the same night they were supposed to be stolen, a Mr. Steel who lives near Stephen Lutz in Concord township, saw two horses going by in the road, between eleven and twelve o'clock at night. They were going north when first seen, but a little later on, they went back south. It is supposed they finally went past Mr. Watt's woods, which is used as a pasture, but the fence happened to be down and they went through the gap into the woods, and finally into Mr. Watt's stubble field, which comes up to the barn. Later on they appeard up near the barn, and Mr. Watt saw them. He at first supposed they belonged to som of the neighbors, and would be called for. But a day or so found them still there. He thought then he would go to see the township trustee, but then remembered that gentleman would likely be at the teachers' institute. He soon after heard that Mrs. Barth had been at Stephen Lutz, who is a neighbor of Watt, inquiring for her horses. Watt at once went to see Lutz, and finding it pretty certain they belonged to Barth went up there Saturday, and told them. They were pleased to get track of the lost team. They went the next morning and got them home. It is still a matter of doubt whether they were not stolen, and then turned loose when the thieves had no langer any use for them.

THE FAIR SALE.

Saturday's Daily.

The D. W. Fair farm property was sold to-day, as advertised in a sheriff's sale in a suit brought by Albert Robbins for the Fair bondsmen. It was bid off by Mr. Fair's son, Carl Fair, for $1,510. This is considered a very good price under the circumstances, as there is a previous mortgage of $1,000 in favor of Philo Lockwood, and besides there is reserved Mrs. Fair's one-third interest. The result will give each bondsman about $50, and help him out to that extent.

EARLY AUBURN DAILIES.

W. B. Campbell writes us from Anderson some comments on our article about Auburn's first dailies. In this he reminds us that the Dispatch published a daily at the several fairs Auburn had, a fact we distinctly remember, though at the time of writing our article it had escaped our memory. The Dispatch on these occasions put out 5,000 copies, 1,000 a day, we believe. They came out a little better than the COURIER of a few years before, and cleared some money on the venture, chiefly from the advertising.

Mr. Campbell adds in a postscript that they have moved into their new house, one they have just built, and that it is just as nice a one as Auburn has. We are pleased to hear of this evidence of their good fortune. He also speaks of his new typesetting machine, which is proving a great success in its "chosen profession," as one might say. Bro. Campbell seems to have made a fortunate move in selling the Dispatch and purchasing the Anderson Herald. We hope so.

THE NEWS RECORD.

SUMMARY OF A WEEK'S HAPPENINGS.

The Latest News as Flashed Over the Wires from All Parts of the World—Regarding Politics, Religion, Casualties, Commerce, and Industry.

FIVE ARE DYING

And Twenty-Five More Are Badly Injured in a Wreck at Lima, Ohio.

Lima special: A freight train on the Lake Erie and Western crashed into an excursion train on the Lima Northern, at the crossing, less than two miles north of here. Thirty people were injured, and five of them are in a dying condition.

The excursion train was loaded with Lima people, coming from Toledo, where they had spent the day. The two railroads cross a little over a mile north of the city. At night there is no crossing watchman stationed there, and trains are supposed to stop for the crossing to avoid accidents. It is not known whether the engineer of the freight train neglected his duty or not, but at any rate he failed to stop, and his engine plunged into the passenger train, which was on the crossing.

All the passenger train had passed save the two rear coaches, and into these the freight train plunged, and in a moment there was a pile of wreckage, from which came groans and shrieks of agony. A messenger hurried to the city, and every physican and ambulance in Lima was hurried to the scene of the wreck.

At this hour it is known that thirty or more are injured, and at least five of them are dying.

Low Handle Bars Barred.

In revising the police regulations regarding bicyclists, the District of Columbia Commissioners have dealt a blow to the obnoxious low handle bars and humpback scorchers. They have made a rule that all riders shall ride with their heads up. Public sentiment and the good sense of individual riders had paved the way for the Commissioners' action. An inspection of 200 bicycles stacked in the basement of the Treasury Department disclosed only six remnants of the ramshorn handle bars era. The rest had the handles even with or above the line of the saddle.

Revival in a Distillery.

Lexington (Ky.) special: Rev. Rutherford Douglas, of this county, has just closed a revival meeting in the mashroom of E. J. Curley's big distillery at Camp Nelson. The mash tubs were taken out and stored in the distillery proper, which is not now in operation. Simple board seats were constructed, and Rev. Mr. Douglas had an audience room capable of seating nearly 500 people. The meeting was the first of the kind in Kentucky.

An Illinois Lynching.

An unknown tramp was lynched by a crowd of infuriated farmers, near Manheim, a village west of Chicago. The tramp assulted a woman, beat her in a terrible manner, and then fled, but the farmers, attracted by the woman's cries, were soon in pursuit. They captured the tramp, after a hard chase, and immediately strung him up to the nearest tree.

A Dangerous Anarchist.

Paris special: A man named Preier was arrested on the train in which President Faure arrived from Havre. The prisoner was found to have a loaded revolver in his pocket and is known to be a dangerous anarchist who has served a term of two years' imprisonment for having in his possession an infernal machine.

Appealed to the Pope.

New York special: Mrs. Julia Ward Howe has appealed to the Pope in a letter asking him to interfere to save Evangelina Cisneros, the Cuban girl, who is about to be transported to the Spanish dungeons of Ceuta. Mrs. Jefferson Davis has written a letter to the Queen of Spain, making a similar request.

Could't Find Him.

A report from Consul General Lee states that he can find no trace of J. R. Judkins. Citizens of Ohio had asked the State Department to see if anything of him could be learned, stating that he was a physician of Blanchester, that State, and went to Cuba in 1892. Consul General Lee will continue to prosecute his inquiries.

Eckels Report Denied.

An official of the Colonial Trust Company of New York authoritatively denies the report sent out from Washington that Comptroller of the Currency James H. Eckels, upon the expiration of his term as a Federal officer, would replace R. P. Flower as president of the company.

Joy Turned to Woe.

John Alberson of Atchison, Kan., is one of the few who returned from the Klondyke with wealth. But, though he got riches, he lost wife and children. In the fall of 1894 he went to Alaska, leaving his wife and two children. During his absence they all died.

LEGION OF HONOR FIGHT.

Papers Filed at Boston Asking for Appointment of Receiver.

It is announced that papers have been filed in the United States court at Boston on behalf of James McNamara of Jersey City for the appointment of a receiver for the American Legion of Honor. The petitioner asks that the receiver shall take charge of all moneys paid in as assessments by members of the order, and that the Legion of Honor be enjoined from separating moneys received by it from former assessments, as is now done. The bill sets forth that when McNamara became a member of the Legion of Honor, each life insurance certificate was a charge upon all moneys received from assessments, and the number of deaths regulated the number of assessments ordered; that Dec. 1, 1896, a change was made, and persons holding certificates were divided into two classes; that the money received from each class was held separate and charged only with the payment of certificates in the class to which the money belonged, thereby changing the object of the original contracts without the assent of the members who made the contracts, and also increasing the number of assessments. The filing of this petition for the appointment of a receiver for the American Legion of Honor is a continuation of the old fight which has been made by some of the members against the order. They contended that the assessments were made so frequently they were unable to bear the burden. The American Legion of Honor was incorporated in Massachusetts to carry on the business of life insurance upon a mutual benefit plan.

MISTAKE IN CROP ESTIMATES.

Department Methods of Collecting Data May Be Changed.

The Department of Agriculture officials have had their attention called very frequently of late to the wide discrepancy between commercial and official estimates of the wheat crop. The official estimates indicate approximately a crop of 450,000,000 bushels, while commercial estimates range from 500,000,000 to 550,000,000. It is very plain that there will have to be a radical change in the governmental methods which now obtain of collecting crop statistics or they will be entirely discredited in every quarter. The crop reporters of the Department of Agriculture are nearly all farmers, and therefore directly interested in placing a low estimate on production. Year after year the shipping and milling results show that the department estimates have been too low, oftentimes ridiculously so, but nevertheless the same system of gathering data is in force now that obtained fifteen years ago. It is altogether probable at the next session of Congress a new plan will be vigorously discussed, and it is barely possible that the crop-reporting bureau may be entirely reorganized.

SAVED ON A CRATER'S RIM.

Exploring Parting Caught on Mount Tacoma in a Storm.

J. E. Mitchell and wife, Miss Jeane McFarlane and Sergeant Will A. A. Hall were nearly starved and frozen to death at the top of Mount Tacoma, Wash., last week. They were held prisoners for three nights and four days by a storm. As the party was ascending the mountain the storm gathered and increased to a hurricane just as they scrambled over the rim of the crater into a place of shelter. They remained huddled together during the first night and not an eye closed in sleep. The next day an attempt was made by the men to prepare to escape, but the wind blew them back from the crater's rim. The second night was passed in a sheltered ice cavern, with the sulphur-laden steam rising on all sides. Prunes and hard tack, softened by the storm, was the bill of fare, and before the morning of the fourth day every morsel had been devoured. In addition to the prospect of freezing to death the party was face to face with starvation. The storm broke on the fourth day and all escaped.

Passes Cannot Be Crossed.

In the mad rush for Klondyke gold men are already starving to death. Of the thousands now hastening to Alaska many will never return. Their bones will bleach under the snows of the deadly passes. Gold there is in plenty. But it is not easily obtained, and this is not all. Starvation, disease, treacherous Indians, desperadoes who will commit murder for a biscuit, frightful storms and all the perils of an unknown, inhospitable and barren country await the inexperienced. Men who are abandoning their homes to join the mad scramble for the new El Dorado should remember that once they have passed over the gang plank of the Alaskan steamer there is no way of getting back unless they turn about immediately while they have money for transportation and strength to clamber into the boat. Over the entrances to White and Chilkoot passes there might well be strung the legend, "Who enters here leaves hope behind," for it is the sheerest luck if a fair percentage of those going in ever return to civilization or live to see fruition of their wild hopes. George L. Fish, a prominent grocer of Oakland, Cal., made the trip in order to see whether there was any chance for rushing supplies into the Klondyke this fall. He found the outlook hopeless. He said: "I advise men and women to stay away from Dyea and Skagaway. The day I left Dyea there were three funerals. Two were those of young men who had attempted to cross Dyea river. The last funeral was that of a young man who had reached the summit of Chilkoot pass. He was entirely out of provisions, and, goaded to desperation by starvation, he stole a side of bacon. He was detected by two of the party from whose outfit he stole, and was shot to death. An inquest was held and the verdict was justifiable homicide. At least 5,000 people are camped at Dyea and Skagaway, and the majority will remain there through the winter. Starvation and death will stalk among them. There are many lawless adventurers in the two little towns on the bleak coast; men and women of a stripe who will not hesitate at the commission of any crime when money and food become scarce. There are about 3,500 from Skagaway road to Dawson through White pass and down to Lake Bennett. It is impossible to get through the pass and there is a swamp of seven or eight miles to cross before reaching Lake Bennett."

Migration to Alaska Checked.

During the past week the Klondyke fever has abated somewhat in San Francisco, Cal., owing probably to the discouraging reports received from Dyea. There are plenty of people who announce their intention of trying the Chilkoot route in the spring, and of those who are anxious to go at once a large proportion seem disposed to travel via St. Michael's and up the Yukon. Promoters of expeditions by this route are ready with profuse assurances that the trip can be made before the closing of navigation, but in all cases they are careful not to bind themselves in any way to take passengers through this fall. At the offices of the steamship companies it is reported that the inquiry for tickets is diminishing.

Imports into France.

The official returns just published show that the imports into France for the last seven months were 20,217,000 francs below those of 1896. On the other hand, the exports foot up 177,637,000 francs more than during the same period of 1896.

Land of Great Riches.

Postmaster General Gary has received a copy of the Alaska Mining Record of Juneau of Aug. 4, in which is an interesting sketch of the gold mining regions and advice to the incoming miners. The article says that the gold-bearing regions have never been fully prospected, but enough is known to demonstrate that it is the richest gold-bearing belt on the globe. The valley of the Yukon and its tributaries constitutes, it says, one vast gold field, where scarcely a shovelful of earth can be found that will not show the color of the precious metal. But it also calls attention to the difficulties which lie in the path of those who come to seek for gold. "In the first place," it says, "whoever comes to Alaska must be prepared to support himself for at least two years. The development of the country is such that its present population is fully up to every industrial requirement. In the field of industrial labor, every position is filled. The professions are fully represented; the labor market is glutted. Artisan and mechanic find no opening here. Mining and prospecting alone remain open to the newcomer, and he must find his own field, and must be prepared for self-support until he has found it. He cannot depend on his own labor for support in any direction, for the field is fully occupied."

BOMB SCARE AT PARIS.

Exploded on Rue Lafayette After President Faure Had Passed.

The departure of President Faure from Paris on his visit to the czar at St. Petersburg was marked by a scene of greatest excitement, accompanied by the circulation of the wildest kind of rumors. After his departure a bomb was exploded along the route the president had followed, and although no damage was done, and in spite of the fact that nobody was hurt, the most intense excitement prevailed for a long time afterward, and the sensational reports had it that those who exploded the bomb had intended an outrage of a more serious nature. The president received an ovation from the public when he started on his journey to Russia. Ten minutes after the president's departure, while the crowds were returning along the route traversed by M. Faure, a bomb exploded at the corner of the Boulevard Magenta and the Rue Lafayette, in front of the Restaurant Duval. The report caused a panic in the neighborhood, and all sorts of wild stories were circulated, based on the statements attributed to anarchists, that their next effort would be an attempt upon the life of President Faure. Upon investigation by the police, however, it developed that the explosion caused little damage and that nobody was hurt. The bomb was of cylindrical form, was covered with yellow paper, and appears to have contained a black substance, possibly coarse gunpowder, mixed with large-headed nails, similar to those usually found in poorly constructed infernal machines, used by the less intelligent class of anarchists. Fragments of the bomb were taken to the prefecture of police, where they were submitted to a thorough examination upon the part of experts, who pronounced the bomb to have been a comparatively harmless affair. Scraps of paper were found about the scene of the explosion inscribed "Vive la Liberte!" and "Vive la Boulogne!" apparently indicating that the author of the explosion was the same individual who caused the recent explosions in the Bois de Boulogue and on the Place de la Concorde.

Strikers Invade Coffeen.

The oft-repeated threats of the crusaders who are trying to induce coal miners to strike to force their way into the village of Coffeen, Ill., were carried out amid great excitement Tuesday afternoon. They formed eight abreast, 400 strong, the Staunton band of eleven pieces bringing up the rear. Sheriff Randle placed twenty deputy sheriffs, armed with muskets and with fixed bayonets, across the highway. The other deputies were stationed to guard the mine, where 100 men were at work getting out coal. President Traylor ordered the column of marchers to halt. With regular step they marched on, brushing the village president aside without ceremony. The strikers in the front ranks grasped their guns and the column by sheer force of numbers pushed the deputies, many of whom were considerably frightened, from their places. Sheriff Randle asked for troops, but was again refused.

Coal at Five Cents a Bushel.

The price of coal, which is reported to have advanced at almost every point in the country east of the Missouri river, and at all Missouri and Mississippi river points, since the great strike began seven weeks ago, shows no material increase at Pittsburg. The ruling figure in barge lots is 5 to 5¼ cents per bushel. There is no shortage of the supply and the demand is only ordinary.

Ferry Boat Capsizes.

A dispatch from Dresden announces that a ferry steamer plying between the old and new towns was capsized by the wash of a large steamer and more than fifty persons were thrown into the water.

Bicycle Rider's Mysteriously Meets Death.

The dead body of Maxwell Van Eaton Potter beside his bicycle, was found near Schenck's station on the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton Railway.

Makes a Divorce Record.

WHEAT CLIMBS HIGH

Cereal Advances Five Cents in Twenty-four Hours.

REACHES 88½ CENTS.

Sudden Spurt Due to Cable Reports of Small Yields.

Highest Price Since 1892—Short Crop at Home and Scarcity Abroad Make the Market Active—Veteran Operators Think It Will Keep on Climbing Upward—Say It Will Be Cheap at a Dollar—Pandemonium in the Pit.

September wheat sold at 88½ cents on the Chicago Board of Trade Wednesday and the cash article was quoted at from 90 to 93 cents, according to its quality. This, up to that day, was the highest price since March, 1892. There was nothing as high as 90 cents in 1893, 1894, 1895 or 1896. The advance last year culminated around 85 cents. Wednesday's advance was 5 cents, making an advance of almost 25 cents within five weeks. July 6 September wheat sold at 64⅝ cents. There has not been such an advance as Wednesday's since the days of the Russian prohibition, that sweetest memory of the man who never thinks wheat high enough. And men who think they know a thing or two about the pit—at least other men in the pit listen respectfully while they express their views—are talking about "wheat cheap at a dollar."

It has been six years since the price of wheat was boosted so high in a single day. The lowest price for wheat Tuesday was 83½ cents a bushel and the highest price Wednesday was 88½ cents a bushel. This is a net advance of 5 cents a bushel, which is considered a big thing by those who have it to pay. The traders in the pit climbed over one another in the excitement that was occasioned by this unusual advance.

When the trading for the day was closed the men who emerged from the pit looked as if they were tired and their clothes did not fit them. They had been having a hard time during the trading hours. Every cable dispatch relating to wheat prices that came told of advances and the reports on crop estimates from the wheat regions told of small yields. The two kinds of information re-enforced each other in making the price of wheat go up, and every time it advanced a point the noise in the pit was increased and the gesticulations of the traders became more violent. Wheat fluctuated in a manner sufficiently lively to cause some 4,000 extra yells in the pit.

Wheat closed Tuesday night at 83⅝ cents. When time was called in the morning the bulls laid their horns under the cereal, gave a concerted heave and threw it to a height of 85⅛ cents. All over the pit could be heard the moaning of hooked bears, and the strongest men turned pale to see the way in which some of those fat old millionaires grew purple at the thought of losing a brick or so out of their new corner mansions.

WHEAT MAKES A GREAT CLIMB.

UNCLE SAM HAS WHEAT TO FEED THE WORLD.

Then the bears inserted their claws and began to jerk. At 11 o'clock wheat had fallen to 84⅝ cents and the agonized bellow of the average bull filled the pit with a babel of sound that resembled nothing so much as a convocation of terriers with a cannon cracker in a barrel. Up and down shot the prices—only an eighth or so at a jump—and the roaring yells of "An' five-eighths! An' a half! Gotcher! Come on, come on! Take 3,000 bushels at that! Wow! Woof! Who said three-quarters? Take it! Hold on! Only three-eighths? Oh, murder!" rang and rattled along the walls till the women in the gallery wanted to know why they didn't get axes or use dynamite on one another.

Several places sent in reports of estimates of the wheat crop which had a tendency to force up prices early in the day. It was previously believed the wheat yield of Manitoba would be 30,000,000 bushels, but advices from there were to the effect that one-half of that figure would be about right. The crop of Minnesota and the Dakotas was previously reported as amounting to 200,000,000, but a report came that 80,000,000 would be about right.

Notwithstanding the break in prices Tuesday the cable brought word from Liverpool that wheat had jumped 1 cent, and on top of this a dispatch from Paris that the market opened after a two-day holiday with an advance of 6½ cents. The clearances from Atlantic ports of wheat and flour in three days was equal to 2,500,000 bushels of wheat. The short crop at home and the scarcity abroad when brought to the attention of traders in such forcible manner was what made wheat jump 5 cents a bushel. It was confidently asserted by traders that wheat would go up until a single bushel would be worth $1. The millers are said to be taking advantage of the advance in wheat to raise the price of flour.

At St. Louis it was one of the wildest days ever experienced in the wheat market. Early in the morning a strong bull movement set in and before the close of trading for the day the price of September option had advanced 5⅝ cents over the previous day's close. It has been years since such a tremendous bulge has been recorded. September opened at 91 cents, an advance of ⅝ cent over the closing price of the day before; from that it sold down to 90⅞ cents and fluctuated back to 91 cents; then down to 90⅛ cents, went back to 91 cents and started off on the wildest kind of a flyer after call. On the call cash wheat was 91½ cents bid, with 92 cents asked, while it sold by sample at 52 cents for No. 2 red and 89 to 90 cents for No. 3.

Rise in New York.

High-water mark for the season was reached in the New York wheat market Wednesday, not only on values, but as to the volume of transactions as well. Prices advanced 4¼ to 5 cents for the day and sales reached the total of 16,315,000 bushels. Excitement prevailed in the market from start to finish, but particularly in the last hour, when the advances became so rapid that frequently the fluctuations were marked by ¼c fractions instead of ⅛ and 1-16c, changes that are ordinarily seen. The total range on September was from 91¼ to 94⅝, against 89⅝, the lowest price of Tuesday. Not in years has there been such an extraordinary movement in wheat values as took place Wednesday. Even the old traders were amazed at the stubborn advances, while those who have heretofore scouted the dollar wheat theory were obliged to admit that there was every prospect of September going to that figure.

The day in the San Francisco wheat pit one of the biggest booms ever seen occurred. There was a sharp and big advance that hit hard a good many of the bears. Though no failures were announced, it is expected that several firms will go under. December futures opened at $1.53⅞. In consequence of the sharp advance in Chicago and strong French cables the upward movement was steady all day. December closed firm at $1.56⅛. May, 1898, opened at $1.53¾ and sold freely, closing at $1.55⅝. The day's business represented about half a million centals. The estimated crop of the State is 950,000 tons, and at present prices, $1.55 per cental for spot, the value of the State's crop is over $29,000,000. Choice milling wheat is selling from $1.60 to $1.65 per cental and millers are buying all they can secure at these figures. One year ago spot wheat was selling slowly at 95 to 96¼ cents per cental.

OFF FOR EUROPE.

WHEAT IS RUINED.

Crop Throughout the Northwest Suffers Great Damage.

Estimates as to the wheat yield in the Northwest grow smaller every day. A month ago it was predicted that the yield would amount to 200,000,000 bushels, while now the most sanguine say it will not be over 140,000,000. Many others place it at a much smaller figure. The crop will be the smallest for years. Reports received in Duluth are more discouraging every day. The acreage was very large, but thousands of acres have been drowned out. Instead of twenty bushels to the acre, as was figured a month ago, the yield will not average over from ten to twelve bushels to the acre in most sections. Rust and smut are also appearing all over the wheat country and over 50 per cent of the wheat cut so far has failed to grade anywhere near the best. On high lands wheat will probably be of fair quality, but on low lands what little there is of it will not grade at all.

HARD WORK TO LIVE.

Existence in the Klondyke Country Not One of Pleasure.

From the latest editions of the Alaska Mining Record and the Alaska Miner, published at Juneau, the following is taken:

The first mail to come down from the interior under the "Corwin-Hayes" contract, which calls for two mails from Circle City a year for a consideration of $1,700, arrived yesterday. The mail was brought down by Hugh Day and cost him $1,250 of his $1,700. It took him forty-five days.

He had a rough experience. Ice on the river was very rough, and for 120 miles the trail had to be chopped out for the passage of the dogs and their twenty pounds of mail matter. Food for man and beast became short.

At Circle City flour sold at $50 a sack, and he had to pay $215 for dog feed, consisting of ham so decayed that it could not be cooked in the house. At Pelly he offered $150 for a dog, but could not get one at any price.

Mr. Day says the department should authorize the opening of sacks at Franklin and American Creek. Both are on American soil. At present letters addressed to parties at these points are carried through to points hundreds of miles north.

Dogs are sold in the Klondyke country by weight. The latest quotation was $2.60 a pound. An average dog is good for $200 for meat or service.

The necessity of laying in a full year's supplies cannot be too forcibly impressed upon newcomers. They then stand a good chance of starving before they get out of the country.

A third attempt by incendiaries to burn the town of Moran, a place of 1,000 people, in Allen County, Kan., almost proved successful. Eight business buildings were destroyed and the loss is estimated at from $25,000 to $30,000.

The will of Jacob Z. Davis, who died in Philadelphia a few months ago, which disposes of an estate valued at over $1,000,000, was admitted to probate at San Francisco, Judge Coffey overruling the objections of the unsuccessful contestants.

A Song of Harvest.

Sing a song of harvest—sing it, ring it, sweet;
Set it to the music of the ripple of the wheat!

Sweetheart, sweetheart,
Reaping as we go,
A kiss amid the music
And the wheat would never know!

Sing a song of harvest—sing it, ring it true!
Symphonies of sunlight and mysteries of dew;

Sweetheart, sweetheart,
Summer sighs to go,
A kiss amid the music
And the wheat would never know!

Sing a song of harvest—of many a golden tithe;
Set it to the tinkle and the twinkle of the scythe;

Sweetheart, sweetheart,
Love's a reaper, too;
Love is in the music
And the thrilling heart of you.

Sing a song of harvest like the ripple of a stream,
Till the shadows kiss the meadows and the stars above us dream;

Sweetheart, sweetheart,
Summer sighs to go;
A kiss amid the music
And the wheat would never know.

BARD VS. BOXER.

Ferdinand de Cruza was, in his own opinion, the greatest man of the day in right of being the most illustrious living poet. Neither part of this modest definition was entirely endorsed by the world at large, though to some degree it ran current in a certain literary circle.

Ferdinand de Cruza was a decadent poet. Like Agag, he walked delicately, but the same manner was not observable in his compositions. Realism was what he delighted in. His enemies described his soulful yearnings as "decompositions." In appearance he was large and heavy in build. He wore his hair tangling over his collar in the true poetic style. Also, his eyes were big and black, like plums, and under the influence of what he wished to be taken for extreme emotion he would roll them with startling effect.

Ferdinand was once described as a young man with a talent for conversation. Oh, how he would talk! And the subjects which were ever most in his mouth were himself, his works, his eminence. He had a curious knack of spreading himself out like a peacock's tail as he spoke, until he seemed to dominate the entire room. He had a theory that the world will only take one at half one's own valuation, and that, therefore, it is as well to pitch the estimate high. Certainly he never erred on this point, and there were those who said that the process of self-puffery produced some curious internal expansion as well. Poets of this calibre have usually a considerable fêminine following. Nor was Ferdinand any exception to this rule. Lank damsels languished metaphorically at his feet and lent eager ears to his utterances with soulful squirmings. Large ladies of exalted rank but less exalted taste listened with much laughter to his "brilliant dialogue." "Mr. de Cruza is so amusing," they said, by which they meant that he told offensive anecdotes well.

The homage of the fair sex was sweet to Ferdinand. Specially delicious, moreover, was the adoration of a woman like Lady Laelia Disdebar, the daughter of the Earl of Harrogate, and the widow of old George Holofernes Disdebar, who made a huge fortune, don't you know, out of coal tar, and was for some years Chancellor of the Exchequer. Lady Laelia was old George's second wife whom he had married some time after the coal tar episode, and within a few years of his death. There were no fewer than forty years between the pair; and it was said at the time that Lady Laelia had been led like a lamb to the altar solely by the indomitable will of her careful parent. As it turned out old George died four years after the wedding, and Lady Laelia was left a widow of twenty-four with a very handsome jointure to begin life over again with the view of getting some enjoyment out of it.

As the wife of the Chancellor of the Exchequer she had been bored to death by serious people at an age when she was utterably incapable of appreciating them. When she was free, she flew to the opposite extreme. Ferdinand de Cruza may be regarded as one of the symbols of this revolt. He gave her new and pleasurable sensations which she only half understood, which were delightful to her. He had sufficient acuteness not to descend too low in her presence. She openly declared that she was devoted to "dear Mr. de Cruza."

Now Ferdinand, in spite of his poetic temperament and habit of railing at the sordid practice of money-grubbing, was a capital man of business. It occurred to him that Lady Laelia, with her large jointure, would be an excellent investment. At the same time, her beauty was not only grateful to his senses, but would constitute her a trophy of no inconsiderable value to his self-esteem. Also it would be far preferable to be master in a house which he could style his own than to continue the social free lance with the duty of earning his dinner.

These circumstances may account for the fact that little Lord Hounslow, who was calling on Lady Laelia, was by no means pleased when the door opened and Mr. de Cruza was announced.

Little Lord Hounslow was honestly in love with Lady Laelia. He would have married her if she had not had a penny in the world. He had stated his sentiments to her with as much fervor of expression as he could command. She had replied coldly that she did not intend to marry again, and that if she did, she should not marry a little man. She added, gratuitously, that she thought that a woman ought not to marry a man whom she could not look up to and respect. At this she drew herself up to her full height and towered a head and shoulders above him. Also she declared that she liked him very much as a friend, and offered to be a sister to him. At which he had uttered a bad word, but had immediately apologized with the utmost abasement. Eventually, like another person, he went away in a rage. When he had cooled down a little he decided that he would never give her up.

Therefore, when he heard of the De Cruza intimacy he felt an unholy wish to maul and mangle that eminent man. He could not really believe that Lady Laelia could actually have any tender feelings toward "a fellow whose hair hung half way down his back, and whose appearance and talk were enough to make one ill for a month," but he did not like the idea that "such an animal'a" name should be coupled with that of his adored one. Still less did he like the anxiety which racked his breast whenever he thought of this friendship and its possibilities.

"This is a most fortunate coincidence," said Lady Laelia after she had responded to De Cruza's large and effusive greeting. "I can now introduce two of my great friends to each other."

The interview did not proceed felicitously. De Cruza blundered on to a subject on which Hounslow, as a military man, entertained strong opinions. To do him justice, the poet did not know Hounslow's profession, but the knowledge would not have caused him to change his topic—especially as Lady Laelia agreed with him.

"Moral suasion and the dignity of being in the right are all rot," said Hounslow, hotly. "A nation must be able to defend itself, just as a man ought to be able to defend himself. What should you do supposing some rough came and demanded your purse?"

"I should call a policeman," replied De Cruza, with dignity.

"I have no doubt of it," replied Hounslow, contemptuously. "It would perhaps be too inquisitive to inquire what you would do if the policeman did not turn up."

"And what would you do?" inquired Lady Laelia, haughtily; "supposing the man were bigger than you?"

Lord Hounslow flushed hotly, for he suspected a covert hand.

"Well, seeing that I am the champion light-weight of the brigade, I expect that if the other man was game there would be a decent little set-to for a few minutes."

"How horrible!" ejaculated Lady Laelia.

"Barbarous!" echoed De Cruza.

Hounslow stood up straight, every inch of his trim little figure bristling erect with indignation. For the first time in his life he said good-bye to Lady Laelia with a feeling of strain. He regarded De Cruza's observations no more than the snarling of a drawing room lap dog which relies on the protection of his mistress's skirts; but that she should take part with it against him!

Lady Laelia was decidedly imprudent with regard to Mr. De Cruza. It was distinctly foolish, for instance, to be seen so often bicycling with him. The world would probably have said something strong if it knew that she made that arrangement to ride down to Richmond Park on bicycles with him. If there was one thing more silly than making the engagement, it was keeping it. Lady Laelia did both.

It was a delightful day, warm and bright, yet not too hot. The roads were smooth and hard, and though the water-carts had been active, the effects of their passage had worn off sufficiently to prevent danger from side-slip.

De Cruza was gorgeously arrayed. He wore a bright blue coat, orange waistcoat, trousers to match the coat, a white broad-brimmed (Jameson) hat, patent leather shoes and tie of a new and wonderful shade of red. Instead of the usual transfer on the lower main tube of the machine his own signature sprawled in gold.

Richmond Park was at its best. It was deserted save by the deer. The heavy woodlands shut out the horizon, the houses, the busy life which teemed all around at such a short distance. It was possible to imagine oneself in the heart of a delicious desert of oak and fern and chestnut, traversed by excellent roads, tempered only occasionally by low hills.

Lady Laelia most unwisely called a halt by a clump of towering trees. The pair dismounted, and, abandoning their bicycles, sat down on the comfortable bank to rest.

The spirit of the scene, of his art, of the divine passion, entered the breast of the poet. Hand in hand came the thought of that excellent business speculation. Here in the wilderness (that was so near town), under the open sky (just ten minutes' run from a first-class hotel), he would declare himself to Lady Laelia. The proposal should be a veritable poem in prose. It should thrill her to the very soul, and reveal to her, as in a lightning flash, what manner of man he was.

"Dear Lady," he began, with impassioned tenderness.

Lady Laelia turned toward him, and by that movement fate willed that her eyes should catch a sidelong glimpse of the two bicycles which leaned in close company against a tree.

"Oh, Mr. De Cruza," she cried in great excitement, "what is that man doing to my bike?"

Much disgusted at this prosaic interruption, the poet turned his head impatiently in the direction indicated. A distinctly ruffianly and unkempt individual was undoubtedly standing in suspicious proximity to the machines. Lady Laelia sprang to her feet with the impetuosity of a mother who sees her child in danger. Mr. De Cnrza rose with far more deliberation, and a feeling of uneasiness became manifest in his breast. Good heavens! was there going to be an altercation with a common, low, uncultured person who would probably use the most unrefined language? How odious! How unpoetic! How excruciatingly discordant to the artistic sense! Besides, the common person appeared to carry an ugly, thick stick, which he held precisely as Irishmen do their—what were they called?—oh, shillelaghs in pictures.

Lady Laelia rushed into the fray without thought of art or poetry, or even of the stick.

"How dare you touch my bicycle?" she cried. "What are you doing to it?"

"No 'arm, lydy," replied the tramp volubly. "Not a 'apoth of 'arm, 'elp me. Only hadmirin' of 'em, that's all."

"Then you will be good enough to proceed on your way," retorted Lady Laelia. "Mr. De Cruza tell this man to go away."

There was a pause. Then De Cruza observed in a high voice that had a curious lack of the commanding note:

"Yes, do as the lady tells you. You are not wanted here."

There was another pause. The tramp looked from the woman to the man. He moved a step forward, and so stood between them and their machines. Lady Laelia commanded him indignantly to go away. De Cruza drew back a step in silence.

"I'm thinkin'," said the tramp, and his tone had less of the fawning whine, "that a pious and charitable lydy like you 'ud be willin' to 'elp a pore 'onest, 'hard-working cove with a trifle."

"I have nothing to give you," cried Lady Laelia; "and honest men don't meddle with bicycles behind their owners' backs."

"I'm obleeged to yer, lydy," said the tramp, with an evil grin. "I will, since yer are so pressin', tyke the purse yer hoffer, and likewise them pretty sparklers yer 'ave on yer wrists."

"How dare you!" cried Lady Laelia. "Mr. De Cruza, drive this ruffian away!"

Was there ever such a horrible, unpoetic, barbarous request addressed before to an eminent bard?

"Yes, do go away. We have nothing for you," quavered De Cruza. "If you don't go away I shall inform the police about you!"

"Stow gammon," cried the uncultured intruder rudely, "or I'll smash your tallow-colored mug fer yer. And now, 'and over the diba."

With a quick forward movement he caught Lady Laelia by the arm.

"Help, Mr. De Cruza, help!" she cried, struggling bravely with the assailant; and then, as De Cruza gave no sign, she added: "Help, you coward! Do you mean to see me murdered?"

With his heart sinking into his boots, De Cruza made a doubtful forward movement with his hands extended in a fashion eminently unscientific. But when the ruffian, flinging Lady Laelia to the ground by a brutal effort of strength, turned upon her male companion with a stick uplifted and the glare of a savage, the poet's heart seemed to fly out of his body far away, and that illustrious man fairly turned tail and fled in the same direction.

If he had preferred to refrain from this exhibition he would have heard Lady Laelia's cry of "Thank Heavens!" as a newly arrived bicyclist descended suddenly on the scene and dashed in to the rescue.

It was little Hounslow.

The tramp came up to the scratch nothing loth, for his club and the small size of the new arrival made him overconfident. Hounslow, however, was as active as a cat, and in excellent condition. He dodged a blow that would have felled an ox, darted in, countered heavily with his right, and put in one straight from the shoulder with his left. Over the other went, completely knocked out of time. Whereupon Hounslow naturally took possession of the club and pitched it far.

When Lord Hounslow repeated his proposal to Lady Laelia, which he did as soon as possible without the smallest delicacy, she owned that she had somewhat altered her views, not only on the subject of moral suasion and the dignity of being in the right, but also with regard to the question of height as a gauge of respect. She said that she realized that what a woman wanted was a man who was thoroughly able to protect her, and that she did not know any one who was more completely competent for the purpose than the present aspirant. Therefore——

Mr. De Cruza was not at the wedding. Nor did he call on Lady Laelia either before or after. He had many engagements, you see. — London World.

He Drew the Prize.

"I encountered the strangest man I ever saw while I was doing some government work in Missouri," said the railroad contractor. "He was smart enough—so jolly that every one liked him, and apparently in the best of health. But he made a few bad deals—had to mortgage some of his property, and seemed to throw up his hands. He vowed that he had ceased to be his own man, and would drift along till he found out what the world wanted to do with him.

"He never tried to dispose of any of his possessions by auction or private sale, but nearly every day held a raffle at which the chief attractions were his jokes and odd sayings. All this time he was not trying to earn a dollar, and in a year or so it was thought that he had gone to the end of his string.

"When he disposed of the family clock, and there seemed to be nothing left, he coolly announced the next day he would raffle himself. He didn't know whether the boys would care to buy chances, but he meant business and would work faithfully for the man who drew him. Tickets sold for good figures, but there were two left, and he laughingly said that he would take a couple of shots at himself. When the drawing came off he held the lucky number.

"Well, sir, the fellow turned loose and went to making money hand over hand. He became one of the greatest rustlers in the West, paid off the mortgages, bought everything there was money in and is as rich now as a river-bottom farm. When he drew himself at the raffle he made up his mind that he was his own man again, and besides he had agreed to do his best for the winner. It was a strange case.—Detroit Free Press.

Snake Coiled About His Neck.

When Officer Wright was returning on his wheel from a trip to Vineland, N. J., he saw a hugh blacksnake lying across the road above here. He ran over it, but as the front wheel struck the reptile it curled up and got its head in the spokes. The tail of the snake struck the rear spokes, and it was hurled around the officer's neck.

Mr. Wright lost his courage and fell from the wheel, and while the wheel, man, and snake were thrown in a heap, the latter escaped. The officer declares it was ten feet long.—Trenton (N. J.) American.

PRINCE OF DENMARK AND THE DUCHESS OF MECKLENBURG.

The betrothal of Prince Christian of Denmark and the Duchess of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, recently announced, is said to be very pleasing to the German and Russian courts. The lady is second cousin to the present czar and the prince is his first cousin. Both are related by marriage to the royal family of Great Britain. Christian is a stalwart young Dane, second only in stature to the giant Prince George of Greece. He is a superb horseman, an all-around sport, and a fine soldier. His fiancee, the Duchess Alexandrine, is nine years younger than her royal lover. Her father, the reigning Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, is one of the richest of the princes of Germany, and Alexandrine is his eldest daughter. She is a very handsome woman for a European princess and is said to be highly cultured. Foreign court papers, of course, have it that this match is a "genuine love affair."

NATIONAL W. R. C. HOME.

This Magnificent Structure Stands at Madison Ohio.

No charitable institution in the land is more worthy of benefits or gifts from a patriotic people than the Home founded and supported by the National Woman's Relief Corps, at Madison, Ohio, for those whom cruel war left without support or protection.

CLARE H. BURLEIGH

One writing of it says: "It is really one of the wonders of the world. The half has never been told, and you will never realize what a grand institution it is until you visit it."

It is located at Madison, Ohio, on the famous Western Reserve on the line of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad. There are now twenty acres of land, five having been purchased last year. There are fine drives, well-kept lawns, with flowers in abundance, besides gardens and orchards. The main building was erected and furnished by the Ohio Legislature at a cost of $35,000. It is known as the "Ohio cottage," and is a model of perfection. It was dedicated on July 17, 1890, with elaborate ceremonies, and turned over to the Woman's Relief Corps. The two original buildings were used for a seminary. Of these one is now fitted up for a hospital. The Home is maintained by a per capita tax assessed on every member of the W. R. C., and by contributions from friends, either cash or supplies. Also a percentage of pensions received by inmates is required of them, to be applied to the support of the Home.

PLUMA L. COWLES.

NATIONAL W. R. C. HOME AT MADISON, OHIO.

There are at present sixty-four inmates, some of them with remarkable war records as army nurses. The oldest is nearly 90, and is in excellent health. Seventeen others are octogenarians.

Mrs. Clare H. Burleigh, the present superintendent of the Home, has exhibited marked ability and tact in caring for aged persons. Bright, cheerful, affectionate, with gifts of speech and song, she has won all hearts, and holds the reins of love and kindness gently, but firmly. She is a descendant of patriots, and is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution by right of three ancestors—a great-great-grandfather, and two great-grandfathers who fought at Bunker Hill.

Her brother, Mr. George Hoyt, was a recruiting officer for John Brown's company. He later attained a brigadier-general's rank in the Union army, and after the war was appointed attorney-general of Kansas. At the time of her husband's death in 1894 he was a distinguished lawyer and judge of Massachusetts, and judge advocate of the G. A. R.

Mrs. Pluma L. Cowles, the secretary of the Home board, is also a Daughter of the Revolution, and wife of Mr. Edwin R. Cowles, a member of the One Hundred and Fifth Ohio Volunteer Infantry and a leading church worker and business man of Geneva. She was appointed by the Governor of Ohio, with six others, a member of the Ohio Cottage Building Committee, and has been connected with the management of the Home ever since.

The Board of Directors is composed of Agnes Hitt, national president, Indianapolis, Ind.; Ida S. McBride, national secretary, Indianapolis, Ind.; Annie Wittenmyer, Sanatoga, Pa.; Charity Bush Craig, Viroqua, Wis.; Emma B. Lowd, Salem, Mass.; Margaret Ray Wichens, Evanston, Ill.; Pluma L. Everything Inverted.

In Japan—if the bull may be permitted—after-dinner speeches are made before dinner, thus insuring brevity, and furnishing the topics for conversation. In "Feudal and Modern Japan," the author states that it is the absorbing desire of the young ladies to grow old, that they may share the reverence given to age.

The best rooms of the house are in the rear. A Japanese entering it takes off his shoes instead of his hat. If he takes up a book to read, he opens it at the back. He reads from right to left, instead of from left to right. The letters are arranged vertically instead of horizontally. The larger margin of the page is at the top instead of at the bottom, and the foot notes are at the top.

If he writes a letter, he will take a roll instead of a sheet, write along the curve of the roll a missive which begins exactly as one of ours would end, and vice versa, and then putting it into an envelope opening at the end, and addressing it to United States, Ohio, Cincinnati, Smith, John, Mr., he will seal it, turn it over and put his postage stamp on the back.

WRITES JUVENILE FICTION.

Western Author Whose Stories Are Popular with Young People.

Writing juvenile stories so as to interest and hold an army of boys and girls numbering not less than 100,000 week after week and year after year, is a task involving not only skill and judgment, but positive genius. There has come about a vast change in juvenile literature during the past decade.

Eastern publishers say that it is the Western reading field that pays best just now. A Western man holds the palm for juvenile fiction. Weldon J. Cobb has not been known in this line under his own name until quite recently, as the same was controlled by a large Eastern publishing house for exclusive use in the mature field, until some three years since. As Dr. Willard McKenzie, Ralph Hamliton, and Paul Ingelow, however, Mr. Cobb has since 1885 been very prominently before the reading public. To his "Ready Boys" was given the best reception attending any story of its class, while "The Tattooed Boy," which won the Munro prize after the casting of 272,000 votes, was the work of the same author. He is a busy writer, one New York publisher putting out nine books from his pen in a single year.

Mr. Cobb proceeds on the basis that the average boy of to-day is ten times better informed and more critical than the youth of the last generation. One of the best signs of the time is the getting away from the trashy and improbable, and in this work Mr. Cobb has been a crusader. In complete harmony with his readers, he gets very close to their predilections and preferences—in such near touch, indeed, that among the seven hundred odd juvenile athletic and social boys and girls' clubs of the country his name is a household word.

WELDON J. COBB.

Some of this author's best works are "The Oldest Man in the World," "The White Dwarf Elephant," "The Gilded Boy," and his first great story, "Honor Bright," which reached a sale of nearly 200,000 copies. Mr. Cobb resides with his charming wife and two happy children in La Grange, Ill., a beautiful Chicago suburb. He is about 48 years of age, and while rather retiring in his social disposition, seems to understand how to reach the juvenile heart.

RECORD OF THE WEEK

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

General Meeting of Glass Makers—Fugitive from Kentucky Justice Captured at Terre Haute—General Revival of Business in Muncie.

To Extend Window Glass Trust.

Calls for a national meeting of all trust and anti-trust window glass manufacturers were issued from Anderson. The meeting will be held in Chicago and is for the purpose of effecting a more complete organization, or rather extending the trust, which now controls over 1,290 of the 1,700 pots in the country. It is thought by the trust officials that all concerned can be brought in now. By so doing they can control the American market, shut out all foreign glass and operate plants from four to six weeks longer each year. At present the glass imported amounts to about 1,000,000 boxes per annum, or one-sixth of the total consumption. The second wage conference will be held at Cleveland. It is likely a scale will be signed and all plants opened soon. Manufacturers offer the highest wages ever paid in this country.

Muncie Factories Busy.

F. R. Thrall of the Muncie Wheel Company reports that he finds buggy manufacturers with order books full now, when at this time in former years their factories were closed, this being the dull time of their season. It will soon be necessary to run the wheel works double time, day and night. Smith & Co., bent wood, will be compelled to run day and night to keep pace with the orders, and the same conditions obtain at all of Muncie's big iron and steel mills. The Indiana iron works, which has not run with a full quota of men for three years, now has a man at every post in the big mill, giving work to over 800. C. M. Kimbrough of the Indiana bridge works announces that a night force will be put to work at this industry, and there are orders ahead that will keep the plant hustling for weeks to come. Charles Boldt of the Muncie flint glass factory announces that the start in all his plants will be made at once with 800 or more hands, and the prospects are that the season will be the most active in years. The Ball Brothers and Port fruit jar works will begin work also, giving employment to 1,500 more hands.

Fugitive Is Caught.

After being three years a fugitive from justice, James Hollars, aged 28, who is wanted at Tateville, Pulaski County, Ky., for murder, was arrested at Terre Haute by two Kentuckians named S. A. Flynn and J. M. Gibson. Flynn is from Bronston, Ky., and Gibson from Gregory. Their prisoner is said to have confessed his guilt and will return at once without requisition papers. He had secured a situation as section hand on the Vandalia main line, under the name of William Jones. He was at work when captured. Hollars is wanted for shooting Samuel Shadowens, while he was plowing in the field. Hollars, it is said, had sold a lot of timber and told his father it had gotten away from him and floated down the stream. Shadowens exposed his duplicity to his father.

All Over the State.

The annual convention of the Green Glass Pressers' League of America and Canada was held at Marion.

Fritz Lane of Wickliffe is dead from a wound received in a knife duel fought with Jesse Bradley Monday night. Lane died within five hours. Bradley cannot live. All were desperate characters. Wickliffe is in a most inaccessible part of the county.

The Great Western Pottery Works of Kokomo shipped large consignments of earthenware to Edinburgh, Scotland, and Liverpool, England. This is the first demand for American pottery in Great Britain. The company has orders from abroad for more goods.

Christian Kopp, an aged resident of New Middleton, had been unable for more than two years to speak a word. Tuesday night he awoke suddenly and saw a burglar in his room. He emitted a yell that awoke everybody else in the house and caused the uninvited visitor to withdraw hastily. Since that moment Mr. Kopp has been talking most of the time about the incident, and as easily as he ever did.

At a meeting of the State officers of the Independent Order of Foresters of America of this State George Keiser of Crown Point was elected high chief ranger to succeed ex-Mayor Frank P. Jones of Valparaiso, resigned, who moves to Carthage, Mo. M. D. Crume of Wabash, Ind., was elected high vice-chief ranger. The Valparaiso court gave Mr. Jones a banquet at the Grand Central Hotel and presented him with a gold-headed cane. Guests were present from Wabash, Hammond, Hobart, Laporte, Crown Point and other places.

Wednesday was the second day of the Red Men's powwow of southern Indiana at Shelbyville, and at 10 o'clock in the morning there was a complete blockade of the principal streets of the city, so great was the crowd of people who had come from every section of the State to take part in the festivities of the occasion. The famous Indianapolis light artillery of twenty-six men gave an exhibition drill on the public square at 10 o'clock. This was followed by an exhibition from Chieftains' League of Terre Haute, dressed in continental suits. Following this came the parade and march to the fair grounds. The parade was three miles in length and 11,000 Red Men were in line. On reaching the fair ground thirty head of beef were fed to the crowd, as were 1,200 gallons of burgoo soup. This was followed by drill work on the race track and speechmaking by prominent Red Men of this and adjoining States. A fine display of fireworks was given on the public square. The affair was the largest of the kind ever held in the West.

Clarence Earl is being held at Pana on a charge of stealing papers valued at several thousand dollars from J. N. Holstead, a lumber dealer of Brazil.

The farmers living in the vicinity of Lagrange and across the line in Michigan are considerably excited over the depredations committed by what appears to be an organized gang of cattle thieves. A posse composed of farmers and Michigan and Indiana officers scoured the country for miles in the hope of finding clews, but nothing could be found. Well-known farmers are thought to be implicated and sensational developments are expected.

Edward Huber, recently arrested in Chicago, was released on $500 bond furnished by his father as soon as he was brought to Peru by Detective Elliot. Huber acknowledged owing the original Standard Cabinet Company $160. He claims to have been trying to get the money in Chicago to pay the claim.

The fourteenth annual reunion of the Thirty-sixth Indiana volunteer infantry was held at Hagerstown. An immense audience attended the camp fire. Gen. William Grose was re-elected president of the regimental association and John Livsey secretary. The next annual reunion will be held at Deleville, in Delaware County.

THE ORIGINAL MARKS.

Louisianian Whose Name Was Used in "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

Judge Abraham Marks of West Feliciana parish, Louisiana, whose surname Harriet Beecher Stowe took liberties with in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and who is familiarly known as "Lawyer Marks" throughout a large section of the South, recently visited in Chicago. Judge Marks is 83 years old, and in the course of an eventful life has been on terms of intimacy with many celebrated people, the list including the names of Edgar Allan Poe, Chief Justice Marshall, "Sam" Houston, Henry Clay and Henry Ward Beecher. His memory and all his mental faculties are perfect, notwithstanding his advanced age, and he can talk entertainingly of the giants in those days.

THE STAGE MARKS

Judge Marks when a boy of 8 or 10 used to hunt robins with slingshots with Poe, who was near the same age, in the suburbs of Richmond, and the judge still bears on his forehead the scar of a random shot fired by his companion. His recollection of the chief justice is perfect. One day, he says, he was playing marbles near the courthouse with another boy, when the justice came out, and, after looking at them for awhile, went down on his knees and solemnly knuckled down with them for the space of half an hour. Judge Marks says that he witnessed the last game of cards played by Henry Clay. The game was "brag," and S. S. Prentiss and Anderson Miller, the United States marshal who lost his voice cursing Andrew Jackson, were of the party.

THE ORIGINAL "LAWYER MARKS."

Judge Marks is anything but the "Lawyer Marks" of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in appearance, and he says laughingly that anything like the character depicted is an absolute impossibility. He never met the novelist, but says that he was well acquainted with Henry Ward Beecher, who told him that his name was used at the suggestion of some Louisiana friends. In San Antonio, Texas, when a Probate judge, Mr. Marks fought a duel in defense of a Jewish peddler.

WILL MOVE THE MONUMENT.

Haymarket Memorial, Chicago, to Be Placed in a Park.

Chicago merchants whose places of business front on the open air market in Haymarket square say that the bronze policeman who for so long has been the tutelary genius of the place must go. The demands of business are paramount, they declare, to any consideration of sentiment in regard to the appropriateness of its present location. While mindful of the significance of the memorial of the Haymarket tragedy the business men pronounce it to be a perennial nuisance on the site it now occupies, because of its continual hindrance to traffic in an already crowded thoroughfare.

Merchants at the east entrance of the square, near to which stands the bronze guardian of the peace, complain that on account of the congestion caused by the monument a large volume of business is lost to them for the reason that farmers are unable to gain access to their places of business with their produce laden wagons.

The monument causes a divergence in the street car tracks so that the distance from one outside rail to the other is thirty-two feet. The removal of the statue will add sixteen feet to the width of the street and permit a free movement of traffic. The awkward turn in the railway tracks makes it difficult for passengers on the street cars to maintain their footing and a number of accidents due to the sharp veering of the cars have happened. With all respect for the memory of the brave officers who shed their blood in defense of the peace and welfare of the city the officials believe that the purpose for which the statue was erected would be better subserved by placing it in a public park, where people might admire it at their leisure.

HAYMARKET MONUMENT.

If you pay your debts promptly, you are entitled to more credit than a man who is charitable, or a woman who is literary.

One of the severest penalties to which criminals in Holland were in ancient times condemned was to be deprived of the use of salt.

More Burglars.

Charlie Sheets' residence was entered Saturday night by a pesky burglar, and Charlie's best suit of clothes and 60 cents in change taken. When he went to bed he laid his coat and vest upon a chair, and hung his pants on a nail in the door casing. The burglar entered a south window, passed by the bed in which Mr. and Mrs. Sheets were sleeping, and succeeded in making his escape without awakening them. One bureau drawer was also ransacked, but nothing found that he seemed to want. A tooth powder box set upon the bureau which contained a thimble and some other trinkets. This was taken out on the porch and with the suspenders which were on Charlie's pantaloons all left lying on the floor.

We understand the residence formerly occupied by Mr. Franks, was also entered and two suits of clothes, and a gold watch taken. We hope that the scoundrel may be run down, and given his just punishment.

Junction Foundry

Some people make mistakes of one kind and another. But the farmer who wants to increase his crops and reduce his expenses, will make no mistake if he buys his plows and points, land rollers and general repairs of O. W. Wentz & Co. Auburn Junction.

DOLLAR WHEAT

Valuable Opinions of Leading Dealers as to the Recent Boom.

A boom in wheat swept over the country last week, till on Saturday in Chicago it reached $1 and in eastern cities went from 2 to 7 cents higher. This beats the wheat boom that struck the county the first year of Cleveland's last administration. But of course, politics has nothing to do with the price of wheat, just now, as the question of opening more foreign markets is not being discussed. And if discussed at all, the present administration, is taking, with its eyes open the very course that would limit our foreign market. What then, is the cause of this rise in wheat? The chief and only valuable cause, is the poor wheat crops in other countries, Western Europe—that is Great Britain, France, Spain, Germany, etc, always have to buy a part of their bread-stuffs. For some years there, has been a surplus of wheat in central and southern Germany, a heavy surplus in Russia and in south America, and a heavy surplus in India. In all these countries, the wheat crop of this year is poor, and some of those who used to have wheat to sell, now have no more than they can use, and in many cases, they will have to buy of us. This brings us back again, the old conditions of a good foreign market. It does more. It proves to our people, the fallacy of that political cry that says "all we need is a good home market." Our home market can never consume half of what we can raise.

CAUSE OF THE RISE.

To prove that we have given the true cause of the rise we quote the reason's given Saturday, by leading Board of Trade men in Chicago. They are found in the Times-Herald, the leading republican paper there, the one most influential in nominating McKinley.

That paper says editorially, "Nobody ever saw high prices, or even 'good' prices for wheat when there was a good wheat crop in every country of the world"

BOARD OF TRADE MEN.

John F. Harris says; The high price indicates an increase in the real demand for wheat, especially in the foreign markets."

F. G. Logan. "The causes for to day's advance, lie in a 3-cent advance in Paris and a 3½ cent advance for deferred futures in Liverpool." And he adds that his advices from wheat growing countries, show poor crops.

H. C. Avery: "The crop failures in India, Australia and South America, leave us with but one competitor, Russia, and she has a smaller surplus than usual."

N. B. Ream. "The world has been having an over supply of wheat, but is now caught short. England was the only buyer here, till the failure of the crop in Europe"

Then follow the opinions of a number of these dealers who believe the high prices will not last long. We hope this view is wrong, for our people need high prices.

THE AUBURN MARKET.

Of course, the wheat bulge was in part caused by excitement, and that part of it liable soon to die out. But we hope there is enough reality to the boom to hold out. In all local markets, like Auburn, these excitements do not prevail. Here a dealer buys real wheat and must pay such a price that he can send it to Toledo and get his money back and enough to cover freight. Hence it may be $1 in Chicago or Toledo, and but 94 or 95 cents here. There is another thing, also. All this dollar wheat has to be the best. Here we find much of the wheat mixed with rye, and it cannot go for best. And this affects the price. But altogether, the boom will give us for a time at least, something nearer to living prices. All of which we rejoice to see. We hope this plain and practical lesson, will teach our government, that we must open more markets for our products of farm and factory, Therein lies our hope for the future.

THE EXCURSIONISTS.

Following is a list of those who left this morning for northern Michigan on the G. R. & I. excursion: Rev. and Mrs. T. M. Guild, Mr. and Mrs. John Zimmerman, A. Lewis, Geo. Grund, Mr. Johnson, Joseph Pfefferel and Billy Miller. Mr. and Mrs. John Zimmerman will go on to the Soo and spend next Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Darling.

A Blooming Fraud.

The Dispatch says it is willing to publish the city's legal notices for half price, or less. If the Dispatch is honest in this, why did they not do it for half price when it got the work through a republican board? The records show it charged full prices. Why this sudden spasm of virture? Why offer to do work for a democratic board cheaper than for its own party?

Here is the Dispatch's bill for the last ordinance it published.

"To publishing town ordinance in Dispatch, issues of May 14 and 21, 1896, 100 lines at 15c a line, $15,00"

This is the full legal rate. Besides, in the same bill we find $1.00 charged for publishing the treasurer's notice of "orders called." The records show that the COURIER charged 70 cents for the same notice.

So much for city work. Now for the county. We asked Deputy-Sheriff Platter what rates all the republican papers have been charging for sheriff's sales. He said, "All of them charge full legal rates of 25 cents for each line for four weeks." And to prove this, showed the Dispatch's charge for the sale of D. W. Fair's farm on the suit of the bondsmen. The sale was last Saturday, and Gordon's charge is on the records, $9.75. There were 38 lines, which would mrke it $9.50, but we suppose the extra 25 cents was for the affidavit. One would think a person of sound mind, would not attack another for doing just what he himself always did and still is doing. The entire kick proves the Dispatch and its manager to be a blooming fraud and hypocrite.

As to his attack on Clerk Husselman. The Clerk did not, as the Dispatch charges, get that book for $11 and then charge the town $16. The firm put in a bill for $16 and later, reduced it to $13. The records show this. Comment is unnecessary.

He never belonged to any church, but his parents had him sprinkled in childhood in the Lutheran faith and he always thought that would save him, and he died in that faith. He said on his death bed that he felt assured that God would take him home to rest. He lived an honest life and always tried to do to others, as he wished others to do him He was a law abiding citizen and always gave his children good counsel. All the education he had was common school and not much of that. Through the death of Bro. DOING MICHIGAN

I have often heard it said that northern Indiana and southern Michigan had the finest area of country between New York and Chicago. To verify the saying and to enjoy a brief rest after weeks and months of exertion, I left Butler on 12th of August, in a private conveyance, and after listening to speeches from Gov. Luce, of Michigan, and Hon. Cal Husselman, of Auburn, at the farmer's picnic at Pleasant Lake, drove to the north part of Steuben Co. the first day. Early on Friday morning I was making time across Branch Co., I passed through some of the nicest country I had ever seen. The chief change from Indiana to Michigan, seemed marked by better residences, nicer yards, cleaner and neater farms, and roads, smoother and well worked, and shade trees along the road in great profusion. The productiveness of the soil seems to be the only explanation to the market of diferences in the two states.

I reached Coldwater about 10 a m. It is a gem among small towns, wide streets, beautiful lawns and fine houses are seen from one end of the town to the other. From Coldwater our course was nearly north over much fine country, but some sand, to Tekonsha, in Calhoun Co., a distance of fourteen miles. From this point we drove to Marshall a further distance of twelve miles. Marshall, the county seat of Calhoun Co., is a wide awake bustling town on the Kalamazoo river. From this point we aimed to reach Ceresco, for the night, but taking the main Battle Creek road, night over took us looking vainly for the village. Inquiry recalled the fact that we were several miles from it, but not out of our course. The hospitable doors of a farmer, Geo. Reese, by name, were opened to us, where we spent a delightful evening with his family, consisting of his wife, child, mother and father They owned a large farm from which they had just threshed a 2100 bushels of wheat. Their house was known as the half way house between Battle Creek and Marshall. On Saturday morning we discovered that we had driven about six miles out of our way, and took a northeast course over much loose sandy country to Bellview, in Eaton, Co. which place we reached at above 9 a. m. A journey of seventeen miles northwest across a clay country slightly broken, and over good hard Indiana clay roads, was a great relief after so many miles of sandy gravel. This brought us to our first stopping place near Nashville Barry Co.. The wheat crop is very good all the way, corn promises a big crop. They hay crop is immense, buckwheat and millet promise a good yield, potatoes, are small and so far are very short crop. We remained here until Tuesday where we drove across Barry a part of Kalamazoo, and Allegan counties to Kendall in VanBuren Co. Our route lay across a high rolling stretch of country, highly cultivated, with many fine farms. We passed the villages Lacy, Banfield and Hickory Grove, in Barry County; Richland, Cooper and Alamo, in Kalamazoo county; all nice, clean thriving villages, with good dwelling nicely kept lawns, and good substantial business houses, two or more church, but not a single filthy saloon, to curse the people of any of them, thanks to their local option law. While there, we visited, Otsego, a thriving town in Allegan Co., noted for its having the largest paper mills in the state. On our return we came to Kalamazoo and here parted company with Robert Shoup and wife who had accompanied us in our trip from Nashville. We stopped a short time at Kalamazoo's famous outing resort, Long Lake and met some friends and acquaintances, passed Vicksburg, and stopped over night at Fulton nine miles east of Vicksburg. We continued our journey on Friday, we drove south passing Leondias in St. Joseph Co., to Colon in same county. From Colon we go east and south across Branch Co., to Bronson, then to Orland in Steuben Co., and through Angola home, a distance of about two hundred and fifty miles. The trip was one of great pleasure. The weather cool, sometimes too cold for comfort but no heavy rains interfered. We passed through three different section where hail had nearly ruined large areas of corn, but all in all the outlook for better times for farmers was very encourging.

BAD PLAN

A week or so ago we published an item saying that a wealthy Chicago syndicate would probably purchase a large frontage on Lake Wawassee at Cedar Beach. G. A. Bishop has seen some of the evil effects of a move of this kind, and we agree with him that it is very undesirable. He says that a few years ago, one could hunt at will among the marshes of the great Kankakee up towards Chicago. But later on, a lot of Chicago capitalists got control of a large tract of it, and now no common man dare go on it, as he would be arrested for trespass. And it was but last year, that a bloody battle was had between the men in charge of that land-hired thugs—and some hunters and fishermen. Mr. Bishop fears, and very reasonably, that should wealthy strangers get control of a large part of the land on Wawassee, it would be good by to any more pleasure excursions, and hunting or fishing or perhaps even sailing on that beautiful body of water.

A QUIET WEDDING

Rev. W. L. Meese had scarcely rested from the hard labor connected with his reunion last week, until he was called on to add another couple to the association. The fortunate people were Miss Almeda Smith and Mr. Frank Hough, both of the vicinity of Sugars' Grove, south-west of Auburn Junction. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Meese at 8 o'clock Saturday evening, Aug. 21, '97, at the home of the officiating clergyman, at J. C. Lochner's residence, on north Main-st. The ceremony was brief and performed in Rev. Meese's usual pleasing manner. He knew both parties from their infancy and it gave him great pleasure to preside at their marriage.

Mr. Hough is a successful farmer in his vicinity, and has recently erected a fine new residence in which he and his wife will reside. Of Mrs. Hough we can only add, that she is a handsome bride. She has been closely identified with church work, and a favorite among the young people of their neighborhood.

The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Hough has opened a new era in newspaperdom. On previous occasions the COURIER reporter has been obliged to go to the homes where the marriages occured and learn the particulars, or get them (sometimes wrong) from "one who was there." But on this occasion the contracting parties came to our home, and there we made their acquaintance, witnessed the ceremony and will number them with our friends for the future.

The COURIER joins in hearty congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Hough, and wishes them a happy and prosperous future.

RUNAWAY.

Daniel Ackemire of Fairfield had a brisk runaway in town yesterday evening. He was on his way home, when the pin came out of the doubletree, and the horses took fright and ran. They got loose and ran up as far as Isaac Brandon's orchard, where they were finally stopped. After fixing up his doubletree, Mr. Ackemire went home all right with but little harm done.

Slipper Slighter Than Sophistry.

It is said that the physicians of ancient Athens used to take with them a sophist, or professional advocate, to persuade their patients to take their medicine. The method of our forefathers was more simple but effective. I am sure no sophist could ever have persuaded upon me to take some of the doses that went down my youthful throat; but Grandmother's slipper prevailed.—Exchange.

Proof.

Jinks—That was a strange opinion of Capt. Symmes that the world is hollow. Binks—I am inclined to believe his theory was right. Jinks—Why so? Binks—Because so many people have gone under lately.—Washington Times.

THE DAYS IN THE YEAR.

360 Days Had to Give Way in Favor of One of 365.

There is a story in Plutarch which must convince every reader that one myth at least relates to an alteration made in the Egyptian calendar to extend the length of the year from 360 days to 365. A year of 360 days existed in Egypt at an early period, and may possibly have been arrived at in the way suggested by Mr. F. L. Griffith. The lunar month, from new moon to new moon, being twenty-nine and a half days in length, the convenient round number of thirty days was taken as a standard, and twelve months of thirty days each made up the year. The solar year is more difficult to observe than the lunar month, the intervals being longer, and a year of 360 days was a very convenient and reasonable approximation to it. At any rate, the year of 360 days came into use, and a curious custom of Acanthae, near Memphis, seems to allude to it. A perforated vessel was filled with water by 360 priests on each day of the year. In the Island of Philae, again, 360 pitchers were placed around the tomb of Osiris, for making funeral libations and were filled every day by the priests with milk. With 360 days in the year, the ecliptic circles of the heavens, as represented in the charts, would be divided into 360 equal parts; and we must regard it as a relic of this time that the circle is still made to consist of 360 degrees. But so erroneous an estimate of the length of the year would soon be corrected by experience. It is evident that in about seventy-two years a cycle would be accomplished in which the New Year's Day would sweep through all the months, remaining only six years in each. The same month, so far as its name was concerned, would now be in the inundation time, now in the season of sowing, and anon in the time of reaping, and the agriculturist must have been perplexed. A text in the papyrus Anastasi makes reference to such perplexity, and may receive its explanation here. Goodwin translated it, "May Amen deliver me from the cold season, when the sun does not shine, the winter comes instead of the summer, the month is stormy, the hours shortened." Similar confusion would overtake the religious festivals, the New Year, for example, coming five days before its proper time, and then ten days before, and so on; and it might be thought that its observance at the wrong season would displease the gods. The year of 360 days had to give way and ultimately did so in favor of one of 365 days. The precise date of the change is not known, but it is referred to in inscriptions of the time of Amenemha I (circa 2400 B. C.), and may, of course, have been introduced much earlier. When this was done, the original months were not altered, but a "little month" of five days was interpolated at the end of the year, between the month Mesori of one year and the Thoth of the next.—Westminster Review.

Wished to Be Prepared.

"I wish, my dear," said Mr. Frankfort to his wife, "that you would let the hired man bring my rifle down from the attic while I get some other things ready."

"Your rifle?" she repeated. "Surely you are not going hunting?"

"Not at all."

As he spoke he took a bowie knife from its sheath and began to sharpen it carefully on a whetstone.

"What is that knife for?" asked his wife.

"Well, I hope I shall not have occasion to use it, but it is best to be prepared."

As he said this he examined his seven shot revolver, and filled the side pocket of his coat with cartridges. By this time the hired man had brought the rifle, and Mr. Frankfort made sure that he had a good supply of ammunition for the weapon."

"My dear," begged his wife, "won't you tell me what all this means? You say you are not going hunting. What do you need of all these weapons?"

"My darling," replied the brave man, "do not be anxious. It is more than probable that I shall return alive, but if not you will find my will made, and my life insurance policy is valid. Kiss me, dear, and hope for the best."

"But where, oh where, are you going?"

"Have you forgotten that I am a member of the Kentucky legislature, my dear? I go to attend a regular session."

And before she could protest the brave man had snatched a kiss from her pale forehead and departed.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

But after all the best thing to do is to call on B.C.&B. and let them show you one of the real machines.

—We call the attention of our reader to the Howe School, Lima, Indiana, for the education of boys and young men. This is one of the best military schools in the west and the expense is less than at most schools of a similar grade. It has a beautiful location, magnificent building and is managed by gentlemen of large and successful experience. It would pay parents or guardians having boys to educate to investigate the advantages of this school, ad. of which is found in another column of this paper,

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen. Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

EVERY PACKAGE

Has the Z Stamp in red on the wrapper.

The New Version

Respectfully incribed to Mountz and Sharpless, the fighting attorneys:

Let dogs delight to bark and bite
For 'tis their nature to,
Let bears and lions, growl and fight
For God hath made them so.

But, lawyers, you should never let,
Your angry passions rise,
Your little claws were never made
To scratch each other's eyes.

Colorless quartz is found in many parts of the world, and is used for optical purposes and to imitate the diamond. It, however, lacks the luster of the strass or paste imitations.

It is a whole day's work for two men to fell even the smallest mahogany tree. On account of the spurs which project from the base of the trunk a scaffold has to be erected and the tree cut off above the spurs, leaving thus a stump of the very best wood from ten to fifteen feet high.

According to an account of "fires at theaters," published in the Revue Bleue of Paris, every theater in Paris has at one time or another been burned except the Comedie Francaise. It adds that the Comedie Francaise is the only theater which has not adopted electric lamps for the footlights.

West Turkestan is thinly peopled and has few schools. The Russian Government has now fitted up as schools a few railroad carriages, which remain at each station for a few weeks. The teacher lives in the carriage. The children are required to learn a lesson or two until the itinerant school again reaches their neighborhood.

Mr. Appleton, secretary of the "British and Foreign Arbitration and Peace Society," has been sentenced to three months' imprisonment by the Marylebone police magistrate for assaulting and beating a housemaid. He is described as an author and publisher, 60 years of age, who went about armed with a revolver and a swordstick.

William C. Whitney has planned a $150,000 ball-room attachment for his New York mansion. This makes society's mouth water, for it means that the ex-Secretary is going to entertain on an elaborate scale next winter. The Whitney house, when the new feature is added, will probably represent the investment of more than $1,000,000.

The new cap adopted by the Navy Department for officers of the service has met with much criticism. The change of uniform is regarded as entirely in the interest of the military tailors of the country. One great objection to the cap is that across its visor is stitched a greater or less amount of gold braid, the quantity and design depending upon the rank of the wearer.

Pennsylvania's bituminous coal product last year was a little more than a million tons less than in 1895; Ohio lost 480,000 tons; West Virginia increased her output about 1,500,000 tons, and Illinois about 2,000,000 tons. The mountain State had the most important increase among the Appalachian States, Illinois in the Middle West, and Colorado was the only State in the Rocky Mountain region whose production was increased.

RUM IN COLONIAL TIMES.

There Were Sixty-three Distilleries in Massachusetts.

The power of rum as a commerical factor in the colonies was at its height about 1750. That year the royal treasury report gave sixty-three distilleries in Massachusetts turning molasses into rum. This formed the store for about 900 vessels engaged in various branches of trade—400 in cod fishing, 200 mackerel fishing, 100 whalers, etc. Newport kept pace relatively with Boston. Refuse codfish paid for much of the molasses.

Connecticut attempted to prohibit distilling, because it made molasses scarce, but the prohibition was very hastily stopped when the citizens found that business went where rum could be obtained. Rum proved the best New England commodity in all trading operations. Rum was the Indian's choice, in fact his only acceptance, as payment for his peltries; it was chosen with equal eagerness by the Virginian or Carolinian in exchange for his tobacco. The Newfoundland fishermen wished it in return for codfish, and, most important of all, on the Guinea coast New England rum entirely vanquished French brandy as a medium for acquiring slaves. The commerce in rum and slaves afforded all the ready money that paid for any merchandise in England. It was the driving power of all commercial machinery. The circuit was powerful at every step. The Yankee vessel laden with homemade rum sailed to the African coast. The rum was bartered to great advantage for negroes. The negroes were carried to and sold at a large profit at the West Indies and the distillation in Newport and Boston started afresh the round of New England money-making. Sometimes trade was so brisk that the market was stripped of rum.

In the year 1752 Isaac Freeman wanted a cargo of rum for the African trade. He sent to Newport, where there were then thirty great rum distilleries in full blast. His correspondent wrote that he could not have it for three months. "There are so many vessels loading for Guinea we can't get our hogsheads of rum for cash. We have been lately to New London and all along the seaport towns in order to purchase molasses, but we can't get one hogshead."

The shipmasters were not above watering the rum to make it go as far as possible. Old Merchant Potter instructed his captains to "trade with the blacks, worter ye' rum as much as possible, and sell as much by short messur as you can."—Brockton (Mass.) Times.

Extracting Information.

The man who sits in a city railway station at the "Bureau of General Information" must, like "the little busy bee," gather honey "from every opening flower." When off duty, he should be refilling his memory with all sorts of knowledge, for at the bureau he must be "on tap" to every man, woman or child thirsting for information. A similar burden rests on lawyers in large practice, and on clergymen whose popularity makes the public their parishioners.

That eminent preacher, the late Charles H. Spurgeon, was once asked by an American visitor, who had noticed that an orphanage, a theological school, a church and many correspondents kept him busy from morning to night:

"Pray, Mr. Spurgeon, when and where do you compose your sermons?"

"I am always at that," replied the preacher. "I get something from every one I meet. I shall suck a sermon from you before I am through with you."

A distinguished British seaman, the late Admiral Sir George Tryon, used to act on the preacher's rule. When secretary to the British Admiralty he was obliged to pay the penalty attached to the post of dining at city banquets, guild and private dinners. Being invited to more dinner parties than he could go to, he used to pick and choose among them. His wife, for a long time, was ignorant of the rule which guided her husband in refusing certain invitations and accepting others.

At last she discovered that he accepted only those invitations which would lead him to places where he might meet some one who could give information of value to him in his profession. He cared nothing for the gossip which makes up the talk at a fashionable dinner party, but he was on the lookout for useful information, and was ready to extract it from any source. Like Spurgeon, he learned something from everybody.—Youth's Companion.

Coating Steel with Aluminum.

One of the latest novelties in the field of sheet metal working as noticed in the Metal Worker, and produced by a firm in St. Louis—name not given—is that of steel sheets coated with aluminum, these, it is claimed, being superior to and more durable than galvanized iron, in plate or planished iron for many purposes for which those materials are now generally used. The special advantages of such aluminum-coated sheets are stated to be that they can be worked and seamed without peeling; the coating, adhering absolutely to the sheet, can be easily soldered, will resist the action of sulphurous gases, and can be heated to a red heat without destroying the coating. Moreover, such sheets can, when desired, be polished to a luster equal to burnished silver or nickel. An absolutely smooth and evenly-covered surface is presented, free from imperfections of any kind. Aluminum-coated sheets plated with copper are also produced, and these also take a high polish.

A Gentle Hint.

"Gussie was afraid that bashful Mr. Bowman wouldn't kiss her."

"What did she do?"

"Got up and pulled down the shade."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

SPRING SAVES ACHING BACKS.

A USEFUL attachment for a sewing machine is a "relief spring" attached to the pedals and under part of the table. It saves much labor and many a backache by doing the hardest of the work of running the machine. The pressure of the toes downward is the only motion necessary, as the spring brings the treadle back again, saving the heel motion. This latter is what causes all the backaches, and with the spring is done away with entirely. This spring can be attached to any machine. It is obvious that this arrangement will prove a great relief to every woman who sews. It does half the work.

THE SPRING SAVES WORK.

Laughter Causes Wrinkles.

It has long been a popular belief that wrinkles are chiefly caused by sorrow and care. It is now claimed that this is not always the case—in fact it is said that merry folk are far oftener afflicted with them than are the sorrowful, and that laughter more frequently furrows the face than tears. There is an art in laughter, and to know how to laugh is really quite as important as to know when to do so. If you laugh with the sides of your face the skin will work loose in time, and wrinkles will form in exact accordance with the kind of laugh you indulge in. The man who always wears a smirk will have a series of semicircular wrinkles covering his cheeks. A gambler who is accustomed to suppress his feelings generally has a deep line running from each side of his nose to the upper corner of his mouth, which in time extends to the chin, forming the shape of a half moon. A cadaverous person is usually marked with two wrinkles, one on the jaw and the other under the eye, meeting at right angles at the cheek bones. The student's wrinkles form on the brow, while those of the schemer round his eyes and resemble the spokes of a wheel.

Aprons Again in Favor.

Aprons, for so many years regarded as the distinguishing mark of serving women, promise to be the rage in the smart set in London. The apron of the future, however, will differ from that of the past which our grandmothers used to wear. In the days gone by it was a somber affair of black silk or alpaca, sometimes set off by a few dainty tucks or rows of herring-bone stitching and a little very fine lace. Now the very cheapest aprons are made of the finest white linens and muslins and batistes, and are puffed and frilled with lace and trimmed with ribbons until the old ladies of a hundred years ago would never dream that they were aprons. The finest aprons are made of real lace, and are well worth passing down from generation to generation.

A Lucky Bride.

Mrs. Berry was married last year and went with her husband to spend the honeymoon in the gold fields of Alaska. When they were married they were poor, now they have $130,000 in gold. So much for love, pluck and luck.

Business Ability of Women.

It is said that through the medium of clubs women are developing business ability, executive capacity, tolerance for the opinions and views of other people and a broad sense of charity and loyalty toward the world, which will materially strengthen her entire character. The achievements of kings and queens and princes does not make all of history by any means. The doings of the common people—the great class which keeps the world strong and true and helpful—make the noblest history, and women who realize that they are women sharing with all others in their sex the highest aims and ambitions for the good of the world have made a discovery that gives life a different color and makes a woman's possibilities rise to the noblest height. The true club woman is usually a strong and intellectual patriot, and an earnest student of political measures and laws. Indeed, women claim that the woman's club is a fine school for culture and broad mental occupation, and the true, wide-awake woman is proving herself a power in the world—a power that is a permanency.

Reading as a Mental Stimulus.

An eminent French critic said in a lecture recently in New York that "To distrust what we like is the first requisite of progress in art and in life." He did not mean that books that are disagreeable are the only books worth reading. But he did mean that a book which opens up a new field of knowledge, a new outlook upon literature or life, is not at first likely to give the pleasure that comes from one which simply reflects the old familiar ideas of which we say complacently, "How good and true that is, for I've felt it or said it myself." A book that pats you on the head or heart all the time is apt to be little more than a reflection of your own narrow experience, and you will not learn anything from it. A book that makes one feel ignorant is as mortifying to one's pride as a superior person.—Ladies' Home Journal.

A Clever Device.

A clever device for utilizing the beauty that remains in fine lace curtains that have seen their day is to cut out the rich raised work rings and wreaths from which the delicate net has worn away. Apply them to squares of velvet or satin for use as cushion covers. Applied on olive or metallic green velvet or some soft wood brown shade the effect is rich and elegant, especially when further set off with a frill of lace and the back of the pillow made of silk of corresponding tone.

Frog Skins for Gloves.

The latest in the realm of glove-making is gloves of frog skin. This skin is said to be the finest and toughest leather in the world. The demand for them is not great, but of sufficient dimensions to make it worth while to manufacture.

Up-to-Date Bicycle Costume.

Cycling costume of plain green cloth, trimmed with flat and corded braid. The skirt closes in front beneath the two straps of braid. The smart little bolero opens widely in front to show the white linen shirt with three studs.

Washes for Fair Hair.

Take one teaspoonful of borax, and the same quantity of salt; two ounces each of spirits of wine and ammonia water; two drachms of tincture of cantharides, and four ounces each of rose water and distilled water. If the hair is naturally dry, a little almond oil may be added. Or take one ounce of borax and half an ounce of camphor, and dissolve them in one quart of boiling water. When cool, says the London Star, this will be ready for use.

Serious illness should be a mother's only excuse for weaning the baby during hot weather, or until it has safely passed the dangers of the second summer.

The Board of Health of Philadelphia recently issued emergency hints for the summer care of babies. The valuable suggestions are given in full:

"If the child be suddenly attacked with vomiting, purging and prostration, put it into a hot bath for a few minutes, then carefully wipe it dry with a warm towel, and wrap it in warm blankets. If its hands and feet are cold, bottles filled with hot water and wrapped in flannel should be laid against them.

"A mush poultice, or one made of flaxseed meal, to which one-quarter part of mustard flour has been added, or flannels wrung out of hot vinegar and water, should be placed over the belly.

"Five drops of brandy in a teaspoonful of water may be given every ten or fifteen minutes; but if the vomiting persists, give this brandy in equal parts of milk and lime-water.

"If the diarrhoea has just begun, or if it is caused by improper food, a teaspoonful of castor oil or of spiced syrup of rhubarb should be given.

"If the child has been fed partly on the breast and partly on other food, the mother's milk alone must now be used. If the child has been weaned it should have pure milk with lime-water, or weak beef tea, or chicken water.

"The child should be allowed to drink cold water freely."

Scorched Linen.

To restore scorched linen take two onions, peel and slice them and extract the juice by squeezing or pounding. Then cut up half an ounce of white soap and add two ounces of fuller's earth; mix with them the onion juice and half a pint of vinegar. Boil this composition well and spread it when cool over the scorched part of the linen, leaving it to dry thereon. Afterward wash out the linen.

BERNHARD VON BULOW.

The New Prussian Minister of Foreign Affairs.

Bismarck's sarcastic remark of a few years ago that Germany's policy is made by a soldier on half pay and a retired state's attorney is no longer correct, since Prince Hohenlohe is German chancellor and Bernard von Bulow Prussian minister of foreign affairs. The latter is the descendant of a long line of soldiers and statesmen, and now occupies the same position his father did twenty-five years ago. He may be considered as a sort of link between Bismarck and the emperor, because he is highly esteemed by the former and very much liked by the latter, a position which will be of great advantage in the reconciliation between the former chancellor and the emperor. Herr von Bulow entered the diplomatic career in 1874 as one of the assistants in the foreign office, and soon was made secretary of legations, serving in this capacity in Rome, Paris and Vienna. Then he was made minister plenipotentiary at Bucharest. Subsequently he was ambassador in Rome; and from that position, and only 48 years old, he is called upon to fill the highest place in the Prussian diplomatic service. His political convictions are unknown, though it is claimed by those who know the man well that he is too much of a cosmopolitan character to affiliate with the reactionary feudalists who now compose the "kitchen cabinet" of the German emperor. On the other hand, no liberal policy can be expected from him, because his training as well as his family traditions naturally places him in the conservative ranks. As such he is likely to stand for a strongly developed protective tariff, as well as against bimetallism, representing in both respects the personal policy of the emperor. He has had very little opportunity to pose as a public speaker. What he has done in former years in the Prussian diet and in the German reichstag was to read from manuscript his carefully prepared speeches, which are described as marvels of elegant diction and clear cut logic.

BERNHARD VON BULOW.

"ORATOR OF THE HOUSE."

Jonathan Dolliver, of Iowa, Enjoys that Pleasing Distinction.

There are many brilliant men and speakers of national reputation among the representatives in Congress, but it is generally conceded that Hon. Jonathan P. Dolliver, of the Tenth Iowa District, is pre-eminently the orator of that distinguished body. Mr. Dolliver was elected to the Fifty-first Congress, and at that time was but 31 years of age.

The first recognition by the House of Mr. Dolliver's brilliant powers, followed his speech on the McKinley tariff bill, when even those widely differing from him in political creeds generously accorded the praise won by this effort. Subsequently he was invited to New York, where in 1890 he spoke at the Metropolitan Grand Opera House. Personally he is handsome, about 5 feet 10 tall, clear brown eyes and hair of chestnut hue. He has a good complexion and in his manner there is a blending of the old-time southern chivalry with the breeziness of the State of his adoption. His manner is confident, his gestures graceful, his voice deep, resonant and penetrating.

HON. JONATHAN P. DOLLIVER.

Mad Cats Worse than Mad Dogs.

According to the returns just published by the Pasteur institute at Paris, fully 10 per cent of the patients treated there owe their injuries to the bites of cats afflicted with hydrophobia. These wounds are considered by the medical officers in attendance to present a greater degree of danger than the bites of mad dogs, not because there is any difference in the virus, but because, in the first place, the teeth of cats, being more pointed than those of dogs, inflict a deeper wound, and also because a mad dog usually fastens his fangs into the arm, the hand or the leg, while a cat invariably jumps for the face of the person it attacks. The nerve centers are far more exposed in the face than in either the arms or legs, and hence the virus enters into the circulation more rapidly by means of a bite in the face than through one elsewhere in the body. It may be added that the returns of the Pasteur institute for the last year show that 1 per cent of the patients who have submitted themselves to treatment have been bitten by mad cows.

If you don't learn to laugh at trouble, you will not have anything to laugh at when you are old.

Loud Talkers and Low Speakers.

"Funny writers and stage comedians make the mistake of representing country people as very loud talkers," remarked Colonel Leonard Ainsworth, of Kansas. "As a matter of fact, persons who are accustomed to the quiet and solitude of rural life speak in a very low tone of voice, while those who live in the constant din and nerve-racking noises of the city naturally acquire the habit of talking loudly. The reason for the difference is plain. When you city folks meet on the street you have to elevate your voices to a high pitch in order to make yourself heard. I never come to St. Louis or visit any other large city that I don't soon get a sore throat from overtaxing my voice. Of course, you who live here are used to the strain on your voice and don't suffer from it as I do.

"If you ever heard an Indian talk you would realize the force of what I say. I never saw a real Indian that spoke much above a whisper. He illustrates exactly what I mean. The Indian lives in quiet and solitude. His atmosphere is not filled with noises and tympanum piercing sounds. Consequently he does not have to elevate his voice in carrying on conversation. Your city arab, the counterpart of the Indian, talks loud enough when he comes to Arkansas to be heard in the next county."—St. Louis Republic.

A Lake of Oil in a Region of Coal.

A remarkable discovery is reported from Alaska. Some gold prospectors several months ago ran across what seemed to be a lake of oil. It was fed by innumerable springs, and the surrounding mountains were full of coal. They brought samples to Seattle, Wash., where tests proved it to be of as high a grade as any ever taken out of Pennsylvania wells. A Seattle company was formed and experts were sent up. They have returned on the steamer Topeka, and their report has more than borne out the first reports. It is said that there are enough oil and coal in the district to supply the world. It is close to the ocean; in fact, the experts say that the oil oozes out into the salt water.

Manx Humor.

The Manx people are very plain spoken. Hall Caine, who is their acknowledged historian, tells a good story of a grumpy old Methodist woman in the Isle of Man who could never be satisfied with her preachers. One of them, being about to leave, called to say good-by. "Well, good-by," she said, "and God bless ye, and may the Lord send a better man in your place." Next day his successor came to see her. "Well, I hope the Lord has sent a good man," she said, "but there's none so good that comes as them that goes."

If parents would be more careful about their walk before their children, their talk to them would have more weight.

NERVOUS PROSTRATION.

A New Jersey Woman Expresses Her Gratitude to Mrs. Pinkham for Relief.

"Will you kindly allow me," writes Miss Mary E. Saidt to Mrs. Pinkham, "the pleasure of expressing my gratitude for the wonderful relief I have experienced by taking your Compound? I suffered for a long time with nervous prostration and general debility, caused by falling of the womb. It seemed as though my back would never stop aching. I could not sleep. I had dull headaches. I was weary all the time, and life was a burden to me. I sought the seashore for relief, but all in vain. On my return I resolved to give your medicine a trial. I took two bottles and was cured. I can cheerfully state, if more ladies would only give your medicine a fair trial they would bless the day they saw the advertisement, and there would be happier homes. I mean to do all I can for you in the future. I have you alone to thank for my recovery, for which I am very grateful."—Miss Mary E. Saidt, Jobstown, N. J.

NOTES ABOUT SCHOOLS AND THEIR MANAGEMENT.

Efforts Should Be Made to Beautify the School Grounds—Estimates of the Cost of London Schools—Tornado Drills in Kansas School Rooms.

The School Grounds.

When grounds are properly leveled and drained and freed from disagreeable obstructions, the first effort to beautify them in every instance, should be to erect the necessary closets and to shield them from observation by a thickly planted row or clump of evergreens. Next, hard walks should be made from the street to the different doors of the building, and from them to the closets screened by the evergreens.

When the school building stands a short distance from the street these walks may wind around oval plots where flowers and shrubs may be grown. In various parts of the grounds beautiful trees may be planted, like the maple, or the elm, or the oak. Between these plots of ground, of whatever form, oval or otherwise, should be sown seeds of the most beautiful and hardy grasses adapted for lawns, so that there will be formed a smooth and handsome turf, which must be often rolled and carefully cut. In some shaded corner native ferns should be planted, and elsewhere some of the most elegant native shrubs should find a cherished home. The suggestion of State Superintendent Sabin, of Iowa, is worth adopting, "To teach children the kind of trees which flourish best in that section; which of them are best for timber; which for shade; and which for fuel. Specimens of each will then be found on the school grounds, and referred to for purposes of illustration. In the same connection we must teach how to plant and care for them, and cultivate in each an honest respect for a thriving growing tree."

In the rear of the school buildings the playgrounds should be located, where trees also may be planted to afford shade and pleasure, but not to interfere with the sports of the children. If in the planting of trees in the grounds the children are permitted to take part, and name them, there will be a feeling of interest and ownership in the trees on the part of the children which will go far toward securing needed care for them.

The plots devoted to flowers and shrubs may have many varieties in the passing years. The children often have plants they would gladly place in the school grounds for the summer. Others have seeds which they would sow, so that each summer the ground would disclose the taste of the pupils as well as of the teachers. Different plots might be assigned to different rooms or classes of pupils, and a wholesome rivally excited as to which should be most neatly kept, and show the greatest improvements in the summer. Great variety might be given the grounds from year to year by training hardy vines and creepers over the walls of the building, and around the windows, or by planting them beside arches and trellises over which they would grow. The comparatively trifling expense needful to make the required arches and trellises would gladly be met by the parents when once the children proved their interest in such methods of beautifying the grounds.—Educational Record.

Queer Place for a School.

Miss Daisy Doud is the teacher of a school on the Farallone Islands, which are a part of the First Ward of the city of San Francisco. There are four lighthousekeepers on the islands, which are rocky and rough, and Miss Doud teaches the children of the keepers. There are ten little ones, and, says the New York Tribune, Miss Doud's schoolhouse is probably one of the oldest in the world. All kinds of sea birds live upon the rocky island coast, and if Miss Doud's little ones are inclined to the study of natural history they will have ample opportunity for the feathered and finned part of it, at any rate. Deep sea fish and shellfish are in abundance at the foot of the schoolhouse, and the spray sometimes dashes angrily up the steep rocks and washes the windows of the schoolroom.

Cost of London Schools.

It will take nearly $15,000,000 to run the public schools in the control of the London School Board for the fiscal year ending Aug. 1, 1898. This is the estimate filed with the education department by Sir John Key, chairman of the Finance Committee. Superintendents and teachers alone will draw over $6,000,000 in salaries. Books and stationery, which are furnished free, will absorb another $500,000, while $400,000 is appropriated for the schools in which cooking, laundry work and manual training are made a specialty.

The estimate, which will be approved by the Government, is $2,000,000 in excess of the annual outlay two years ago, this fact being due to the increased number of schools and heavy additions of scholars to the old schools, involving a larger force of teachers and other auxiliaries.

Tornado Drills in Kansas Schools.

A movement has been started in Kansas to have a tornado cave attached to every schoolhouse as a refuge for the children in times of those destructive visitations which are there so frequently, requiring special provisions of refuge ad protection from them. Once in the cave, no matter how violent the storm, the children are safe. In some of the schools tornado drills have been instituted.

A Living Record.

A white man sued a black man in Natal the other day, and while the trial was proceeding the litigants came to an amicable settlement.

The counsel for the plaintiff announced this circumstance to the court.

"The agreement must be in writing," said the judge.

"We have it here in black and white," replied the counsel, pointing to the parties; "what more is necessary?"

Wheeling and Its Effects.

Even at this late day there may be occasionally found an individual who doubts the value of bicycle exercise. Of course, such people are scarce and growing fewer every day. One of them was airing his views in a New York clubhouse, claiming that the world would yet be sorry for allowing the wheel to take possession of it to such an extent. Included in his tirade was a general statement regarding the expense incident to keeping a bicycle. A wheelman listened to the bill of particulars and then declared that the $100 he paid for his wheel was more than saved in one season's riding. This statement was so sweeping as to call forth contemptuous snorts from the previous speaker and even caused doubtful headhakings among other wheelmen present. The young man who made the statement stuck to it, however, and it was finally agreed to leave the matter to a committee selected from members who would be sure to thoroughly examine the subject. The committee devoted one or two afternoons to the work and then brought in the following surprising report:

Expense for six months—
Cost of wheel	$100 00
Best lamp	5 00
Most approved bell	1 50
Good cyclometer	1 50
Pair toe clips	50
Bicycle suit	10 00
Bicycle headwear	2 00
Bicycle shoes	4 50
Bicycle stockings	3 00
Two sweaters	7 00
Two pairs gloves	3 00
Three punctures repaired	1 00
One new tire	4 00
Pumping of tires	80
Foot pump	60
Checking bicycle	3 00
Bicycle overhauled	3 00
Oils and fittings	2 75
Total	$153 15
Saved in six months—
Railroad fares	$95 60
Difference in clothing	35 00
Car fare saved	9 10
Theater tickets saved	32 00
Flowers saved	15 00
Candy saved	17 50
Less outlay for cigars	36 40
Less strong drink	25 00
Difference in laundry	6 50
Carriage hire saved	10 00
Total	$282 10
In favor of bicycle	128 95

This finding surprised even the man who claimed that the wheel was a money saver. As for the party who had been declaiming against the popular pastime, he is believed to have been forever silenced so far as that subject is concerned.

If you enjoy summer picnics you can make a very nice "carrier" for the family lunch basket by fastening two wheels together with diagonals. These need be no more substantial than willow strips, or they can be metal bars. It is best to have a mechanic fasten these together the first time and fit with adjustable fastenings so the carrier can be taken off. The basket is suspended from a cross-piece of its own.

Dont's for Wheelmen.

Don't scorch.

Don't ride until depressed.

Don't think you own the streets.

Don't drink immediately after meals.

Don't drink alcoholic beverages during long rides.

Don't forget to give a new cyclist plenty of room.

Don't ring your bell except to give notice of your approach.

Don't coast down hills having cross streets along the way.

Don't ride at the expense of nerves, muscles and internal organs.

Don't attempt to accomplish feats for which the body is not prepared.

Don't attempt to ride rapidly by an electric car standing to unload passengers.

Don't forget in turning corners to the left always keep to the outside of the street.

Don't let your pride force you to keep up with the balance when you feel tired.

Don't expect pedestrians to get out of your way. Make it your business to find a way around them.

Don't forget the wheel is master and not the slave when the hand of the rider is unsteady and the sight dimmed.

Don't fail to remember in turning corners to the right to keep as far as possible without trespassing on the left side of the road.

Don't overlook the important courtesy when meeting other cyclists, pedestrians and vehicles—keep to the right. In overtaking and passing them keep to the left.

Don't fail to always ring your bell in overtaking riders and pedestrians to give warning of your approach. This does not mean that they are compelled to get out of your way.

Don't when riding straight ahead vary your course suddenly to either side without first assuring yourself that no other rider is close in your rear on the side toward which you turn.

DECLINE OF SPAIN.

GREAT LOSS OF TERRITORY IN A HUNDRED YEARS.

Once Owned Nearly All of Both Americas—Cuba All that Is Left—That Likely to Be Dropped Because Too Hot to Hold.

Sold and Lost in War.

In losing its hold upon Cuba Spain gives up almost its final possession in the New World. It still holds a tiny island, but uses it only as a coaling and provision station.

Columbus found a continent across the Atlantic and took possession of it in the name of his sovereign. Then Spain "owned" the New World. But other explorers immediately took possession of corners of it. England took a big slice. People came from Holland and parts of England, and, banding themselves together, finally called themselves the United States.

In 1801 Spain found herself deprived of the continent she had discovered 350 years before to a great extent. The entire eastern coast was gone, both in North and South America, and there were alarming inroads in the center. But Spain still owned California, Florida, Central America and all the western part of South America.

To-day she owns nothing. Cuba is practically gone from her. She does not govern it, neither does she get its products. The rest of North America has passed away by conquest, by grant or by purchase. South America, true, has Spaniards living in it. But they have formed independent colonies and are known as Chileans, Bolivians, Peruvians and Colombians. They love Spain, but they love themselves more. They will not pay direct tribute or join in her government.

Spain must soon withdraw to the Eastern hemisphere, where she has a lovely little peninsula, and confine herself to that territory and a few rich little islands in the Pacific that still belong to her.

In losing North and South America Spain has shown not such bad generalship, nor in the opinion of her sovereigns such bad judgment. England is the only country that has been able to divide herself gracefully and govern lands across an ocean. She does it by a broad policy that allows home rule and almost absolute independence on the part of the Governor General. Victoria Regina's name is upon the official notepaper and her head upon the money, but she does not "grind" the people or compel them to pay more than they would have to pay to their own government of they were "free."

Spain in giving up her western lands had made some pretty good deals. Others were not so good. The outcome of the Cuban war will tell whether she has profited by the Cuban struggle. If she gets it absolutely back it will be hers forever to hold in a state of menial subjection—to punish and starve for generations to come. But if she parts with it and makes it self-governing, she will not get the tribute from it which the island needs to pay its own debts.

Spain's first loss, in the early part of the century, was the great district calling itself Louisiana. Spain had got Louisiana in 1762 from the French, who originally discovered it. But when Napoleon became Consul he got Louisiana back, and the big "New Orleans territory," and held them secure. This embraced all the southern and middle portions of the United States, and was the largest and richest piece of land then known.

The United States got it from the French in 1803 by paying $15,000,000, and it is said that the Spanish have never ceased to mourn that they could not have held it until this purchase, which would have enriched their then diminished coffers greatly.

Spain's next loss was Mexico, by conquest, in 1813. On that date Mexico declared herself free. And then began a long series of wars, in which all countries joined, but which resulted in Mexican independence on hard and sure grounds in 1848. Spain lost heavily by this war.

Texas still was Spanish territory. But by act of United States Congress in 1845 Texas was purchased from Spain. It had a debt of $7,500,000, which it seemed as if it could never pay off, and Spain allowed the United States to take Texas if it would assume that debt. There was vigorous opposition at the time, as the country was in a state of financial distress. But Congress insisted, and with what good results the subsequent history of Texas shows.

Spain by this act lost a territory of 318,000 square miles, and twice as large as Ohio, New York and Pennsylvania all three put together.

Florida meanwhile had been purchased of Spain in 1819 for $5,000,000. There were 67,000 square miles, and the whole country was rich in vegetation and minerals. It was called the floral region of the New World and was named for the Spanish Easter, upon which day it was discovered.

England, all this while, had been taking pieces of country from the original Spanish owners. Part of its present Canadian territory it got because the Spanish wanted to join the English. Much it got from the French, who had taken it forcibly from the Spanish. A little it got by purchase.

So rapidly did the land pass out of the hands of the Spanish Crown that within a generation the lower half of North America from being a Spanish country became part of the United States. California was added to the United States in 1848, after the Mexican struggle. It embraced the immense tract that is now divided up into six States, and in 1849 it became the Territory of California. A few men, now known as "the forty-niners," went there and came back with such astounding reports of the richness of its fruit, the fineness of its wood and the variety of its ore that others started out. There were fairy tales told of its glittering sand. In 1850 it became a State and soon proved to be the purse of the United States, holding money that could be traded off with foreign countries for that which the United States needed.

Neither Spain nor Mexico would have parted with California, including Oregon, if they had known what lay there. The old Spanish residents tried to keep the secret, and from that fact comes the romantic Spanish stories of the West.

byville, Ill., is said to be one of the foremost musicians in the world. Although not yet out of her studies, she has managed to amaze and delight the leading musicians of Europe with her superb performances on the piano. For the past two years she has been studying under Herr Tappert and Professor Busoni. The latter, when asked by Miss Cottlow for the amount of his charges, replied: "Gussie, there can be no talk of business between artists. You are an artist. Your music delights me. If I can be of any help to you in your career I shall do all in my power for you. You may take my aid as a courtesy from an older artist to a younger one." Miss Cottlow began her musical studies at 3 years of age. At 5 she made her debut in public. From that time she was in demand. At 9 she was placed in charge of Professor Wolfsohn of Chicago and began her studies in harmony and counterpoint under Professor Gleason. She plays the most difficult music from memory. She won New York musicians with her performances of Beethoven's concerto in C, which she played with the Thomas orchestra three years ago. She has lately turned her mind to composition. Her first piece, "A Romanza" for violin and piano, was bought and published in Germany. Miss Cottlow is undoubtedly the ablest pianist ever produced in America.

Cost of Trolley Power.

A table taken from the annual reports of the railroad commissioners of New York and Massachusetts for nearly all of the street railway properties shows the cost of the electric power required to run a car one mile, under average conditions of load, etc. The table gives the number of cars owned, the car mileage per year and the cost of the electric power per mile and per passenger. Of the nineteen companies operating less than 250,000 car miles four are obtaining power at a cost of less than 2 cents per car, six between 2 and 3 cents, five between 3 and 4 cents, one between 4 and 5 cents and three at more than 5 cents; of the five companies operating over 5,000,000 car miles per year one obtains the power for less than 1 cent per car mile, three between 1 and 2 cents, and one between 2 and 3 cents; other similar figures are also given between these limits. The Brooklyn Heights Company has the cheapest power, 0.86 per car mile, followed by the Binghamton with 0.94; the cost of power for Massachusetts roads includes repairs and depreciation of the station plant, which is not the case of the New York roads.—Street Railway Journal.

Wild Cat Stew.

The old advice to eat with closed eyes in a French restaurant will have to be given to prospective eaters at outdoor feasts in the South, if variety continues to become more spicy down there, as witness, following the cold meat luncheon of a Maryland physician, lately noted in the New York Sun, a "rabbit salmis," given to his friends by Judge M. S. Bringier of New Orleans, which turned out to be a wild-cat stew.

Indoors, particularly in the sitting posture, are far more prejudicial to health than excessive muscular exertion in the open air. Waiting for Its Rations.

To be shaved while traveling on a fast flying railroad train is not the pleasantest thing in the world, though the accidents to men occupying the barber's chair on the "flyer" are not so numerous as one might suppose. A writer tells a story of a man who amid the joggles and turns and bumps of the car noticed with some trepidation a black cat mewing and licking its chops expectantly. "What is the cat so interested for?" asked the man. "It's waiting for an ear," said the barber. And the train rolled on.

Notice is hereby given that upon petition filed in said court by William H. Other School Laws

Indiana, has, all in all probably the best school law of all the states. But there are some points in the laws of other states, that have their advantages. Note these, from the laws of Nebraska:

A school district can contract with another dictrict, to teach certain of its pupils. If the teacher cannot have a class in Algebra or Latin, the pupils who desire to study those branches, can be sent to another district.

The school boards have three members in a district, and if the district is so thinly populated that it has but two voters to hold the office of school director, then the county superintendent becomes the third director and must act as such. When for a period of one year, there has been but one legal voter in the district, it can be abandoned, and the pupils and territory annexed to another district, or divided between two or more other districts.

In attaching pupils to another district it may be found that a pupil has a long distance to go, and in such case, the district has power to pay his transportation to the school he has to attend.

THE MEESE REUNION.

Has Lost no Charms and the Attendance was Larger than last year.

At early morning people began coming into town, generally with double teams and loads of well dressed people. There was a threatening look in the heavens and now and then a light shower sprinkled down. But people seemed to have faith in the weather and kept coming. In the lovely public park around the court house, where the seats and stand were, groups soon began to gather. At 11 a. m. the exercises began with prayer and singing. Ex-County Superintendent Merica was elected chairman and made a brief speech. D. M. Link and Doputy-Clerk Blanche Shilling were made secretaries. Then there was singing by members of the Ex-Slaves' Jubilee Company from Garrett. Hon. E. D. Hartman, of Auburn, was then introduced and made the address of welcome in a happy vein. He alluded to the fact that Mr. Meese was at one time influential in stopping a divorce case, which he, as an attorney, had in court for some one, and that Mr. Meese got the parties to live together in peace. The speaker felt thankful for it, too. He was followed by Mrs. Cammack, the state lecturer of the W. C. T. U., who is here teaching in the county teachers' institute that is in session this week. Then followed the basket dinner, which showed an extensive assortment of tempting layouts.

Just before adjournment for dinner the following committees were appointed:

ON RESOLUTIONS.

Thomas Stafford, Albert Thrush, Geo. Quince, John Lochner and Geo. Swineford.

ON NOMINATIONS.

John Keeran, John Essig, W. S. Dancer, Ed. Kelham and Dr. F. M. Hines.

AFTERNOON.

The meeting was called to order by Chairman C. M. Merica and songs by the Walsworth quartet and the colored gentlemen were heard, The military band also played several fine selections and Prof. Sturgis sang a solo. Then the Cedar Chapel Sunday school sang a very beautiful piece, after which Mr. Merica read the report of the first meeting. The committee on resolutions was then heard through their chairman, J. C. Lochner, and the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

We, the members of the Rev. W. L. Meese Matrimonial Association of Auburn, Indiana, believing that the marriage institution is of the Lord and is sacred, and having for our aims,

1st, The encouragement of courtship and marriage;

2d, The promotion of happiness and concord in married life, and

3d, The discouragement of separation and divorce,

Do hereby declare that it is the opinion of the members of this association that the divorce laws of the State of Indiana are conducive to judicial separation rather than restrictive thereof; that by reason of their laxity they encourage marital discord and domestic infelicity.

That it is the unanimous sentiment of this meeting that the divorce laws of this state should be so amended as to make judicial separation possible only in case of the gravest offences against marital rights or the statute.

And we hereby call upon our representative in the state assembly and all christian people to use their utmost endeavors to have the divorce laws so amended as to enhance the solemnity of the marriage contract and to make the unholy separation of husband and wife impossible to those who apply through whim or caprice or without the very highest moral reasons.

Between exercises of the afternoon a large group picture of the married couples was taken by Photographer Hoffman. Then all joined in a grand march, and at the close of the meeting they were dismissed with a fervent blessing by the reverend minister in whose honor they had gathered. It was a successful meeting.

INDEPENDENCE HALL.

Independence Hall in Philadelphia is to be repaired till it is just as it was in 1876. The various repairs it had undergone in the last hundred years had changed its outside appearance to quite an extent, and the interior had been altered some to suit the tastes of new officers now and then. The room in which the Continental Congress met and that in which the Declaration was signed have always been the same, but all floors have had to be renewed several times. This time they will be made of tile.

Fifty Years Ago.

This is the stamp that the letter bore
Which carried the story far and wide,
Of certain cure for the loathsome sore
That bubbled up from the tainted tide
Of the blood below. And 'twas Ayer's name
And his sarsaparilla, that all now, know,
That was just beginning its fight of fame
With its cures of 50 years ago.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

is the original sarsaparilla. It has behind it a record for cures unequalled by any blood purifying compound. It is the only sarsaparilla honored by a medal at the World's Fair of 1893. Others imitate the remedy; they can't imitate the record:

50 Years of Cures.

OBITUARY.

Mary A. Lunceford (Brandt) was born Dec. 24th, 1810, in Rockingham county, Va. When about three years of age she moved with her parents to Maryland, and from that state to Newark, Ohio, where, Aug. 16, 1835, she was married to John R. Cunningham, to whom were born three children, the last two dying in infancy. Her husband died Nov. 22, 1839. She moved to Rushville, Ohio, where, after eight years' widowhood, she was married to George Brandt, to whom was born two children. Martha and David Brandt. She lived with George Brandt until his death, which occurred Dec. 10, 1887, since which time she lived with her only surviving child, Martha McKay, until, at the advanced age of 86 years, 7 months and 22 days, she departed this life at Lima, Ohio, leaving behind her a record of a long and useful life. Having connected herself in early life with the Presbyterian church, she remained a faithful member of it until her death. Mrs. Brandt was a woman with an admirable character and lived a beautiful life. In a life like hers we can find many things that are worthy of our emulation. Just a few days prior to her death she remarked to one of her neighbors, "I should like to go to sleep and wake up in the arms of Jesus." And so she did. She came to her grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in his season. Mother Brandt was a kind neighbor, a lovable mother and gentle friend to all. She ranked among the highest type of American womanhood.

Mrs. Brandt leaves to mourn her death one daughter, one sister, and two grandchildren, besides many other relatives and friends.

The funeral services were conducted from the Presbyterian church Tuesday, Aug. 17th, at 3:30 p. m. Interment took place in evergreen cemetery, Rev. J. D. Brosy officiating.

Depression of Spirits

so common in summer-time, accompanied by loss of energy, lack of thought-power, means a deficient supply of nourishment. The vital force is lost. It isn't a question of muscle and sinew, but of resistance and endurance. At any age, but especially in youth, it involves the risk of lung disease. Loss of flesh and a cough are threatening signs.

HONEST CONFESSION.

(South Bend Times)

The Indianapolis News supported Harrison in 1892 and McKinley 1896. Yet it admits truths that most Republican papers deny. For instance, it says in a recent issue: "We do not suppose there has been a moment since the election of Mr. Cleveland in 1892 in which Republican leaders have not congratulated themselves on the defeat of their party in that year. If it had won, we should have had our panic just the same, and then it would have been charged to the Republican party and the McKinley law." This is both candor and truth. The greatest of luck the Republican party ever had had was the defeat of Harrison and the election of Cleveland in 1892. It was a genuine godsend to them, and they can rub their hands in joy over their unsought good fortune.

Chinese Waking Up

China has established three new mints. Two of them are used to coin the little brass pieces, which they call "cash," and which till recent date, was the only coin they made, The other mint is used to make five silver pieces, of the exact size and value of the siver pieces of the United states, that is, the 5-cent, 10-cent, 25-cent, 50-cent pieces and the dollar. They are not called called by these names, however, for the inscriptions and designs on both sides are Chinese. Each piece has the same designs and words through all the sizes, the letters and pictures of the Chinese dragon differing only in size. This coining of silver money is considered quite an advance step for that slow nation.

TURN THE TABLES.

The Chicago Chronicle suggests that if this government is to be run by injunction, there would be more justice dispensed by courts turning the tables on the rich and cruel mine owners than by oppressing the poor, dependent and starving coal miners.

The courts should say to insolent and haughty corporations,

Thou shalt pay living wages.

Thou shalt not starve women and children!

Thou shalt not run "pluck-me" stores!

Thou shalt not import foreign labor!

Thou shalt not conspire against the people.

POSTAL CARD PRICES.

The Postoffice Department has just let contracts for making postal cards for the coming four years. It is estimated that in the four years we will need 1,800 millions of the common, single, large-size postal cards; 20 millions of double or reply cards; 250 millions of the small size. All kinds are made of ordinary manilla tag board, which is not expensive material, but they have to be made on low bids. The lowest bid for the common-size cards was less than 24 cents a thousand, or to be exact, 23.95 cents. The double cards were bid in at 40 cents a thousand and the small single cards at 18 cents. Here would have been a chance for the Dispatch to get a good deal of cheap notoriety by making a lower bid.

BIRD CANNIBALISM.

An Odd Little Bird of New Zealand, Which Eats Its Dead.

A curious little bird is the weka, which is found in the Alpine region in the South island of New Zealond. It is described by Mr. Arthur P. Harper, B. A., in an account of his explorations. This weka, as soon as he sees your camp pitched, takes possession of it, says an exchange. He neither respects nor fears man and is an incorrigible thief. He eats anything from a cartridge to a member of his own family—for he is a cannibal. "I remember one instance of this," writes our author, "when our dog unfortunately killed a young bird before we could prevent it, which was too small to eat. The parents made a decent show of grief over their loss and then, being quite sure that the little one was dead, they proceeded to eat its still warm remains." The weka fights all comers for undisturbed possession of the camp he has annexed. His histrionic talent is great and he can sham death to perfection. But for the fact that he is a first-rate scavenger he would, to his human host, be an intolerable nuisance. After some weeks of tenderness and self-sacrifice the weka all at once becomes a brtual husband and father. That is when the youngsters have grown up, and, as he thinks, are able to forage for themselves; still, he is unnecessarily harsh, not to say shamelessly selfish. If his place of sojourn be rich in food, he banishes his wife and children; if it be not, he treks else-whither. The egotistic fit lasts until next he becomes a father, and then altruism is hardly the word for his self-renunciation. Let Mr. Harper describe him and his wife: "The parent birds while rearing their young hardly eat anything themselves and grow as poor as a church mouse; everything they find is carried to the youngsters. When a pair has only one chick it is very ludicrous to see them rushing up to it and jostling one another in their eagerness to give it a piece of bacon or bread, and sometimes asking it to try a piece of a jam tin, or tempting it with a choice copper cartridge-case." The weka would appear to be as good a camp companion as one could wish for, with his tameness, impudence and almost human power of expression. He is a bird with small, unformed wings, unable to fly, and varying in size from a partridge to a pheasant.

APPRECIATED PROTECTION.

Just as the good natured looking young bicyclist in the very neat knickerbocker suit came down the steps of the nine-story red brick building and was preparing to mount the finest wheel in the world, the sandy whiskered man with the Russian leather notebook and pencil stub in his right hand stepped forward.

"Pardon me, sir," he said, "but even in the apparently harmless pleasures of wheeling lurks sudden death or serious injury, and often want and distress."

"Perhaps so," said the bicyclist, cordially, pausing for a moment to examine a pedal.

"Sometimes," said the saidy whiskered man, "a man is cut off in the very prime of life and usefulness and leaves his family unprovided for, when a little thought and foresight would have left them plenty. I consider it almost criminal negligence for a man not to insure his life to protect his loved ones. Perhaps you have children?"

"Three," said the bicyclist, taking hold of the handle-bars.

"Is your life insured?"

"No."

"Do you know that over 30 per cent of fatal accidents last year in this city happened to bicycle riders?"

"Wouldn't be surprised."

"Right now, before it is too late, you'd better let me write you a few thousand. I represent some of the best companies in the world. Just think of the comfort, the security in knowing that poverty will not harm the ones you love if you should be taken away. Think of the immense value of life insurance."

"I do," said the bicyclist. "I realize from the bottom of my heart what you say is true."

"Then let me show you some of my special rates. This non-forfeitable"—

"I don't care to insure."

"But, consider, sir, when yau realize the importance"——

"I realize it all right," said the bicyclist, placing one foot on the step. "I've just been in and collected a check for ten thousand my husband was insured for. He scorched into a dray last March. Good morning."

The sandy whiskered man watched the bicyclist skim down the street, and remarked as he leaned against an awning post and chewed his pencil:

"Darn these bicycle suits, any way!"

The Destruction of Sodom.

An attempt to give a scientific account of the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah has been made by Dr. C. Diener of Vienna. A study of the peculiarities of the Dead Sea basin, and of the site of the overwhelmed "cities of the plain," leads him to conclude that a violent earthquake must at some time have occurred there, which affected the entire basin, and was accompanied by the inundation of the shores. An old volcanic crater on the eastern side of the sea was, he thinks, simultaneously thrown into the eruption through the disturbance produced by the earthquake. These occurrences would supply the principal phenomena mentioned in the Scriptural account.

Just Out of College.

"Yes," said the young man just out of college, "I am willing to do anything to make a living—that is, of course," he added, "in any position that brings in at least $2,500 salary."—Somerville Journal.

Nature's object in most cases seems to be not necessarily wide distribution but the removal of the offspring to a greater or less distance from the parent. It is a mistake to consider downtufted seeds in all cases to be widely borne. Much of the thistle down floating in the summer air will be found to have dropped its burden. A new chance and better conditions is sought for. The struggle of life is rigorous, unending, cruel; but the emigrant has a new opportunity offered him.

MATRIMONIAL ECHOES.

Many City Dailies Contain Reports today of the Reunion.

We went to press with the DAILY yesterday just as the grand march was on, and therefore the report of the nominating committee, was not given. The committee reported through their chairman John Keeran, for president of the association, Rev. W. L. Meese, and secretary John C. Lochner. By a unanimous vote of the members of the association the above officers were elected, and the meeting adjourned to meet one year hence.

We have heard many estimates of the crowd some, as high as 3,500 to 4,000, notwithstanding there was a pic nic in the north part of the county, and the Old Settler's meeting at Angola.

Photographer Hoffman succeeded in getting two very fine pictures. They may be seen by calling at his gallery.

The telegraph offices were busy last night sending specials to the many city dailies. Many of to-day's papers contained the picture of the Rev. W. L. Meese.

There was some disappointment in in speakers. Rev. Pearce was suffering from a severe cold and Rev. Guild was unable to attend the meeting.

About seventy-five couples registered There were many others present who were married by Rev. Meese who did not register.

HE WASN'T COOK.

But He Sold Cook's Timber just the Same, and Got the Money.

Quite a story comes up from Whitley county. S. J. Peabody at Columbia City has a big saw mill and lumber business, and employs a man named Geiger to buy timber for him. A short time ago, two men approached Geiger, and one of them representing himself a farmer named Cook, living near the Allen county line, told Geiger, he had a fine lot of timber for sale, a splendid lot, that he had never offered for sale before. So, they made arrangements and drove out to see about it. Geiger knew Cook owned the land, although he had no acquaintance with the latter. They went through the woods, made a note of the timber for sale, and struck up a bargain. Cook wanted $250 for the lot, but finally they agreed on $200. On the way back to town Geiger, said he would leave a check at the bank, but Cook said, it would be better for him to take the check himself, which was done. Soon after, he came back to Geiger, and asked the latter to come to the bank and identify him. This, Geiger did, and the man got his money and walked away. Then Peabody's men went down to the Cook farm and began cutting the timber. In a short time some neighbors came by, and asked them, when Cook had got back. The men did not know that he had been away, and said so. But the neighbors told them Cook had been off on a two weeks' trip, and had not, as far as they knew, got back yet. At least, no one was at home. The timber men fearing there was something wrong, stopped work and went back to Columbia City, and told their story. Finally it came out that Cook had really not been at home for some two weeks, and it began to be plain, that the two men were swindlers. They were followed, and finally arrested, and are now in jail at Columbia City. Only $55 was recovered.

A True Remedy.

W. M. Repine, editor Tiskilwa, Ill., "Chief," says: "We wont keep house without Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. Experimented with many others, but never got the true remedy until we used Dr. King's New Discovery. No other remedy can take its place in our home, as in it we have a certain and sure cure for Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, etc." It is idle to experiment with other remedies, even if they are urged on you for just as good as Dr. King's new Discovery. THE SEARCH LIGHT.

Auburn can do almost anything if you give her a chance. We do not know of a town in the United States, of ten times the size of ours, that has provided itself a search light. As we said the other day, the majority of the people never saw one. But Auburn boys have made one, and it is a success. The evenings it was tried last week, it was seen by all the surrounding towns, and even as far as Edon, Ohio. Parties all around the country saw the strange light, piercing holes in the night air, and many wondered at it. Last night, it was fixed at the top of the court house dome, and worked beautifully, better than ever before. People at the extreme ends of town, a mile away suddenly found a vivid light blazing in though the windows and lighting up the paper they were reading. It will prove a great attraction each night of the coming carnival, Sept. 22, 23 and 24. This machine was made here, the ingenious workmen being Alt Moody and Charley Hague, and Rus Guilford has been helping some especially in getting it rigged up on the tower. And now, almost any evening, people can look towards Auburn, about 8 to 9 in the evening and see the light flashing. And they can see it all by coming to the Carnival.

THE CARNIVAL.

Two teams went out this afternoon to distribute bills for the Carnival. It is going to be by all odds the most taking and attractive thing ever produced in this part of the state. People who have seen Auburn's Fourth of July parades, know that we always show something fine. This will be about a dozen Fourths thrown into one great show lasting three days and three evenings, and like the "Glorious Fourth," it is all free. Auburn "pays the freight."

Queer Letters.

A late number of the Toledo Bee says:

Queer letters and letter coutaining queer requests often come to the attention of the probate court officials and clerks. Col. Jones, of the marriage license department, received a letter a short time ago from Orlie Dawes, of Saundusky, who has troubles of his own. The letter is as follow:

"Sandusky aug the 7 1897

"Well my Dear Friend who it may be am in a difficulty finding out a few things which is necessary to be knowing.

"my name is Orlie Dawes and I was married July a year ago to a woman who therefor was named Grotude brundoge and I found out sense that she was a woman and married in Toledo and I wish you would look over the record and find out and write and let me know and tell me how moch it will be to get the record here and I will pay you the full remount for male and trouble for I am in the Sandusky Erie County Jail, or I would come and see you.

"the woman was Grotode broundage and the husbad name was william foster, good by from Orlie Dawes.

"here is my address.

"Orlie Dawes, Sandusky, Ohio, Erie Caunty Jail."

The Old Cemetery.

Our people have a not very pleasant remembrance of the old cemetery, that was so long an eyesore to people looking over the neatly kept grounds of beautiful Evergreen cemetery. For though many of Auburn's and DeKalb's pioneers rested there, their descendants were scattered and gone, and the grounds had been allowed to run to weeds, briers and bushes, till the broken and fallen headstones could hardly be seen. It gave unpleasant feelings to push about in the long grass and tangled brush, and read so many names of men and women who had been prominent in pioneer history. The COURIER wrote of this, several times, and so called, the attention of some of ther descendants, to the shameful condition of the graves of their parents or relatives. We think it was some of the Parks family that made the first move, and then money enough was raised to dig up the bushes, cut the briers and cleaned the ground up enough to help it out a good deal. But this year, it began to grow up again, and there will be an effort made to keep it in better shape. Charlie Bartels, has undertaken to slick up the grounds, partly on his responsibility and partly by means of a small subscription donated by liberal and public minded citizens, who have no especial interest there, except for the interests and good name of the town, and a desire that our early citizens may have proper respect and honor. Mr. Bartels has entered on a work of love, rather than profit, and we think it would not be asking too much for every citizen to donate 25 cents to the cause. It is a small sum for each, but it will make a sum that will rescue permanently, this old "city of the dead," from the condition in which it has been left too long.

DOINGS OF THE DAY.

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Eventful Happenings in Every Hemisphere—Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Politics, Religion, and Commerce, Sandwiched with Minor Affairs.

A NEW EXPLOSIVE.

"Mirex" Tested with Satisfactory Results in Chicago.

Chicago special: "Mirex," a new explosive, which its inventors claim will revolutionize modern naval warfare, was tested in Lake Michigan with satisfactory results. A brass cylinder measuring four by one and one-quarter inches and loaded with the new explosive, was thrown into the water. At the depth of five feet it exploded, sending a column of water twenty feet into the air. Another one exploded at a depth of fifteen feet with similar results, the depth at which the explosion would occur being announced in advance by the inventors. The inventors claim that "Mirex" can be thrown by a cannon to any distance and will explode in the water at the depth desired. The ingredients are a secret. John H. Edelman, a wealthy former Philadelphian, is said to be backing the inventors.

Cured by Prayer.

Peru (Ind.) special: A remarkable cure by prayer is reported in the south part of the county. The wife of Rev. Edward Tripper has been dangerously ill for several months, and all hopes of her recovery had been given up, when Rev. Stokes called at her home, and, taking her hand, began to pray. Songs were sung, and in a few minutes Mrs. Tripper began to laugh. She arose from her bed and went to the organ in another room and played, and said she felt much better. She ate some solid food, the first for some time. She is much improved, and will recover. Her recovery is regarded as remarkable by all who know of her case.

Seligman is Very Ill.

David J. Seligman, the banker, is lying seriously ill in the Hollywood Hotel, Long Branch.

Mr. Seligman underwent an operation for appendicitis. This was performed by the family physician, Dr. Robert Abbe, assisted by several others. Although at first everything promised well for Mr. Seligman's recovery, it is now said that the improvement had not been sustained, and that the physicians considered their patient's condition as extremely serious.

Whole Crew Arrested.

Savannah (Ga.) special: United States Attorney Erwin has caused the arrest of Master J. W. Floyd, Chief Engineer Walter E. Masters, and the entire crew of seven men of the tug Dauntless. The case will be investigated later on. The men were arrested on a warrant charging them with being about to engage in military expeditions against the dominion of Cuba, in the domain of the Kingdom of Spain.

A Horrible Death.

Fred Heaver, an old citizen of Sandoval, Ill., met with a fearful death at a coal mine. A new engineer undertook to send Heaver to the bottom of the pit, some 700 feet. In some way Mr. Heaver was drawn to the top of the shaft and thrown out of the cage. He fell to the bottom of the shaft. Heaver had been in the employ of the company for about seventeen years.

Aeronauts Fatally Hurt.

Two aeronauts were fatally hurt at the fair grounds, Toledo, Ohio. Walter Steele of Columbus, had his back broken, and several ribs crushed by a fall, due to the failure of his parachute to work. Leroy Northcott was frightfully burned while inside of the balloon, which took fire while being inflated.

Lightning's Pranks.

During a storm lightning struck the dwelling of James Lightle, near Morgantown, Ohio, burning the pillows from beneath the heads of the sleepers. It is thought that two young men who were in the house will die. Blood continues to flow from the ears and mouth of both since the accident.

Senator Thurston Is Out.

The Nebraska Republican Convention nominated for Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, Judge Post, and two State university regents, Kalay and Dryden. Senator John M. Thurston, in his address to the convention, announced that he would not again be a candidate for the Senate.

Fisherman Found Dead.

Mortimer Wilkenson, an inmate of the County Infirmary at Chillicothe, Ohio, started out on a fishing expedition. His body was found in a pool where the sewer empties. It is presumed he fell into the mud and filth and was smothered.

Robison Park, Fort Wayne.

Labor Day, Sept. 6, will be celebrated at the park in grand style. A balloon ascension is one of the features.

Farmers' reunion Sept. 9.

Good Women Excited for Naught.

Consul General Lee, at Havana, telegraphed the State Department that the case of Evangeline Cisnera has been greatly misrepresented and exaggerated. He added that he could not ascertain that it has been at any time the intention to deport her.

The G. A. R.

The National encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic has selected Cincinnati as the next place of meeting. J. P. Gobin of Lebanon, Pa., was elected Commander-in-chief.

Dragged to Death.

An unmanageable horse ran away, near Bolivar, Ohio, the vehicle containing Mrs. Mary Findlay, her daughter Mabel and sister Evelyn Kroch. The lines became entangled about Mabel Findlay's neck, and she was dragged until dead, the body being reduced to an unrecognizable mass. The other two women were thrown out and became unconscious. Mrs. Findlay's arm was broken.

Spain Seems Willing.

Havana special: A dispatch from Madrid says there is no doubt the Spanish Government will be willing to extend the commercial treaty with the United States.

SHIP FOUNDERED.

The Captain Suicided and Twenty-One Men Drowned.

A dispatch from Shanghai says that the steamer Cheang-Hy-Etonga, Captain Scott, bound from Penang, on Arrea Island, in the Straits of Malacca, off the west coast of the Malay peninsula, for Japan, foundered in a typhoon. Of the thirty-two members of the ship's crew twenty-one were drowned. Captain Scott, as the vessel sank, committed suicide by shooting himself with a revolver. The eleven survivers experienced the most terrible sufferings from exposure in open boats for five days under the intense rays of a tropical sun and with no water.

Revengeful Tramps.

Two tramps attempted to kill Dan Freiburn, a Lake Shore car inspector, in the railroad yards at Butler, Ind. They knocked him down with a rubber hose filled with sand and were on the point of finishing the job when he drew a revolver and commenced shooting at them. Three months ago a gang of tramps assaulted some of the Lake Shore employes at that place and were driven out of town and several of them arrested, and their attempt to kill Mr. Freiburn is the first victim of their threatened revenge to kill all who were the means of defeating their former assault. Mr. Freiburn recognized one of them as a member of the former gang. The men escaped.

Rushing Their Wheat to Market.

Farmers throughout Central and Western Kansas are using every means possible to get their wheat on the market at the present high prices. Teams block the streets of many towns, and mills and elevators are crowded to their utmost capacity. The railroad yards in many of the larger towns are blocked with loaded cars which cannot be moved. The shipments were never before so large. As a result of the boom in wheat several large sales of farm property have been made, and holders have increased values 25 per cent.

Pearl in White River.

White River, about twelve miles from Indianapolis, has produced a pearl of considerable value. The finder was Frank Dalton, an employe of the Indianapolis Tent and Awning Company, which gave a picnic there for its employes. Dalton was offered $2 for it, and sold it. It is oblong in shape, and has a bluish and pink color. A jeweler pronounced it one of the finest pearls he had ever seen.

Fate Pursues a Family.

Philip Thomson, a butcher of Portsmouth, Ohio, was fatally injured in a runaway. One of the horses kicked him in the head, fracturing his skull. Six ribs were broken, as well as his right arm and left leg. Thomson's grandfather was killed in a similar accident, and an uncle, Richard Thomson, is an incurable maniac as the result of injuries received in a runaway.

The Swordfish.

When the barkenstine Catherine Sudden was docked for repairs at San Francisco, it was discovered that some time during her last voyage the vessel had been struck by a swordfish. The sword had passed through four inches of planking and gone five inches farther into a solid timber. The nine-inch section was broken off even with the copper sheeting.

Corpse in a Barrel.

Abingdon (Va.) special: The body of a young girl was discovered in a barrel near the south fork of Holston River. The corpse, which had been cut in three pieces, was covered with sand and dirt, hiding it from view. It was at first thought that the body was that of a daughter of Frank Larimer of Greenwood, but this proved untrue.

Choked to Death.

The body of Aaron C. Conn, the Detroit Board of Trade operator who disappeared last week, was found on Belle Isle recently. Around his neck a handkerchief had been knotted and then twisted with a lead pencil until the victim strangled to death. Conn is said to have lost considerable money in speculation and was partially deranged.

For Blind Readers.

John Russell Young, Librarian of Congress, has decided to set apart a small part of the new Congressional Library for the exclusive use of the blind. It will be supplied with books with raised letters, and practically all literature of this kind will be included in the section of the library set aside for the blind.

Officers Shot by a Mob.

At Keystone, W. Va., Officers Cobbs and Withers, of that place, were shot by an angry mob while trying to make an arrest. Withers was shot three times in the abdomen by Sam Gossep, and will die. Fifteen shots were fired in the melee.

Highwaymen's Bold Work.

Five masked highwaymen held up three buggies and surreys on the National road, within a mile of the city limits of Wheeling W. Va., and robbed G. Mitchell, William Donaldson and John Brill, all prominent citizens, of their watches and cash.

Killed His Son by Mistake.

Richard Bacon, a prominent farmer residing on Todd's road, six miles from Lexington, Ky., mistook his son Willie, aged 16, for a burglar and shot him through the left breast with a 44-caliber pistol, fatally wounding him.

PAGEANT OF PEACE.

FIFTY THOUSAND OLD SOLDIERS PASS IN REVIEW.

President McKinley Leads the Veterans in the Grand Army Parade at Buffalo—Martial Columns Are Cheered by Half a Million.

Touch Elbows Again.

Nearly 50,000 war-worn veterans, with the President of the United States at their head, made the triumphal march of the Grand Army of the Republic in Buffalo Wednesday. For more than six hours the grizzled but undaunted remnants of the armies of the republic poured through the streets in lines of undulating blue, amid the martial crash of bands and the frenzied huzzas of a patriotic populace. Nearly half a million spectators watched the glorious pageant and bombarded the marching legions with the roar of their ceaseless cheering.

For two hours President McKinley stood in the reviewing stand, with Commander-in-Chief Clarkson and Gov. Frank S. Black of New York at his side, and acknowledged the greetings of the battle-scarred hosts passing before him. The President was deluged with cheers and songs, shouts and flowers, and through all the riot of noise and adulation bowed and smiled and moved his comrades to renewed ecstasies of enthusiasm.

Buffalo was in fitting mood and garb for the inspiring spectacle. Its people, reenforced by 200,000 from outside, choked the walks and lawns from the brick walls to the wire stretched along the line of march at the curbstone. They filled 10,000 windows and roofs, packed a score of big stands, took to the trees in flocks and squeezed into every nook that afforded a view of the procession. The martial columns moved for miles between two solid, shouting walls of humanity, such a living mass as had never been seen before in the Empire State outside the metropolis.

The city was swathed in red, white and blue. Public and private buildings were smothered in the Stars and Stripes. The trudging battalions were hemmed in on both sides with fluttering flags, and floating streamers hung from every window and pinnacle. The decorations were on a lavish scale and included many gorgeous designs. Noble arches spanned the streets to typify the triumph of the army in blue.

MAIN STREET ILLUMINATED ARCH.

THOUSANDS OF VETERANS IN LINE.

A living shield of 2,000 children stirred the hearts of the veterans to responsive cheers by singing "Marching Through Georgia," "Rally Round the Flag" and other songs of happy memory. A band of pretty maidens in tri-colored costumes strewed the pathway of the President with flowers and ferns, and were rewarded with his kindliest smiles.

Paeans of Joy at Every Step.

Through such scenes, with the glories of the flag on every hand and paeans of joy at every step, moved this pageant of peace, this relic of war.

The heavens, too, smiled benignantly. The day was perfect. A shower during the night freshened the atmosphere. During the parade the sun shone brilliantly, but there was a pleasant breeze, and the weather was not uncomfortably hot. The myriad of proud banners glinted in old Sol's rays in their brightest luster, and the faded, tattered battle flags, many of them furled to save their wasting remnants, were kissed into new radiance and glory.

The day was ushered in with a sunrise salute of forty-five guns. At 8 o'clock Main street was choked. An hour later drums were beating and a hundred bands were playing, echoing and jarring each other's accents. Mounted officers were dashing hither and thither, giving their sharp orders. Sabers and burnished shields flashed in the sunlight. There was everywhere what seemed to the civilian's eye confusion and consternation, but not so to the sturdy old soldiers in the blue coats. It was all orderly and beautiful to them. They loved it. It was a taste of the old life.

TYPES OF OLD SOLDIERS.

It was shortly after 10 o'clock when a squad of mounted police left the terrace, a square in the business part of the city, and the crowd announced the beginning of the parade with shouts of "Here they come." It was nearly 5 o'clock when the last weary veterans trudged by the reviewing stand, two miles from the terrace. The line of march was up Main street to Chippewa, thence to Delaware avenue, and north on that aristocratic thoroughfare, lined with the homes of the old families of the city. The column turned west in North street, passing beautiful residences of a later generation, and marched through the circle to disband in the parks of the lake shore.

President McKinley rode at the head of the parade as far as the reviewing stand, which was at the end of the two-mile march. Two hundred young women scattered along the route, attired in gowns of red, white and blue, scattered flowers before his carriage. When the President, standing on the reviewing stand, caught sight of the tattered war flags of the armies of Illinois he put down his hat and clapped his hands, exploding a demonstration which rolled down the line like the booming of cannon.

The whole route was over smooth asphalt pavements, the first march of the kind, Gen. Alger said, he had ever beheld. The President's reviewing stand was at the intersection of North street and Richmond avenue. Approaching the stand the army moved west in North street. Double rows of trees, whose branches met overhead, made a green canopy above the last half-mile of the march. It looked as if the army was coming out of a fairy-book forest. To the west, the situation was the same. The foliage heightened the colors of the fluttering flags as the army wound past the stand.

Railroad officials say that 300,000 is a low estimate of the number of visitors in Buffalo. The police arrangements were admirable. Persons having grand stand tickets found their seats readily, and the 500,000 persons who wanted to see the parade were kept well in hand.

Receptions of the Evening.

Despite the fact that President McKinley was exceedingly weary, he met the local committee at night just after dinner, and accompanied by Gov. Black, went to Music Hall to meet the general public. The strain of the day was, however, too much for flesh and blood, and after he had greeted about 3,000 persons individually he was compelled to leave the hall. Fully 20,000 persons blocked the streets in the vicinity of the hall and expressed their disappointment at not being permitted to shake the President's hand. Leaving Music Hall, the President was driven to the Buffalo Club, where he received the Loyal Legion. At 10:45 he went to the Niagara Hotel for the night.

DOLAN ARRESTED.

Miners' Leader Is Charged with Violating Anti-Marching Injunction.

Patrick Dolan, district president of the United Mine Workers of America, was arrested in Washington County, Pa., while leading a body of marchers on a public highway past the Allison mine of Cook & Sons, near McGovern station.

Ever since the strike started the miners have been making daily marches from their camp to the mine. From the mine to the railroad there is a tramway, under which runs the public road known as the Washington pike. Wednesday morning, with a band at their head, about 400 marchers tramped along the pike and passed under the tramway. On their return they were stopped by deputy sheriffs and told they could not pass under the tramway, but must return to their camp by crossing a field and coming down the railroad.

The marchers decided to remain where they were and communicated with President Dolan by telegraph. He arrived shortly after 4 o'clock and made a speech to the strikers. He said the deputy sheriffs had no right to stop them from marching on the public thoroughfare as long as their mission was a peaceful one, and told them he would lead the procession.

The band, with Dolan at its head, and the marchers following, then started down the road to go under the tramway and on to the camp. When Dolan reached the tramway he was told by the deputy sheriffs that he could go no farther. When he wanted to know the reason why he was told that such a move was a violation of the law and the injunction. This Dolan denied and the arrest followed. He was taken to Washington on the first train, while the marchers returned to their camp.

SHORTAGE IN EUROPE.

Cereal and Potato Crops Are Small and the Situation Is Grave.

An extensive inquiry into European crop conditions conducted by the Orange Judd syndicate of agricultural papers indicates that the food crop situation abroad is very grave. Estimates of the needs of wheat imports for Europe, including England, range all the way from 300,000,000 to 400,000,000 bushels. Europe's wheat crops for 1895, 1894 and 1893 averaged about 1,500,000,000 bushels. In the famine year of 1891 it was only 1,200,000,000. The impression is gaining ground that Europe's wheat crop this year is even less than in 1891. But this is not the worst of it. Europe usually produces as much rye as she does wheat. It is the bread grain of the masses. The rye crop of the principal European countries (Russia, Germany, France, Austria, Bulgaria, Roumania and Italy and the low countries and Sweden) has averaged about 1,300,000,000 bushels annually for 1896, 1895, 1894 and 1893. This season the rye crop of these countries cannot much exceed 875,000,000 bushels. Quite as bad is the potato prospect. Only about 1,850,000,000 bushels of potatoes will be harvested in these countries this year. Without regard to the United Kingdom or other European countries, there is a shortage of some 1,000,000,000 bushels of potatoes. European shortage in bushels compared with the average follows:

Wheat	300,000,000
Rye	325,000,000
Potatoes	1,000,000,000
Total	1,625,000,000

MINE OWNERS AT SEA.

Combine of the Big Coal Operators Is Badly Shattered.

At Pittsburg Wednesday, the coal operators practically split and went home. They held a session in the forenoon and gave out a statement that they would "continue the struggle along the lines that may appear to be the most productive of the results desired in the interests of miner and operator alike." None of them could explain what this meant.

In the afternoon, after a conference of some of the leading shippers to the lakes, another statement was given out by Operator J. C. Dysart. It contained the information that another committee had been appointed to continue the work of getting the mines in operation, which had been started last week in Cleveland. As the statement issued in the forenoon said that all committees had been discharged, the conflict of statements caused some inquiry as to what the operators really meant. Inquiry failed to bring any result except the impression that they are trying to find "where they are at."

At the forenoon meeting some of the anti-lake shippers proposed that the operators pay the 69-cent rate pending arbitration. This was opposed by the representatives of the big companies, who have been running the meetings. The meeting adjourned without either side coming to any conclusion.

BORDA IS ASSASSINATED.

President of Uruguay Is Shot Down at Montevideo.

During a national fete which was held in Montevideo President J. Idiarte Borda of Uruguay was shot and killed by an assassin. The weapon used was a revolver. The assassin was arrested. Senor J. Idiarte Borda was elected president of Uruguay for the term extending from March, 1894, to 1898. The fete at which he was assassinated was being held in celebration of the independence of Uruguay, which was achieved on Aug. 25, 1825.

The assassination of President Idiarte Borda of Uruguay was not altogether a surprise to officials in Washington who have watched the recent outbreaks in Uruguay. This was the second attempt on the president's life, the former being made April 21 last by a crazy student named Revecca.

PRESIDENT JUAN IDIARTE BORDA.

The last issue of the Montevideo Times, received in Washington, states that the president remained away from the state house in evident fear of his life. At the time a junta of those seeking to overthrow the government had established active operations at the capitol. The assassination of the president doubtless will bring the country to a revolutionary crisis, which has been long impending. The revolution thus far had been confined to the country districts, where several extensive engagements had been fought, the Government forces securing the advantage. There is no Uruguayan representative in Washington.

At the time of Senor Borda's election he belonged to the official party, and was elected by a narrow majority. The people, it was said, were sadly disappointed at the result, but order and quiet was maintained. The leading papers of Uruguay deplored the election of Senor Borda and declared that it marked a reaction in the country's progress.

TALKS TO VETERANS.

M'KINLEY RESPONDS TO A TOAST AT BUFFALO.

Old Soldiers Give a Banquet in His Honor—Three Hundred and Fifty Thousand People in Attendance—31st Annual Encampment.

"Put 'Em Off at Buffalo."

The incoming rush of Grand Army veterans and their womenfolk to attend the national encampment at Buffalo was at its height Tuesday. The different railroads centering there gave estimates of the number of passengers landed in Buffalo during the twenty-four hours ended at midnight. The total footed up 145,000. As all the railroads expected arrivals for Wednesday at least equaling those of the previous day, it was estimated that there would be at least 150,000 more arrivals before the big parade, which would bring the grand total of encampment visitors up to 350,000.

President McKinley was the lion of the hour, it being the first time in the history of the organization that a President of the United States put in an appearance at the national encampment. The banquet which was tendered Tuesday night to the President and other distinguished guests was a notable affair. Covers were laid for 500 guests at the Ellicott Club. The hosts were representatives of every department in the organization and subscribed liberally toward the function.

The President was escorted from the Niagara Hotel to the club by a Chicago post and an impromptu reception preceded the banquet. Speechmaking was in order at 6 o'clock, as the President desired to leave early to attend some camp meetings. Col. James A. Sexton of Illinois was the toastmaster. President McKinley responded to his toast as follows:

I wish I might frame fitting words to make suitable response to the more than gracious welcome which you have accorded me here to-night. I come with no set form of speech; I come with no studied phrases to present to you; but come in the spirit of companionship to talk with you as we have so often talked in the past around the campfires in war, as well as the camp-fires in peace. To me, I see by the program, has been assigned the toast, "The Country and Its Defenders." My fellow-citizens, blessed is that country whose defenders are patriots; blessed is that country whose soldiers fight for it and are willing to give the best they have—the best that any man has—their own lives, to preserve it because they love it.

Such an army the United States has always commanded in every crisis of her history. From the war of the Revolution to the late civil war the men followed that flag in battle, because they loved that flag and believed in what it represented. That was the stuff of which the volunteeer army of '61 was made. Every one of them not only fought, but they thought; and many of them did their own thinking, and did not always agree with their commanders. Note that young soldier, who in the late war, upon the battle line, ahead with the color guard bearing the stars and stripes away in front of the line, but the enemy still in front of him. The general called out to the color-bearer, "Bring these colors back to the line," and quicker than any bullet that young soldier answered back, "Bring the line up to the colors." It was the voice of command; there was a man behind it, and there was patriotism in his heart.

"So near to grandeur is our dust,
So near to God is man,
When duty whispers, 'Lo, thou must,'
The youth replied, 'I can.'"

And so more than 2,000,000 brave men thus responded and made up an army grander than any army that ever shook the earth with its tread and engaged in a holier cause than ever engaged soldiers before. What defenders, my countrymen, have we now? We have the remnant of this old, magnificent, matchless army of which I have been speaking, and then as allies in any future war we have the brave men who fought against us on Southern battlefields. The army of Grant and the army of Lee are together. They are one now in faith, in hope, in fraternity, in purpose and in invincible patriotism. And therefore the country is in no danger. In justice strong, in peace secure, and in devotion to the flag, all one.

Secretary of War Alger, speaking to the toast, "The Army of the United States," said in part:

"It is hard for me to speak about the army with the President present. The army of the United States, as far as it went, was the best on God's footstool. He had been in London, and had been asked what if the United States was attacked by the great military nations. I answered that in thirty days we could put millions of fighting men in the field and back them up with a wall of fire in the persons of the veterans. At the same time he thought that the army should be strengthened somewhat. He complimented the national guard and said that it would prove a great bulwark of the nation in time of need.

C. Porter Johnson of Chicago, responded to the toast, "The Volunteer." Henry Estabrook spoke to the toast, "The General." Charles W. Anderson, a colored orator, spoke of the colored troops, and John S. Wise spoke upon "Under One Flag." Mr. Wise, who was a Confederate officer, was received with much enthusiasm. Archbishop Ireland was the last general toast orator, and was received with vociferous applause.

The feature of the morning was the second parade of the celebration and the first in which G. A. R. men took part. The Naval Veterans' Association and the ex-Prisoners of War Association, together with the survivors of Erie County regiments and other organizations composed the Grand Army contingent of the parade. The naval veterans wore the uniform of the United States naval service and made a splendid appearance. As they passed through the streets in the rolling gait of men-of-warsmen the crowds cheered them to the echoes.

A LOVE SONG.

Far away in a sunset town,
Are the flowers blooming fair;
And the world looks up and the sky bends down;
But the fairest rose in that sunset town
Is a girl with golden hair.

O rosebud sweet!
O flower fair!
O blue-eyed maid
With golden hair,
There's one to think of thee!

Far away in the crimson west,
Do the song-birds' voices rise;
And the world is glad and the people blest,
But the sweetest bird in that dream-land west,
Is a girl with deep-blue eyes.

O song-bird sweet!
O flower fair!
O blue-eyed maid
With golden hair,
The world shall sing of thee!

THE OLD UNIFORM.

BY FRANCOIS COPPEE.

When I was a clerk in the War Department I had for an associate a man named Jean Vidal, a former non-commissioned officer. He had lost his left arm in the Italian campaign, but his right arm remained, and with it he could execute prodigious feats of penmanship, making a little bird in the flourish of his signature with a single stroke of his pen.

This Vidal was an excellent fellow; a soldier of the old type, upright and pure. Though he was only forty years old and had but few grey hairs in his light beard, cut after the old Zouave fashion, everyone called him "Father Vidal," more from respect than from familiarity, for we all knew what an honorable and self-sacrificing life he led in his little home on Grenelle street, where he supported a widowed sister, with several children. They all managed to live comfortably on his little pension and earnings from his writing. Three thousand francs for five persons.

For all that, Vidal's overcoats—those coats whose left sleeve was fastened to the third button—were as carefully brushed as if he were to be present at a review by the Inspector-General, and the worthy man attached so much importance to his red ribbon, always new, that he removed it from his button-hole when he carried a package in the streets.

As I, too, at that time, lived in the modest suburbs south of Paris, I often walked home with "Father Vidal," listening with pleasure to his war-stories, while we strolled along near the Military School, where we met at almost every step—it was in the last days of the Empire—the beautiful uniform of the Imperial Guard, White Lancers, and the magnificent somber coats of the officers of the artillery, all black and gold—uniforms within which it was worth while to be shot.

Sometimes, on warm summer evenings, I treated my companion to absinthe, a luxury which poor Vidal denied himself through economy, and on these occasions we sat for half an hour or so before the officers' cafe on the Avenue de la Mothe-Piquet. The old officer, who had forsaken all his convivial habits since he had become a family man, would rise from the table with his heroic memories all alive under the influence of the mild stimulant, and I was sure to hear some fine martial reminiscence.

One evening—I believe, God forgive me, I had given two glasses of absinthe to Vidal—as we were walking along the wretched street on which he lived he stopped abruptly before a shop where second-hand military clothing was hung out for sale, one of many such in this locality.

It was a dirty, uninviting place, having a window display of rusty pistols, bowls full of buttons, tarnished epaulettes, and, in front, among some filthy rags, were hung some old officers' uniforms, rotted and faded by the rain and sun. They still retained the shape of their wearers, and looked almost like suspended human figures.

Suddenly grasping my arm with his only hand, Vidal turned his half-dazed eyes toward me, and, with his stump, pointed to an old coat, an African officer's, with a full skirt and three rows of gold lace trimming the sleeves in the shape of a "8," Hussar-fashion.

"Look!" said he, "there is part of the uniform of my old regiment. A captain's coat!" Approaching to examine it more carefully he read the number engraved on the buttons, then said, excitedly:

"It is from my regiment! The First Zouaves!"

All at once Vidal's hand, which grasped the skirt of the coat, remained motionless, his face darkened, his lips trembled, and, lowering his eyes, he murmured in a frightened tone:

"My God! What if it were his!"

Then, with a quick movement, he whirled the coat around, and I saw in the middle of the back a little round hole in the cloth, encircled by a black ring—old blood doubtless— and I felt as if I were looking at a real wound.

"That was an ugly hole!" I said to Father Vidal who had dropped the coat, and briskly resumed his walk with down-cast head. Foreseeing a story, I added, by way of inciting him to relate it:

"Usually commanders of Zouaves do not get shot in the back."

He seemed not to hear me, but muttered to himself, biting his mustache.

"How could it have got here? It is a long distance from the battle-field of Melegnano to Grenelle Street Yes, I know thieves follow the army and rob the dead. But why should there be only a few steps between a Military School where his regiment is quartered and the other? And he must have passed by here and must have recognized it. Oh! it is like seeing a ghost!"

"See here Father Vidal," said I, really interested by this time, "you are not going to go on in this way, talking in riddles; you must tell me why the sight of that riddled coat affects you so."

I really believe that without the two drinks I should have learned nothing, after all, for Vidal looked at me suspiciously almost, then, regaining courage, he said, in a firm voice:

Well, yes. I will tell you. You are an honest, well-educated young man. I have confidence in you, and when I am through I want you to tell me with your hand upon your heart whether I did right in acting as I did. Let me think where to commence.

I can not tell you his name, for he is still living, but I will call him by the nickname we gave him in the regiment —La Soif (thirst). Yes, we called him La Soif, and he did not steal the name; it belonged to him, for he was not one of those to run away from the canteen, and he could drink twelve little glasses for the twelve strokes of noon. He was a sergeant in the second regiment, and he marched beside me. A good soldier, too; a very good soldier, and a drunkard, loving fights and all the bad practices of the soldier in Africa. He was as brave as a lion. His eyes were as blue and as cold as steel in his bronzed, red-bearded face, and looking into them one could see that he was hard to manage.

When I joined the battalion La Soif's time had just expired, he re-enlisted, took his bounty money, and went on a three days' debauch. With four or five boon companions in a carriage with him he rode about the lowest quarters of Algiers, carrying a tri-colored flag bearing the inscription, "Enjoy yourself while you may." He was brought back to the barracks with his head cut open by a sabre stroke. He had been in a drunken row, where one of the party had been killed.

He recovered, was put in the guard house for fifteen days, and lost his sergeant's stripes. It was the second time they had been taken away from him. If he had behaved himself he would have been an officer long before, for he came of a good family and was well educated. After this affair however, he lost his decorations, and did not get them back until eighteen months later, through the indulgence of our Captain, who was old in the African service, and had been an eye-witness of La Soif's bravery.

After a time our Captain was promoted to chief of battalion, and a new one was put over us, a Corsican, named Gentile. He was only twenty-eight years old, fresh from school, cold and ambitious, full of merit, it was said, but very exacting in matter of discipline, giving a man severe punishment for a rusty spot on his gun, or a missing button on his uniform. He knew nothing of service in Algiers, and he would not tolerate a particle of irregularity or lax discipline. At the very first, Captain Gentile and La Soif came into conflict. It could not be otherwise. The first time the sergeant failed to respond to evening roll-call, eight days in the guard-house; the first time he was tipsy, fifteen days. When the Captain, a swarthy fellow, with a mustache like an angry cat's, gave the sentence, adding, in a stern voice, "I know you, sir, and I will conquer you," La Soif said nothing, but walked quietly off beside the guard; but the captain would not have felt very comfortable, just the same, if he had seen the blood surge into the sergeant's face, as soon as his head was turned, and the lightning flash of his steely blue eyes.

About this time the Emperor declared war with Austria, and we embarked for Italy. It is not necessary to speak of the campaign, so I will keep to my story. The night before the battle of Melegnano, where I lost my arm, you know, our battalion encamped in the heart of a little village, and, before breaking ranks, our captain gave us a little talk—and he was right—to remind us that we were in a friendly community, that it was our honorable duty to conduct ourselves well, and that if any soldier should in any way disturb the peaceful inhabitants around us he would be punished as an example. While he was talking La Soif, who could not stand straight without the aid of his gun, shrugged his shoulders; fortunately the captain did not see the gesture.

In the middle of the night I was awakened by a tumult. I sprang from the bundle of straw on which I was sleeping in a farm-yard, and saw in the moonlight a crowd of soldiers and peasants rescuing a young girl from the grasp of La Soif, who fought like an enraged lion. I ran out to lend my aid, but Captain Gentile was there before me. With one look he subdued the sergeant, then, reassuring the girl by some words spoken in Italian, he came and stood in front of the offender, pulled up his chin with fingers that trembled and said;

"Such a scoundrel as you ought to have his brains blown out! As soon as I see the colonel you will lose your straps and for good this time. There will be a battle to-morrow. Try to get killed!"

We lay down to rest again, but the captain had told the truth, and at daybreak we were awakened by the cannonade. We rushed to arms, formed into line, and La Soif, whose cursed blue eyes had never looked so wicked, took his place beside me. The battalion moved to the attack. It was necessary to dislodge the white-coats, who were fortified with cannon in the village of Melegnano.

Forward, March! We had gone but a few paces when a volley of grape struck us on the flank, and cut down about fifteen men in our company. Then our officers, who were awaiting the command to charge, ordered us to crouch down in the cover, like sharpshooters, while they remained standing, and I assure you that our captain was not the least erect. We kept up a fire on the fort that we were to carry. Suddenly I felt a hand on my shoulder, and turning I saw La Soif, who was looking at me with one corner of his mouth drawn up in a peculiar manner, as he loaded his gun.

"Do you see the captain!" said he, nodding his head in his direction.

"Yes; what of it?" I answered, glancing at the officer, who was standing not twenty steps from us.

"Well, he made a mistake talking to me as he did last night."

Then, with a rapid movement, he put his gun to his shoulder, fired, and I saw the captain bend backward, beat the air with his hands, drop his sword, and fall heavily to the ground.

"Assassin!" I cried, seizing the sergeant's arm.

Striking me a violent blow on the chest, he knocked me several feet from him.

"Fool! Prove that it was I that shot him."

I rose, furious; but all the sharpshooters rose at the same time. Our colonel, bareheaded, on his steaming horse was there, pointing with his saber to the Austrian fort, and shouting at the top of his voice:

"Forward, Zouaves! Charge with the bayonet."

That was all I could do, wasn't it? Charge with the others! Ah, that charge has passed into history, that charge of the Zouaves at Melegnano! Have you ever seen the full sea beat against a rocky wall? Well, this was just the same. Each company beat up against the fort like the sea against the rock. Three times the battery was covered with blue jackets and white trousers, and three times we saw it reappear with its formidable embrasures, unshaken as the rock after the beating of the waves.

The fourth company, ours, must surely take the fort. In twenty bounds I reached the redoubt; helping myself with the barrel of my gun, I clambered up the steep side; but I had just time to see a yellow mustache, a blue cap, and the muzzle of a carbine, which almost touched me. Then I felt such a blow in my left shoulder that I thought my arm was torn out. I dropped my gun; everything swam before my eyes; I fell on my side near a caisson-wheel and fainted away.

When I came to my senses only a distant sound of musketry was to be heard. The Zouaves were standing around in a semi-circle, brandishing their guns, and shouting: "Long live the Emperor!"

An old general, followed by his staff, came up at a gallop. He checked his horse, took off his helmet, waved it joyously, and cried: "Bravo! Zouaves! You are the bravest of the brave!"

I was sitting on the ground, near the caisson-wheel, supporting my broken arm with my right hand, thinking of La Soif's frightful crime. All at once I saw him leave the ranks and approach the general. Yes, it was La Soif, the captain's murderer. In the engagement he had lost his fez, and his head was exposed, showing the track made by a bullet which had just grazed his skull, and the blood was running down over his forehead and cheek. In one hand he carried his gun; with the other he presented an Austrian flag, riddled with shot and stained with blood, a flag which he had captured. The general looked at him with admiration.

"Look there, Bricourt," said he to his orderly, "what men!"

Then La Soif said:

"You are right, general. These are the First Zouaves. There are enough left to fight once more."

"I am glad of that," replied the general, "and you shall be decorated for your bravery." Still repeating, "what men! what men!" he addressed a remark to his aide which I did not understand—you know I am not learned—but which I remember.

"Heroes for Plutarch, hey, Bricourt?"

At this moment the pain from my wound overcame me; I fainted, and saw and heard nothing more.

You know the rest. I have often told you how they cut off my arm, and how I passed two months in the hospital, delirious with fever most of the time. In my rational hours I asked myself what I ought to do about La Soif. Expose him? That was clearly my duty, but how could I prove his crime? Then I said to myself: "He is a villain, but he is brave; he killed Captain Gentile, but he took a flag from the enemy." I did not know what to do.

Finally, when I was convalescent, I heard that in recompense for his brave deed he had been promoted to the ranks of the Guards, and had been decorated. Ah, that news made me disgusted with the cross which our colonel had fastened on my hospital coat. Still, La Soif deserved his, too, but his Legion of Honor should have served as a target for the platoon ordered to shoot him.

It is all past and gone now. I have never seen the sergeant since my return to civil life. But at sight of that coat a moment ago—God knows how it came there—huna out only a few rods from the garrison where the assassin is quartered. I thought of the unpunished crime, and it seemed as if the captain's blood was crying out for justice.

I quieted Father Vidal as well as I could, for the recital of his story had greatly excited him. I assured him that he had acted for the best, and that the sergeant's heroism offset his crime.

A few days afterward, on arriving at my office, I found Vidal there, and he handed me a paper so folded that one item only was visible, murmuring gravely: "What did I tell you?" I took the paper and read the following:

ANOTHER VICTIM OF INTEMPERANCE.

Yesterday afternoon a man named Mallet, called La Soif, a sergeant of the Imperial Guards, after having drank freely at a wine shop on Grenelle street, was suddenly attacked with a fit of delirium while looking at some old uniforms exposed for sale at a second-hand store.

Becoming frantic, he flourished his saber, and rushed about causing a panic. His two comrades with great difficulty succeeded in overpowering him, but he kept on shrieking: "I am not a murderer, I tell you! I captured an Austrian flag at Melegnano!" We learn that Mallet had been decorated for his brave deed, and that his intemperance alone prevented him from becoming an officer

Mallet was taken to the military hospital at Gros-Caillou, from which he will be transported to the lunatic asylum at Charenton, in Corsica, as he will probably never regain his reason.

As I returned the paper to Vidal he gave me a knowing look and said:

"Captain Gentile was a Corsican, He is avenged."—From the French, in Short Stories.

A Novel Elevator.

A new method of locomotion is in use in Paris, where a carpet revolving over rollers in a gently inclined plane serves instead of a lift. You step on the carpet, and, without stirring a foot, are transported to the first floor of the building. The movement is gentle and regular; those who place a hand on the banister for support find the velvet cushion thereon revolving at the same speed as the carpet beneath their feet. As may be supposed, it is an endless source of amusement to the many who visit the shop at this season, either to make the journey itself or to watch others making it, sliding one after another like so many lay figures.

POSTMASTER GENERAL GARY FAVORS POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

Postmaster General Gary is in favor of postal savings banks and proposes to recommend to Congress at the next session the establishment of such banks in this country. "It is very likely," he said in discussing the subject a few days ago, "that some sort of legislation will be enacted at the approaching session, and that we will make a practical test of postal savings banks within a year. At this time I have no definite plans in view, but propose to thoroughly investigate the subject, so that I will be prepared to make an intelligent recommendation to Congress. I have sent for the blank forms and other matters used in this service in Canada and other countries, and am collecting all the information it is possible to find. As a general proposition," Gen.

Gary continued, "I am very much in favor of postal savings banks, but as to how they should be managed, what rate of interest the Government should pay on deposits and other important details I am not ready to speak. I believe postal savings banks would encourage thrift among our people and promote patriotism. If a man has his money in the Government's keeping he is naturally going to do all that he can to protect the Government. Ten years ago the Government might have had some opposition from the savings banks had it proposed to keep the savings of the people itself, but to-day I believe the banks would be glad to see it take the money. I myself have been for more than twenty years a director in one of the largest savings banks in Baltimore, and

SAVINGS BANK OF THE FUTURE.

I feel sure that every man financially interested in that institution would be glad to see the Government establish postal savings banks.

"The value of Government banks for the small savings of the people can scarcely be realized. It can well be illustrated by the building and loan associations. These, I believe, originated in Philadelphia, and there are more of them in Pennsylvania and Maryland than any other States. In my own city, Baltimore, they are very numerous and have been for years extremely popular with the small wage-earners. The result is that the working people of Baltimore are probably more thrifty and industrious than those of any other city in this part of the country. Nearly every man in Baltimore owns his home, and it has been possible for him to do that by the encouragement to save his little earnings that has been offered by the building and loan associations. When every man owns his home he is interested in its preservation, and he is going to think twice before he commits an act that may injure his property. Years ago Baltimore used to be called "the city of riots," but in recent times riots have been almost unknown. A Baltimore man thinks of his home and family before he joins a mob.

"I say this to illustrate one of the advantages of postal savings banks. If 3,000,000, or 5,000,000, or 10,000,000 of the people of these United States give their savings to the Government for safe keeping, those people are going to do all they can to preserve the Government. They are not going to join mobs to burn and destroy property. They are not going to turn socialists and attack the institutions of the Government; they will not attempt to injure the Government's credit and financial standing; they will all be interested in preserving and upbuilding the Government. The habit of saving would be encouraged by postal savings banks, and you would find in a few years boys and girls growing up to manhood and womanhood with little savings that might be the foundation of a fortune."

BACK FROM THE KLONDYKE.

Four Fortunate Bonanza Kings Come Back Laden with Gold.

Four of the most fortunate bonanza kings from the Klondyke spent a week in celebrating their return to civilization at San Francisco recently. The picture printed herewith gives a correct idea of how they looked at the conclusion of forty-eight hours busily spent in putting Bonanza Creek gold in circulation. The picture is a copy of a photograph now in the possession of A. D. Gray of Grand Rapids, Wis., the youngest man of the quartet. The hats worn by the men are not as old as they look, having been purchased but a few hours before their owners faced the camera.

1. H. C. Anderson. 2. A. D. Gray. 3. "Jake" Halterman. 4. William Hawley.

The four men were "dead broke" a year ago, and now they are reputed to be worth at least $1,000,000. Mr. Gray says he brought with him from Alaska only $10,000, which he figured would last him until spring, when he intends to return to Dawson City for another year. He has spent more than $5,000 in thirty days, and his companions are not less free with their nuggets.

Heat in the Body.

An important source of heat in the body is due to the friction of the blood as it circulates in its vessels. All of this resistance, which is overcome by the heart, is transformed directly into heat. We may calculate the amount approximately. If we suppose that 180 ccs. of blood are expelled from the left ventricle at each stroke, under a pressure of one third of an atmosphere, this would correspond to .6192 kilogrammemetres at each stroke, and at 72 strokes a minute, this would give 44.3124 kilogrammemetres per minute. If we suppose that the right heart does one-quarter the work of the left, or about 10 kilogramme-metres per minute, we have for the total work per minute 54.312 kilogramme-metres, which corresponds to 128 calories per minute.

This is perhaps a rather high estimate for ordinary conditions, but where the heart is forced to pump a much larger quantity of blood in order to maintain the normal temperature, this estimate is probably much exceeded at times. Since this friction takes place largely in the most constricted portions of the circulation, it would be natural to expect that the blood which had been driven through the capillary system of a gland would issue much warmer than it entered, and such we find to be the case. Thus the blood of the hepatic vein has been observed to be 40.73, while that in the right heart was 37.7. In the muscles no contraction can take place without an increased flow of blood through them with a simultaneous constriction of the capillaries, which would naturally give rise to a considerable production of heat—a fact constantly observed.—Sanitarian.

LOVE OF ADVENTURE, NOT GOLD

Wealthy Young Chicago Widow Has Gone to Alaska Gold Fields.

It is not a love of gold, but a love of adventure, which impelled young Mrs. A. W. Little, of Chicago, to start for Alaska. She was born and reared in the cradle of luxury. Her slightest wants have all been gratified since she was a child. In society she was a favorite. Her friends include some of the richest and most influential persons in Chicago, Boston and elsewhere. She is now endowed with money and position. But sweetness has palled on her taste. She is determined to leave luxury behind, and brave the hardships of frontier life—merely for a change, for the benefit of her health, and to occupy her mind. For, although still young, Mrs. Little has for a year been a widow, and the ordinary life of civilization seems empty to her.

"I am going up there," she said before starting, "just to see the country and watch frontier life while a gold excitement is at its height. I feel it is the experience of a lifetime, and in spite of the hardships I am anticipating it with eagerness. I do not intend to stake out a claim or anything of that sort, although I may get the fever after I reach there. I am making plans to enjoy myself. I have bought a kodak and ordered my dogs and sledges to be ready when I get there. I shall stay just as long as I feel like it."

Chinese Playing Cards.

A pack of Chinese playing cards is a genuine curiosity. They are generally printed in black on thin cardboard, the average width being about that of the finger of the human being. In some cases they are only a half inch broad and about three and a half inches in length. The length, whatever the size, is always at least six times that of the width.

Some of the packs have queer representations of our "kings" and "queens" and "knaves" stamped upon them in black; others are decorated with the figures of animals, birds and fishes. Those used by mandarins and high officials bear only figures of mythological creatures.

FOUND A BRIDE IN GREECE.

Soldier of Fortune Met His Fate in the Athens Hospital.

A pretty Greek maiden, who served as a nurse in the hospitals during the recent war between Greece and Turkey, has just arrived in this country in company with the husband she recently won, Captain George Nelken. She appears happy and is proud of her husband, who has had a remarkable career as a soldier. He was born in

CAPTAIN NELKEN AND HIS BRIDE.

Argentina, but was exiled in 1892 for too active participation in a revolt of the radicals. He speaks eight languages. In 1891 he fought under Admiral Montt in Chili; in 1892 he took part in the Brazilian revolution, serving under Admiral De Mello, and later engaged in an uprising in Argentina under Dr. Alene. Since then he has traveled in many lands, and, becoming interested in Red Cross work in Spain, was sent from that country as a delegate to the international congress of the order.

At the time of the breaking out of the Graeco-Turkish war Nelken was in this city. The Greek cause appealed to him, and he started for the front, with a shipload of patriots who were going to fight for their fatherland. As soon as lines were cast off Nelken donned his Argentina uniform, pinned his Red Cross badge to his breast and was elected captain by the votes of admiring Greeks. On the trip across he drilled the Greeks in the manual of arms. Before starting for the front he was inspecting the hospitals, and there met the Princess Marie. Through her he was accorded a special audience with King George. Nelken says he told the king he had traveled from America to aid the Greek, and was assigned by the king to Prince Constantine's staff, with headquarters at Imerbeg.

At Athens Captain Nelken was married to Marianthy Mourabas, a young Greek maiden, who was in the city as a nurse. He met her on the steamer Crete. Her father, her brothers and her cousins were all in the army, and the girl, who is only 17 years old, had volunteered as a nurse in the army hospitals at Athens. His Red Cross badge admitted him to the hospital at any time, and he saw the young woman frequently. When armistice had been declared and seeing no chance of annihilating the Turk, he laid siege to the Greek maiden's heart and came off victorious. Mrs. Nelken is petite and pretty. She speaks only half a dozen words of English, but talks French fluently, and says she likes America.

INDIANA INCIDENTS.

RECORD OF EVENTS OF THE PAST WEEK.

Terrific Explosion at Petersburg—Dunkard Colonists Who Went from This State Have Been Duped—Farmer Makes a Fortune in Wheat.

Electric Plant Demolished.

At 2:30 o'clock Wednesday morning the town of Petersburg was shaken by a terrible explosion. The Petersburg Electric Light Company was blown to atoms, causing a loss of $10,000. Superintendent Horace Thomas and his fireman had gone home a little past 12 o'clock, and no one was injured. The only part of the building left standing is a section of the eastern wall of the electrical part of the plant. The generators, wires and everything belonging to the electrical apparatus were broken and left utterly useless. The plant was worth at the lowest estimate $10,000, with an insurance of $5,000.

Dunkard Colonists Duped.

Dunkards who went from eastern Indiana to Dakota last year and this spring for the purpose of assisting in a national colonization scheme are beginning to find their way back to Indiana. They say they have been made dupes by land companies. Many have lost everything they had and can do nothing more than to hold on to the undesirable homes they have acquired. It is estimated that about 8,000 went to Dakota last year and 5,000 more this spring.

Killed by a Trolley Car.

An Indianapolis trolley car struck a carriage on Massachusetts avenue, containing Mrs. William G. Scarlett, Mrs. Josephine Kebler and a little girl late Saturday evening. The women were driving across the track and their surrey was caught by a trolley pole. The carriage was demolished and Mrs. Scarlett was instantly killed. Mrs. Kebler was painfully injured, but the child was unhurt.

Will Build Airships.

Dr. James Charles, the airship inventor of Richmond, has made public the details of his plan, which he has had protected. His machine is designed to duplicate exactly the motions of a bird, and expert mechanics have assured the inventor that he has the best thing yet designed. A stock company with a capital of $200,000 will be formed to build the ship.

Johnson to Be a Consul.

Francis Johnson of Lafayette has accepted the post of consul at Liege, Belgium. The offer of this post came to him through Senator Fairbanks and Congressman Crumpacker upon his declining the consulate to Nagasaki, Japan. The consulship at Liege pays somewhat less than the one in Japan, but is equal to about $3,500 a year.

Makes His Fortune in Wheat.

About ten years ago Thomas Francis of Shelbyville lost his all—$100,000—in grain. He went to work on a rented farm, saved his money, and three weeks ago invested every spare dollar he had in wheat margins. Saturday he unloaded, winner $64,000. Francis says he will retire.

All Over the State.

Mrs. Jacob Donaldson of Eminence fell dead while eating her dinner.

Romeo Smally colored, was fined and sent to jail at Richmond for giving liquor to children.

A severe frost Friday night did immense damage to the potato crop in the vicinity of Warsaw.

A freight train on the Air Line was derailed at Hartwell switch. Five hundred feet of track was torn up and eight carloads of wheat demolished.

George Gundrum of Shelbyville, who attempted suicide by shooting himself through the abdomen, is dead. Domestic difficulties are assigned as the cause.

Horace Coleman, colored, confined in the county jail at Shelbyville on a charge of burglary, escaped by knocking Constable Sanders senseless and leaping over his prostrate body. Sanders is fatally injured.

Lieut. W. P. Pence, U. S. A., who was graduated from West Point in the class of 1894, standing third, has been detailed as instructor in mathematics at West Point after graduating from the Frankfort high school.

The worst storm of the season swept over Madison County the other afternoon and night. Wind did very great damage. In the oil fields, derricks were scattered over all of the surrounding country and several oil tanks were blown down and broken. The storm was so blinding that Mrs. John Davis walked in front of a train and was instantly killed. She could not see before her. Several factories were damaged. North of Anderson rain at times came down like a cloudburst and deluged everything, doing some damage which cannot yet be estimated. Lightning added to the damage. Several small structures were struck.

For some time past the families of Enos Rhoades and John Higgins, prominent people of Shelbyville, have been having trouble concerning the dividing line of their land. Saturday afternoon Mrs. Higgins, who is 50 years of age, went out to gather pears. Mrs. Rhoades saw her and told her not to touch the pears, as the trees stood on their side of the line. Mrs. Higgins denied the assertion and a fight was the result. Mrs. Rhoades, who is a much larger woman than Mrs. Higgins, went at her like a tigress, striking her upon the head with a club and knocking her into a barb wire fence, from where the enraged Rhoades woman jerked her. In so doing the Higgins woman suffered the loss of an eye and one finger, besides being horribly mutilated about the body. The Rhoades woman was beating her neighbor when taken away. Mrs. Higgins is in a critical condition and Mrs. Rhoades is under arrest.

Arrangements are being perfected for the joint reunion of the Eighty-ninth Indiana Infantry and Ninth Indiana Battery, to be held at Pendleton Oct. 6 and 7.

The Armours of Chicago have purchased of Seth Hammond 320 acres of dry marsh land eight miles west of South Bend, and expect to put up large barns and stock the tract.

The home of Milton Southers, near Fairfax, was visited by white caps. The masked men not only gave him a severe whipping, but cruelly whipped his venerable mother, 60 years old.

Dr. John M. Clark of Economy, aged 85, died. A year ago he was stricken with paralysis.

At a meeting of the Muncie City Council a vote was taken on the question of repealing the ordinance framed in accordance with the new Moore saloon law, prohibiting saloons in the residence part of the city, and it was lost by a two-thirds vote.

The Manhattan Oil Company drilled in and shot its well on the S. S. Carrell farm, north of Hartford City, in the presence of fully 1,000 people. The first few hours it flowed a terrific stream of salt water and then suddenly turned and flowed oil in great volume.

Exit Spencer.

Hon. J. D. Leighty has received his appointment as state pension agent, and Mr. Spencer will be removed at once. We cannot help believing that Mr. Spencer has been unfairly treated, and that no charges of any account have been brought against him. It seems to be merely a sharp trick to get a democrat out of office and put in a republican. If so, it will reflect no credit on any of the parties engaged in it, from McKinley down, for there has been no charge that Mr. Spencer is not a good officer. His commission does not expire till next March. But a half year's pay, or $2,250 is what does it.

E. M. Bishop has been giving his tobocco store and cigar factory a general overhauling and renovating. He believes in keeping the home of the Dinger and Victor Joe in fit shape to receive their many friends.

—Several hundred bright boys and girls started for school Monday. The rooms are all crowded and another teacher will be employed.

Sudden Cyclone Catches the Parties at Hamilton Lake.

SPECIAL TO THE DAILY COURIER:

Yesterday, Sunday, there were many people at Hamilton Lake and including those camping out at the point known as Colds Spring, and a large number of K. P. brethren, from Waterloo and other places. Among them were Frank B. Seitz and wife of Defiance, Ohio, and John Faust and family of the same place, who were camping out at Cold Springs. All had a pleasant day till about four o'clock when a sudden and violent storm came, blowing trees and branches, and every movable thing, in all directions, and sending to shelter, all who could find a place of refuge. Buggies where blown about, here and there, and Mr. Seitz was just putting up the curtains of his buggy, when a limb blown from the top of a tree sixty feet high struck him on the head, throwing him to the ground. His wife, who was near, saw him fall, and called for help. Chas Speer and Marion Bemenderfer of Waterlroo, ran around to rear of the cottage and found Mr. Seitz, unconscious, with severe hurts about the head. Dr. Greer, of Pleasant Lake, made an examination, and did not think the skull fractured. Speer had hurried to call Dr. Cameron, the local physician and had several narrow escapes from falling trees and limbs. When Dr. Cameron came, he found the man still unconscious, but at the end of half an hours, he had regained his senses. It is believed he is not fatally injured, though five holes are cut in his scalp.

Mr. Seitz was for some time superintendent of the Defiance Box Factory, though since last January, he has been giving his attention to a machine for making boxes, which he has had patented. He has succeeded in selling some other inventions of his to Fort Wayne capitalists at a handsome price.

Several other parties were hit, including Mr. Faust, of Defiance, and Earle Leas, of Waterloo, but no others were seriously hurt.

The Old, Old Story

The Garrett Herald says:—"D. M. Link, one of the best lawyears in the county, but has his office in Auburn, gave us a pleasant visit Tuesday, and before leaving ordered job work to be done for the firm. They all call at the Herald office when they want the finest work that can be turned out."

We clip this from last week's Herald, and are led to exclaim,

"Now, in the name of all the gods at once, upon what meat do these, our Cæsars feed, that they are grown so great?"

There are in Auburn, three printing offices that are better equipped than any office in Garrett, and why Auburn people should go over there for work can only be explained by the human weakness that induces a farmer to buy Bohemian oats, when he could get better seed at a tenth of the price, of his nearest neighbor. But man is wonderfully and fearfully made

AN INDIANA STRAW.

(Chicago Chronicle.)

The trend of popular political opinion is shown by the special election in the fourth Indiana congressional district, where a successor of Holman was elected by an increased majority of substantially 1,000.

Mr. Holman's majority last November was 895. He received the united democratic and populistic vote, the only other candidate besides the republican being a prohibitionist, who polled 108 votes. Holman's majority was then 895. His plurality was 787. The democratic candidate at the special election, Mr. Griffith, was opposed by a republican and also by a populist. He beats the republican by 1,152 votes and the populist takes from him 600 votes. There is a democratic gain substantially in that district of 965 votes, as compared with the election of last November.

Mr. Hanna's unfailing political purse has been stirring populists to activity in opposition to democracy. In Cleveland they are quarreling over his money. In this district Hanna' money was successful in raising up a populist candidate, who polled 600 votes.

—"Old Farmer Hopkins," said to be one of the brightest rural dramas ever written, will be produced at the opera house by the well-known comedian, Frank S. Davidson, and an excellent company. Special scenery, mechanical effects, specialties of a high order, all go to make "Old Farmer Hopkins" the great success it undoubtedly is.

A KICKING COLT

Made Quite a Scatterment On South Cedar St Sunday.

Henry Witt, who lives over in east Auburn is the owner of a very fine black colt. Sunday in company with two other gentlemen they proceeded to break it to drive. It was first hitched beside another horse and they were soon able to ride over town behind a pair of fine steeds. The colt seemed to behave so nicely that they concluded to break it to drive single, in the afternoon. So it was hitched up to a fine new road wagon and all went well until near the crossing of Cedar and Mary-sts., near S. S. Potter's residence, when the colt took to kicking. One man then jumped out of the buggy and this seemed to guide the horse to the right and it turned the rig on two wheels and spilt out driver and all. It kept on completing the circle, and then shot off at the south of Clyde Brandon's residence and in his back yard was brought to a standstill by becoming entangled in the harness. The broken parts were patched up and the horse again hitched up and started for home. When in front of A. P. Green's residence it again took to kicking and then and there completely demoralized the front part of the rig. They led the horse home and one of the men pulled the buggy.

Moral:—Holy Bible. Exodus xx, verses 8, 9 and 10.

Foolish Business.

The G. A. R. came near snubbing President McKinley, at Buffalo last week. He was going to his train and in driving by the fair ground where the G. A. R. camp was, expected to go in and visit them, as he is himself a G. A. R. As the carriage approached the gate, a sentry caught the horses and stopped them, and refused to let McKinley in, as his "orders" were to let no one pass. After a brief argument, the President ordered the carriage turned and driven to depot. No doubt the G. A. R. did not intend this should happen, but they were imprudent to put an unthinking man on for guard duty, one who did not know the war was over, and who therefore felt it his duty obey orders to the letter. It is likely he never showed such a strict sense of duty in the time when it was in order. It must be a source of regret to all the old veterans, that this silly thing was done. The President was antitled to courtesy and it should have been gladly extended to him.

BUTLER.

Preparations for the fair are progressing rapidly and promise a successful occasion.

Stephen Vandoozen has returned from his trip to Muskegon, and talks of removing there at an early date.

Daniel Freetorn our Lake Shore night yard man was beset by tramps one night last week, knocked down, but not so seriously injured as to prevent his drawing his revolver upon sight of which they made a hasty escape.

J. A. Campbell had a novel experience one day last week. He was crossing along narrow piece of road with a miry swamp on each side when he met a runaway team, with the running gears of a dirt wagon, dangling behind them. He hugged the dangerous side of the road, and barely escaped swamping his horse, or wrecking his buggy. The team and wagon dashed by dangerously near, but did not touch his rig.

The ominous shriek of the fire whistle, aroused our people one morning last week. It proved to be the Wabash ice house, a kind of tramps hotel, in the Wabash yards. It was so far destroyed as to render it unfit for further service.

Last Thursday night the large bank barn owned and occupied by John Dills, about one mile south of St. Joe, was destroyed by fire, together with about 600 bushels of wheat, 300 bushels of oats 40 bushels of corn, 40 tons of hay, 10 tons of new baled straw, and all the machiney tools and implements of his large farm entailing a loss of perhaps $2500, upon which he carried $1550, insurance, in J. A. Campbell's Butler agency. The cause of the fire is unknown, but suspicion rests on an imbecile tramp that was captured near by, last accounts he was being detained at St Joe.

Charlie Wilson, brother of our townsman, John Wilson, of Southern Ohio, is visiting him after a lapse of nearly twenty years. They drove over to Sturgis last week to visit another relative.

OBITUARY

Rebecca (Wadsworth) McCrory, widow of James P. McCrory was born in Allegheny Co. Pa. Dec. 14, 1827, and departed this life at the home of her son, J. W. McCrory in Angola Aug. 21, 1897. aged 69 years, 8 months and 7 days. She was united in christian marriage to James P. McCrory Jan. 3, 1850; to this happy union were born six children, five of whom still survive. The children living are J. W. McCrory, of Angola, Ind., Albert McCrory, of Pittsburg, Pa., Lizzie Moss, of Auburn, Ind., Marion McCrory, of Angola, Ind., and, George McCrory, of Fort Wayne, Ind. In the year 1860 they moved to Leo, where they contined to live until the death of her husband which occurred June 30, 1878. Since that time she lived with her children. When 15 years old she became a christian and united with the Presbyterian church in Pennsylvania, of which church she remained a member until she united with the Lutheran church at Auburn of which she was a faithful and devoted member at her death. Last Saturday morning Aug. 21, at 2 o'clock, she passed from the church militant on earth to the church triumphant on high. Mother McCrory loved her Saviour, and the church which he purchased with his own blood, and was always willing and ready to do what she could. The supreme ambition of her life was to do right, and tried to inspire others to do the same. Though she is gone from us, yet her life and influence remain with us. She being dead yet speaketh. The monument which she built in this life, is imperishable because the seal of God is upon it. In a life like hers we may find many traits of Character which are worthy of our emulation. Mother McCrory was an earnest and devoted worker in the Master's vineyard, and was watching and waiting when the call came, "Come up higher." Her lamp was trimmed and burning, and when bridegroom came she went out to meet him, and was fully prepared to go into the marriage supper of the Lamb. A life so faithful and so useful, with such a beautiful close is not soon forgotten. She had a deep anxiety for the salvation of her children, and her grand children; not only did she hold them up before a throne of grace in prayer, but she pointed them to Christ by precept and example. The Bible was her only text book and daily companion. It was her bread of life, like David of old, "she loved the testimonies of the Lord." For many years, Mother McCrory was a constant sufferer from Luberculosis. which affliction she bore patiently in the spirit of submission and christian fortitude. She waited in patience until her change. came. She came to her grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in his season. As a wife she was faithful and devoted; as mother she was affectionate and kind, and as a neighbor she was generous and obliging. Mother McCrory leaves to mourn her death four sons and four daughters-in-law, one daughter and one son-in-law, 4 grand children, one sister and one brother, besides many friends.

Affliction is the lot of God's people in this vale of tears. The following lines written by the deceased, are appropriate fn this connection.

Our mother has fallen to sleep
In the arms of the Saviour above;
Why grieve we in sadness and weep,
While she is with angels of love.

Our mother has fallen to sleep,
To awake in her beautiful home;
Without pain or sorrow or care,
Will wait for her loved ones to come.

The funeral services were conducted from the M. E. Church at Leo, Ind. Ang. 24, 1897. Interment took place in the Leo cemetery, Rev. J. D. Brosy officiating.

—The Auburn Ladies give their minstrel show at the opera house, Sept. 10 and 11. It will pay to come across the county to see it.

LOOKS LIKE ONE.

Frank Scholes, our well-preserved deputy surveyor, is often mistaken for a preacher. In fact, with his clerical suit and well developed frame, he is the very image of a Catholic priest. In fact, not long ago, he met a number of these Catholic ministers, and they at first sight were sure he was a "father" in charge of some church and greeted him warmly. The facts are, Frank is only a layman, though an active one, in the Christain church, but he seems so like a real minister that he could fool them into paying him a salary, if he could find a church with an extra salary to spare.

The total number of excise certificates issued in Brooklyn under the Raines law is 3,667, of which 3,375 are of the first grade. The total receipts were $2,087,088. Exactly 1,035 saloonkeepers have been forced out of business through the new law.

The Katboke and Clambake Clubs are two rather unique organizations of the men of society in Newport. The former is a new feature of the present season, but the latter has before this summer delighted the hearts and tickled the palates of its members.

Stowe house, the residence of the last line of dukes of Buckingham and more recently of the comte de Paris, is offered for sale. Of it Pope wrote to Bolingbroke: "If anything under paradise could set me beyond all earthly cogitations, Stowe might do it."

London's new census shows a population of 4,411,271 for inner London, and of 1,756,421 for outer London, a total of 6,161,092. This idea of having an outer and inner enumeration will be a great boon to Chicago, which will now proceed to snuff out the British metropolis.

For the first time in its history Harvard has conferred the degree of master of arts on a negro. Booker T. Washington is the man honored, and it is an honor worthily bestowed. His great work in education in the South fully entitles him to the very unusual recognition.

The first United States coins bore the likeness of Martha Washington. The general was greatly annoyed and had the die altered, fearing that his political opponents would construe the image on the coin as indicating a destre for royal honors. Our coinage once comprised a $3 gold piece. The authorized act for this coin was passed Feb. 21, 1853, and its coinage was begun in 1854. It is said that very few of these pieces are now in existence.

It is popularly supposed that the sudden downpour which usually follows a bright flash of lightning has in some way been caused by the discharge of the electricity. The most advanced weather sharps are now making experiments which it is believed will prove that the contrary is the exact cause; in other words, that it is the sudden increased precipitation which causes the lightning flash instead of the lightning flash causing the sudden increase of the rainfall.

The keeper of a saloon hotel at 74 Stanton street, New York, was arrested the other Sunday for violation of the excise law. The saloonkeeper was a queer one. A number of bricks were on the bar. One of them bore a placard marked "Ham sandwiches, 10 cents." On another brick was a placard, "Tenderloin steaks $1.70, to order $9." On another was a card, "Cats without teeth, 72 cents; ladies, 71 cents." A fourth brick had a card marked, "Fried dogs, 35 cents; extra, 75 cents." Another was labeled, "Spring chickens, $1.65." A piece of wood bore a card labeled, "Hamburger steak, 40 cents; extra fine, 29 cents."

THE WORLD'S WAY.

Uncle Si Hackett Is Very Much Like Other Men.

Uncle Si Hackett was behind his counter weighing some sugar for Mrs. Skinner's boy Bill when Ezra Rabb dropped in to get a new whetstone.

"I hear this mornin'," said Ezra, "that Pete Hodgin died last night over on Willow crick."

"I want to know!" said Uncle Si. "Must of been powerful sudden. Poor Pete. He had his faults like the rest of us, but there wuz never a better hearted feller lived. And so Pete's gone! Lord, Lord, Lord! That there man never had half the credit he desarved. I doubt ef he wuzn't lots better than the folks that used to run him down. He al'ays had a kind word for everybody, an' there never wuz the day he wouldn't drop his own work to help a neighbor out. Poor Pete!"

"He used to drink right smart, didn't he?" asked Ezra as he reached down into the dried apple barrel.

"Why, he took his dram," said Uncle Si, covering the barrel with a board and laying a subsoil plough on top of it, "but they wa'n't no better man altogether in the county than Pete. He was as fine a man as I ever saw. As I said, he had his faults, but outside of them he wuz a shore 'nough gentleman and one ov the high mindedest Christian citizens we had."

"Kinder lazy, I al'ays thought," said Ezra.

"That he wuzn't," said Uncle Si, warmly. "Pete took things easy, but ef ever wuz a man tried to do his duty, and was good to his family and friends, it wuz Pete. I don't mind any man in the whole county we could have any wuss spared than Pete Hodgin, and ef ther town wuz to do its duty it would call a meetin' and resolute some about the loss his death will be to the community."

"Here comes Jim Hoskins," said Ezra, "maybe he kin tell us what wuz the matter with Pete. Hello, Jim, know what Pete Hodgin died of?"

"It wa'n't Pete," said Jim, "it were Sam Hodgin, his brother."

"It wuz Sam, wuz it?" said Uncle Si, taking off his spectacles and wiping them on a bolt of calico. "Well, now! Think ov the ways ov the Lord. He's taken off Sam, the best man fur forty miles around, and left that lazy, triflin', drunken, low down, sheep-stealin' brother Pete of his for to cumber up the yearth!"

Nursery Biscuit.

The following recipe for nursery biscuits is taken from Womankind: Nursery biscuits are highly recommended for the younger members of the family. To make them, set a sponge in the usual way, say, with one quart of milk—adding flour to form a stiff batter; let it rise; when raised, add one more quart of milk with four ounces of sugar dissolved in it, also the usual amount of salt. Then, for this quantity, take one pound of arrowroot and then add to it what flour you think will with the arrowroot form a rather stiff dough; add half a pound of butter and rub it in very firm; break down the sponge with the other quart of milk—break it down very fine; then add the flour, arrowroot, etc., and mix. When mixed either knead it very fine or pass it through rollers; let it raise, then knead or break down again, as the dough must be very fine. When again raised, break it up into one-ounce pieces, mold them up nice and clear—overhand molding—set them on a board, wash them with water; then place them on level baking pans, set the pans in boxes, turn another box over them and let them prove up light, but not light enough to fall in the baking. When proved bake in a steady heat; they must be fully baked. When baked, place them away to dry right through—a dry prover would be best—when dry they are ready for use. To use them, put one in a teacup, cover it with lukewarm water; let it remain until plumbed up, then add milk, sugar, honey or what is needed, and with a spoon beat it into a pulp; it is then ready for the infant. If properly made, one of them should "pulp up" and fill a large teacup.

The Conjurer Astonished.

Mr. Charles Bertram, the well-known prestidigitateur, tells some very interesting stories in his recent Reminiscences. Among them he relates how one of his most ingenious tricks had an unexpected ending, more amusing to the spectators than to the performer.

He had borrowed a ring from a lady in the audience, and jokingly requested her to place a value upon it. This she did, assessing it at $20. He then tied a piece of ribbon to it, placed the ring on a plate in full view of the audience, and proceeded to make an omelette.

Having mixed the ingredients, he threw the ring and the ribbon into them, and pouring a little spirits upon them, went through the make-believe of cooking the omelette in a pan.

On setting fire to the spirit there is a blaze, and a lid is placed upon the pan. When the lid is removed, instead of an omelette, a dove is found with the identical ring attached to its neck by a ribbon.

"All went well until I removed the cover of the pan," continues Mr. Bertram. "There was the dove sure enough, with the ring tied to its neck; but during the applause of the audience, the dove flew up, winged its way round the hall, and dashed out of an open window into Piccadilly. I never saw it or the ring again."

The conjurer mournfully adds that he had to make the best of a bad bargain and pay the lady $20 as a compensation for her loss.

Politics of the Day

THE IOWA CAMPAIGN.

The Iowa Republican State convention was ruled from first to last by the machine and gang which has long controlled the politics of the State. But by the strategy which a political gang always employs the candidates having the gang brand and certificate were defeated. They were defeated by gang tactics.

The most conspicuous fact in Iowa politics is that the men closely connected with the administration for the last four years of Republican rule have brought reproach to the State and have been denounced as unavailable for renomination. This was their reward for continuous and humiliating obedience to the dictates of the machine in matters of corrupt legislation and bad administrative management.

Governor Frank D. Jackson, elected in 1893, was a swift and willing agent of the machine in aiding its efforts to make the legislation of the State accord with the designs of the great monopolies and of corrupt interests of various description in all parts of the State. He became so odious to the people that he was compelled to withdraw in 1895 as a candidate for renomination. The Republican party did not dare to go into the campaign of that year with him as its leader.

When Jackson was forced out of the field as a candidate for renomination in 1895 Francis M. Drake was nominated as the Republican candidate for Governor and was elected. His administration was such that he feared the result if he should again ask the verdict of the people at the polls and he drew out.

The Republican candidate for Governor of Iowa this year is Leslie M. Shaw, described as a lawyer and local banker without a political record of any kind, and acceptable only because nobody knows enough about him to say anything against him. But Jackson was nominated for Governor in 1893 and Drake was nominated in 1895 for precisely the same reason. Neither dared to appear as a candidate for renomination! Probably the same fate if he shall be elected awaits Mr. Shaw in 1889.

In no other State in the Union is there a more rotten condition of politics than that which has existed in Iowa since the Republican restoration in 1894. For the previous four years, under the Democratic administration of Governor Horace Boies, there had been economy, honesty and thrift in the management of State affairs. Taxes had been reduced in proportion to the increase in the value of property. The State was more prosperous from 1890 to 1894 than it ever was before or has been since. A Democratic restoration is needed for the bes interests of the State and its people.—Chicago Chronicle.

Sugar Trust and Farmers.

Providence has given the farmer a glimpse of prosperity by providing a large crop of wheat in the United States and a short crop everywhere else.

The Republican party has given the Sugar Trust prosperity by passing the iniquitous Dingley tariff bill. Next year the world's crop of wheat may be large all over the world; then the farmers of this country will discover that the Republican party has done nothing for them, and their wheat will be hard to sell at 50 cents a bushel. But the Sugar Trust will go right on reaping a harvest of unearned gold.

Last March, before McKinley's extraordinary session of Congress met, Sugar Trust stock was worth something like 115; to-day it is worth about 150. This gives the Sugar Trust a tidy little profit of $28,000,000.

The farmer cannot make his wheat grow—nature must provide the proper conditions; and he cannot sell it at a good price unless the demand is good. But the Sugar Trust, protected by Republican legislation, can raise a crop of dollars amounting to millions for every eighth of a cent increase to the pound on sugar. The farmers, along with all other consumers, will have the privilege of contributing to this fund for the benefit of the trust.

Great Time for the Farmer.

This has been a marvelous month for the farmers.

Farmer Joseph Leiter has made $500,000.

Farmer Charles Pillsbury has made $500,000.

Farmer William T. Baker has made $350,000.

Farmer D. R. Francis has made $300,000.

Farmer George B. French has made $200,000.

Farmer J. Pierpont Morgan has made $1,000,000.

Statements that Do Not Agree.

We are told in one breath by the Republican organs that the effect of the Dingley tariff will be to restrict importations, and thus insure a favorable balance of trade, and in the next breath that the Dingley tariff will also increase the revenues and keep the treasury full of gold. Unless there shall be large importations there cannot be a large revenue collected from importations. If the Dingley law shall stop importations it will stop revenue.—Philadelphia Record.

Phlebotomy on the New Plan.

It used to be thought necessary when anyone got sick to bleed the sufferer as a preliminary to the restoration of health. We now know that this was a delusion and a mistake. But there are thousands of credulous persons who think that the passage of a law increasing federal taxation and bleeding the pockets of the people will cure the business sickness which afflicts the country. In due season this delusion will also pass away.—Philadelphia Record.

Half a Million Daily 'Deficit.

The tariff "for revenue" does not seem to be filling requirements. The receipts from customs under the new law continue small, averaging about $200,000 a day, while it will take an average of $500,000 a day to wipe out the deficit. The whole of the government revenue collected for this month amounts to about $10,000,000, while the expenditures are over $18,000,000. Prosperity cannot stand such inequality between expenditure and income very long.—Indianapolis News.

Silver Sentiment Growing.

Those who flatter themselves that the free silver sentiment of this country is dying out are lacking in powers of observation or are guilty of shutting their eyes in order that they may not see.

Colonel Henri Watterson is an experienced politician, and yet, in a recent speech, he made the following reckless assertion: "As a political issue the free and independent coinage of silver at a ratio of 16 to 1, or at any other ratio, is as dead as the institution of African slavery."

It is worthy of note that the New York World, a strong advocate of the monometallic gold standard, takes occasion to criticise the opinion expressed by Colonel Watterson. In discussing this matter the World says: "From this statement we must dissent. It does not correctly state the actual situation. We wish it did. But no good and much harm may come from deceiving ourselves with such an optimistic but unfortunately untrue view of existing political conditions.

"It is best always to see and recognize the truth, even though we would prefer it were not so. And the sober, undeniable truth is that the free silver issue is neither dead nor sleeping."

Our esteemed contemporary is eminently right in its view of the situation. The sentiment in favor of free silver was never as strong in the United States as it is to-day. Aside from the fact that logic and reason are all on the side of free silver, the corruption and subserviency of the Republican party tend to destroy its influence and to strengthen the Democracy.

The World concludes its comment on the situation by saying: "There is, in fact, grave danger of a popular reaction against the national verdict of 1896 which may enable the free silver coalition to carry some very important elections this year, and perhaps the next House, and at the same time gain control of the almost evenly balanced Senate next year."

It is evident that the advocates of gold are beginning to see the handwriting on the wall. The enemies of the people have been weighed in the balance and found wanting. The downfall of the party of trusts and taxes is approaching.—Chicago Dispatch.

McKinley and the Stump.

It is hardly possible the report that President McKinley is going to stump Ohio during the State campaign can be true.

The assertion that the President of the United States will descend to the squabble of a party campaign is made with a good degree of particularity by the New York Sun as follows: "President McKinley will make a railroad tour of the State, not as a stump speaker, but in a modest fashion, talking for the ticket from the platform of his railroad car." Surely the Sun must have been misinformed. President McKinley has too high an appreciation of the dignity of the office which he holds to imitate Andrew Johnson, the only chief executive who ever stooped to such a course.

Mark Hanna, it is true, did a great deal for Major McKinley during the Presidential campaign, and Mark Hanna will need all the help he can get this autumn in his Ohio canvass; but, while the junior Senator from Ohio knows the exigencies of the occasion, he also knows the game of politics too well to put his friend, the President, in such a light before the people of the United States. The Sun is unusually correct in matters of fact, but in this instance it appears as though its careful and clever editor had been shamefully victimized.—Chicago Dispatch.

The Exodus from the Farm.

The policy that makes agriculture unprofitable shows a vital defect. Men will leave the farm so long as protection takes from agriculture and gives to industry. They will run for office so long as official salaries and perquisites so greatly exceed the average earnings in private life. An honest, frugal government, bestowing equal and exact justice to all and granting special privileges to none, would so ennoble the farm that the present exodus would cease.—Dallas (Tex.) News.

Consumers Will Pay, as Usual.

The average advance of $2 a ton in the price of structural steel reported from Cleveland will go into the cost of new buildings and thus into rents. Not a cent of it will go into the United States treasury, and unless foreigners are encouraged by the Dingley bill to move to the United States Americans will have to pay it and as much more as the structural steel combination feels able to add to it.—New York World.

Saved by Dingley.

United States wheat shipments are 5,248,000 bushels for the week, as against 2,992,000 for the same period last year. This enormous increase is of itself an exposition of the cause of higher prices. But what a fortunate thing it is that the Dingley bill imposes a duty of 25 cents a bushel on wheat and of 20 cents a bushel on corn. If it were not for that the farmer would have to meet the competition of the foreigner in the home market. Last year all of 4,000 bushels of corn were imported, and, of course, they played the deuce with the price of the 2,000,000,000 bushels that were produced here. Thanks to Dingley, we shall have no more of this ruthless slaughter. The farmer is protected now.—Chicago Journal.

For Lincoln and for Hanna.

Strange as it may seem, there are men still living who voted for Lincoln and who expect to vote for the election of Mark Hanna to the Senate. Since the creation of the world no two men in the same or in opposition parties have been less like than Abraham Lincoln and Marcus A. Hanna. It scarcely seems possible that they could belong to the same race.—Columbus (O.) Press.

Trusts or Government Must Fall.

As monopolistic combinations, profiting by oppression and by the abuse of governmental powers, the trusts assault the bulwarks of just government. One or the other must fall. If the trusts are to survive as useful agents of society they must be the servants and not attempt to be the masters of the people.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Brief Comment.

What a wonderful thing the tariff is to force up the price of wheat so!—Indianapolis News.

Senator Foraker of Ohio is not talking much these days. This is equivalent to saying he is working, and Mark Hanna had better keep his eyes on him.—Peoria Journal.

The Dingley newspapers are telling of a return of "the wages of 1892." But the wages in 1892 were no higher than the wages in 1890, before the passage of the McKinley tariff. The sponsor of the law never responded to the Democratic challenge to point to an increase of wages in a single protected industry as a result of the heavy increase of duties which he engineered.—New York World.

The theory of the new feudalism differs little from the old, except that its scope has been enlarged and that it substitutes the rule of cunning for the rule of might, and, just as before, a hammer will be found large enough this time not only to break, but to shatter, the new feudalism, even though to fashion that hammer notions respecting many matters must be revised. The thought of the world is even now forging that hammer.—Des Moines Leader.

Wheat is going up in price because of a foreign demand, due to exceptional but logical causes. Woolen clothing for man, woman and child, blankets and carpets are advancing in price because of the tariff. This redounds to the benefit of Dingley and other manufacturers who imported vast quantities of wool in anticipation of increased duties. The treasury gets no benefit from it, but the trusts do.—Pittsburg Post.

The farmer is the blood of life to protection. Once let him find out that he is a poor, deluded wight, that it is not the 57 per cent tariff, but his wheat and corn and hay and cotton that make this country rich and prosperous, and he will refuse any longer to tax himself in order that the manufacturers may make money enough to build fine houses and draw big checks to the order of the treasurer of the Republican National Committee.—New York Times.

Dinner a la Carte.

A young cockney couple went to Paris to spend their honeymoon, and put up at a fashionable hotel.

On sitting down to their first dinner, and not knowing any French, the cockney took up the bill and pointed to the first item thereon.

The waiter promptly brought soup, to which full justice was done. He then pointed to the second item.

The waiter looked surprised, but brought two more plates of soup.

Not wanting to show his ignorance of French, he and his bride soon disposed of the two plates of soup, although the effect was very filling.

Thinking to strike something solid, the cockney pointed to the fifth line on the bill. This time the waiter fairly started, but, obeying orders, brought two more plates of soup.

Accepting their fate with calm dignity they also disposed of the third lot.

"Well, Jennie," said he, "I think we've had enough soup to get along without meat; suppose we slip down to the pastry?"

Approved in each case.

Bound not to make any mistake this time the cockney then expressed his desire to be served with the last item on the bill.

The garcon (waiter) shrugged his shoulders and as quick as lightning placed before them a bundle of toothpicks.—Answers.

Oxygen Gas as a Healer.

A hospital has been opened in London for the treatment of wounds, ulcers and kindred ailments by oxygen gas. The new method of treatment was suggested by the Zulus. When they are wounded they climb an eminence and expose their wounds to the pure air of the mountain tops. After the Turco-Russian war it was noticed also that the invalids sat with their wounded limbs bare on the deck. Scientifically developed, and with the addition of oxygen—one part of oxygen to one part of purified air—that is the principle now adopted at the oxygen home.

Steel Wool.

This has been introduced as a substitute for glass paper in Germany. It is made of threads of shredded steel with sharp cutting edges; it works more quickly and uniformly than sand paper, does not gum or clog, and, being flexible, can be used in smoothing elaborate carvings.

Beat two eggs, without separating, until throughly mixed; add one cup of milk. Put one cup of flour into another bowl; add to it gradually the eggs and milk; beat until smooth. Strain through an ordinary gravy strainer. Put at once into greased hot gem-pans, and bake in a moderately quick oven for forty-five minutes. If these are properly made and properly baked they should swell six times their original bulk, and may be used for breakfast or luncheon, or served with a liquid pudding sauce as a dessert. Whole wheat flour, if sifted three times, may be substituted for white flour. Iron gem-pans insure better results than those made of lighter metals.—Mrs. S. T. SUFFERING WOMEN.

How Many of Them Have Quietly Obtained Advice That Made Them Well.

My sister, if you find that in spite of following faithfully your family doctor's advice, you are not getting well, why do you not try another course? Many and many a woman has quietly written to Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., stating her symptoms plainly and clearly, and taken her advice, which was promptly received. The following letter is a pretty strong confirmation of our claims:

"I had been sick for six months; one doctor told me I would have to go to a hospital before I would get well. I had female troubles in their worst form, suffered untold agonies every month; my womb tipped back to my backbone, had headache, hysteria, fainting spells, itching, leucorrhœa.

"My feet and hands were cold all the time, my limbs were so weak that I could hardly walk around the house; was troubled with numb spells. I have taken four bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, one bottle of her Blood Purifier, one package of her Sanative Wash, and am entirely cured. I have not had one of those numb spells since. Can you wonder that I sing the praises of a medicine that has cured me of all these ills?"—Mrs. Louisa Place, 650 Belmont St., Brockton, Mass.

SAGASTA.

Something of the Life of a Prominent Spanish Statesman.

Praxedes Mateo Sagasto, the noted leader of the Spanish liberal party, is to the front again as the cause of the assault made by the Duke of Tetuan upon Senator Comas on the floor of the Senate. Tetuan charged that it was Sagasta's speech to the liberals that brought about the vote in the American Senate. Sagasta is an old patriot of Spain, and has been in a revolution or two. He was born in Torrecilla de Cameros in 1827. He studied for an engineer, and practiced his profession at Valladolid and Zamora. He was elected to the constituent cortes from the latter place in 1854. He took an active part in the revolution of 1856, and was obliged to take refuge in France. He later returned to Spain and accepted a professorship in the School of Engineers at Madrid, and became the editor of La Iberia, the organ of the progressist party. He was engaged in the insurrection of June, 1866, and was again obliged to fly to France, where he remained till after the dethronement of Queen Isabella. He was appointed minister of the interior in the first cabinet formed by General Prim, and gradually abandoned his radical views, breaking entirely with Zorilla. He was made minister of state in January, 1870. He continued in the cabinet under King Amadeus, and took part in several ministerial combinations. He was minister of foreign affairs under President Serrano in 1874, minister of the interior and president of the council. After the coup d'etat which resulted in the re-establishment of the monarchy he withdrew from public life, but in June, 1875, gave his adherence to the cause of Alfonso. In 1880, when a new liberal party was formed, he joined it. The conservative cabinet of Canovas del Castillo was overthrown early in 1881, and a coalition formed by Sagasta, and General Martinez Campos assumed control and remained in office till October, 1883, when it was succeeded by a cabinet formed from the dynastic left. On the death of Alfonso, 1885, Sagasta again became the head. He was overthrown in 1890, and retired.

The Blue and the Gray.

Both men and women are apt to feel a little blue, when the gray hairs begin to show. It's a very natural feeling. In the normal condition of things gray hairs belong to advanced age. They have no business whitening the head of man or woman, who has not begun to go down the slope of life. As a matter of fact, the hair turns gray regardless of age, or of life's seasons; sometimes it is whitened by sickness, but more often from lack of care. When the hair fades or turns gray there's no need to resort to hair dyes. The normal color of the hair is restored and retained by the use of

THE TELEGRAPH CORPS AT THE CHICAGO BOARD OF TRADE

THE methods that have been devised to meet the demands for rapid service in telegraphy, have evolved some wonderful results during the past few years, particularly in the field of business. Operators on the various marts of exchange in the great cities have come more and more to rely on electricity as an adjunct of trade, until to-day fully seventy-five per cent. of the transactions of a single day on a representative board of trade or stock exchange are made by wire. So perfect have become telegraphic methods in this particular, that New York was queried from Chicago recently, and an answer returned in thirty seconds. The humble citizen who has tried to telegraph his wife at some near suburb that he will not be home to dinner, and who on his arrival about bedtime finds the police looking for him, and is routed out of his comfortable bed several hours later to receipt for the message he filed down town early in the morning, will smile with incredulity when he reads how differently they do things on 'Change. But the demands of the commercial world and the sharp competition of the rival companies have resulted in a system so perfect that "impossible" feats in the race of trade against time are performed on the Board of Trade every day.

At a fair estimate 75 per cent. of the actual transactions on the board are executed on telegraphic orders. Add to these purely "order" messages the mass of gossip in the form of opinions, crop estimates and reports, and advice and market letters, and it is easily seen how the wires are kept hot. The trading on the exchange originates in three ways: Orders are given personally by members present on the floor; they come over leased lines to the so-called "private wire" houses, or over public wires from the floors of other commercial exchanges in different sections of the country. The character of business done demands the greatest possible celerity in every stage of its handling, and for this reason it is generally arranged with the companies to have their instruments and operators close to the trading pits in the various exchanges.

On the Chicago Board of Trade, two completely equipped offices, duplicates of each other in every respect, are used. Fifty-two main line wires center in each, and a force of one hundred operators may be employed on them. These lines radiating from the exchange floor spread out over the country in all directions and bring the principal trading centers under the fingers of the telegraph company's clever young men. Six of the lines take care of the New York business, two of the six terminating on the floor of the produce exchange there, one each tapping the Stock, Cotton and Oil exchanges, and the remaining one working a set of instruments in the main office of the company. Minneapolis, St. Louis, Philadelphia, Boston, Cincinnati, Buffalo and a few other important cities have two wires each, and the remaining points get along with a single one. The long, narrow operating tables, cutting the space into rows of slender aisles, have the instruments grouped upon them according to the cities they serve, and so contracted are the quarters that the operators' shoulders are wedged together as they sit at their keys.

This company of experts is directly under the chief operator and four assistants. From the opening to the close of business the overseers circulate among the men, watching the message hooks to see that there is no accumulation of business or delay in transmission. Twenty-eight messengers attend to deliveries on the floor, and as the operators are the flower of the office force, so the lads are especially trained for the business and are the brightest to be had. Their preliminary education on the floor involves the acquisition of the knowledge of the personnel of every firm on the board, and they must know personally by name every trader operating in the various pits. If they change from one firm to another the messenger must know it and be careful that messages for the old house do not fall into the hands of the ex-employe.

The business that this force can handle is simply enormous. Most order messages are short—generally under ten words. Three such messages have been handled by a single operator in a minute in the ordinary course of business.

Eighteen hundred messages in the four hours between 9:30 and 1:30 have been handled frequently over the two New York Produce Exchange wires. This is an average of two complete messages a minute for each of the operators. Over the fifty duplexed lines, therefore, if worked to their limit, two hundred messages a minute could be handled. Accuracy is the great thing. A wrong figure might make a difference of thousands of dollars to the sender or receiver of the message, and when one considers the high pressure under which the men work, with scores of sounders about them snapping out, and with a thousand brokers splitting the air with trade jargon yelps, the percentage of error is so small and unimportant as to be hardly worth considering.

Up to a year ago the orders received over the private wires were carried from the private offices to the floor representatives of the firms by a corps of active boys, but lately a group of private telephones was installed in the trading hall, with wires leading to the offices of the private wire houses. Now a mild young man, with an ear muff receiver bolted to his head, sits on a high stool at the telephone, receives the quotations by signal from another employe in the pit, repeats them to his house below and transmits buying orders to traders in the various pits.

A simple system of signals is employed more or less by everyone on the floor, to indicate the fractional fluctuation during active trading. The right hand is used in signaling, each finger and the thumb standing for an eighth of a cent. Two fingers held up represent one-quarter of a cent; three fingers, three-eighths; four fingers, one-half, and with the thumb, five-eighths. With the fingers extended close together and the thumb across the palm, three-quarters is indicated; seven-eighths is shown with the hand closed and the thumb extended at right angles, and the even cent by the closed fist. If the fingers point up the price shown is bid; reversed, pointing down, the figure is asked by sellers.

Where messages are received for points to which no direct wire runs from the floor of the Board of Trade, the same are shot through pneumatic tubes to the main offices of the telegraph company, and thence distributed by messenger boys. The best record on a message and reply, New York, is eighteen seconds. The same record has been made with Minneapolis.

Mistakes are seldom made. One or two curious errors, however, have been due to the similarity of the dots and dashes in numbers and words. One commission man was puzzled by the receipt of a message advising him that "angel cars" had been received consigned to him. The mystery was cleared up when a different division of the dots and dashes in the word "angel" disclosed the figures 170. Another broker was mystified by being wired to ship several cars of grain to J. Bloom Splagent. Knowing no one of that name he started an investigation, and discovered that it was "J. Bloom, spl. agent," to whom he should ship.

An order to buy 10,000 May "cats" caused a good deal of merriment here one morning. Of course it should have been "oats." And a delivery clerk thought he had discovered a new kind of a job when he received a message addressed to "James Gilles, Pie Clerk Steamboat——." Later it was translated to James Gillespie, and reached him on his boat.

EDWARD HANLAN TEN EYCK.

Fastest Sculler of His Age America Has Ever Produced.

Young Edward Hanlan Ten Eyck, who at Henley splashed to victory in the Diamond Sculls, the single scull championship of the world for amateurs, represented Massachusetts in the big English regatta. His triumph did not please the British because of the suspicions of semi-professionalism that attach to him. Ten Eyck is unquestionably the fastest sculler of his age ever produced by America. He won his first and junior race at the regatta on the Charles River, July 4, 1895, and in 1896 he was the winner of the national intermediate championship at Saratoga. In that event his time was faster than that made in the senior race, and this led to his match with the champion, Whitehead, in the following October. He carried off the senior championship of New England on Labor Day last year, and rowed away from Whitehead in October at Lake Quinsigamond. Ten Eyck is still a schoolboy. He is but 18 years old, but is marvelously developed for a lad of that age. His attitude and action in a shell are the very poetry of sculling, and veterans say they never saw a smoother or more masterful oarsman handle the blades. He is an American all the way through. Born upon the banks of the Hudson at Peekskill, he was, one may say, reared upon the water. His grandfather was a ferryman, and his father, the noted professional oarsman, first learned to handle the sculls on the same stream. He measures about 5 feet 8½ inches and weighs, when in condition for rowing, about 162 pounds. He was trained for the event which he has just won by his father. The question of his amateur standing was brought up by a man from Worcester, who was persuaded to withdraw his objection. The Diamond Sculls were offered years ago and made a perpetual prize which nobody can win outright. Each year a solid gold bar, inscribed with the winner's name, is added to the sculls. That is all there is in it for the winner so far as the sculls are concerned. Ten Eyck will receive a handsome silver cup as a token.

FIRST BARBER IN CHICAGO.

Colored Man Who Shaved Lincoln in Early Days Still in Business.

The first barber to open a shop in Chicago is still doing business, although not exactly at "the old stand." He is an aged colored man, Louis Isbell, who came to Chicago and began removing beards and cutting hair in 1838. Although 78 years old, still he has a shop at 335 West Randolph street. Isbell is a fine-looking old man with long white hair falling almost to his shoulders. He is remarkably spry and active for one of his years. He does not do as much work now as most barbers who run shops, although he is always in his place of business ready to take a hand in case of a rush. He has two barbers working for him and spends most of his time sitting about in the shade thinking of old times, ready to talk of the days when Chicago was young.

LOUIS ISBELL.

The old barber was born in 1819 at Prestonsburg, Ky. He was especially fortunate for one of his race in those days, for he was released from slavery when he was only 5 years old and removed to Paris, Ill. There he lived with his parents until 1838 and there he picked up the rudiments of the barbers' trade. When he began to approach man's estate Isbell decided to leave the little country town in which he was raised and strike out for himself in Chicago. His shop soon became the favorite of all the politicians of that day and in the years in which Isbell was in business there he shaved Abraham Lincoln, who came to Chicago to attend court on several occasions; Stephen A. Douglas, "Long John" Wentworth, General Beaubien, William B. Ogden, Walter Newberry and many other early Chicagoans.

Those Humorous Cincinnatians.

"What is a spiral stairway?"

This question was asked of 1,302 people in Cincinnati yesterday, and 1,301 of them raised his or her right hand and proceeded to illustrate in pantomime the winding course of a spiral stairway. The one who failed knew not what a spiral stairway was and so frankly admitted.

The harmless joke started on 'Change. A fun-loving broker asked another dealer the question and then laughed as he raised his hand in the air to illustrate, saying: "Why, it's like this." The victim, of course, started out to "get even," and before closing hour pretty nearly every one on the floor had at one time or another raised his right hand as though to take a solemn oath and had been laughed at for his pains. Members discussed the joke, and insisted that it proved that sign language antedates spoken words.

From 'Change the joke spread all over the city. People who had been "caught" asked the members of their families, "What is a spiral stairway?" and then laughed at them.

It's only a little matter, but it has its humorous side. Try it on some one who hasn't heard of it, and watch his hand go up.—Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune.

The reply was: "Sir—We don't insert rhymes without reason."

CARRIE. You wouldn't think I would give Ripans Tabules to a child like Charlie, would you?

ELSIE. No, indeed. He could not swallow one, and it would be too powerful.

CARRIE. They are all right for him. Of course, he don't need one very often, and I used to give him a quarter of a one, afterwards half, but now he takes a whole one and they seem to be just what he needs—once in a while, you know—not often.

THE CHICAGO WAY.

Ever since Chicago, many years ago, dug tunnels, miles out, under the lake, and made tunnel roadways under he river, it has been conceded that she has been in advance on all plans of city-making. Then she was among the first to raise immense brick buildings, and even to move them to other locations. This process she still continues, though in a slightly different way. Then she used a multitude of jack screws; Each was turned by a separate person. Now she uses fewer jack screws, and more timbers, both upright and horizontal, and instead of one man to each jack screw, there need be but one man for all. He moves quietly from one to the other and gives to each the same turn. So it is possible for one man to a brick block. This summer, a large block in the center of the business district, right by first station of the elevated road of the north side line, was raised in this way. It was the 6-story brick, corner of Randolph and Wabash Ave. It looked a little risky, but it was about done when we saw it, and by this time is no doubt all occupied again and business going on inside as usual, and one going there would find it difficult to realize the wonderful engineering feat that had recently. fully changed the character of the block.

Another thing strikes the passer-by. A few year ago, Uncle Sam built an immense stone building for a postoffice custom house and supreme court business, in the busiest part of Chicago. It was a fine building and cost several millions. But it was not honestly done and last spring the massive block was taken down, and the very foundations had to be dug up before the new one could be started. Here came in another queer piece of Chicago way of doing things. The large stone pillars and other forms of stone foundation had been laid in cement, and it was not possible to remoue them except by first breaking them up. And these masses of limestone and cement defy the usual methods of pick and crowbar. They must be drilled and blasted as if they were solid bed rock. And blasting, in the heart of a great city with hundreds of idlers standing near by looking on, and hundreds of office windows across the streets in all directions into which the flying rock pieces would be hurled, presented serious difficulties. But as usual, Chicago soon had invented a way to do it, and do it as rapidly as such a formidable job could be done. They got a number of steam drills and set them at work boring holes down into the rock masses of these foundations. Then they put giant powder, into these holes, put in a wire from a small electric battery and then tamp the hole well with damp sand. Then before exploding it, they cover the hole and the rock mass around it, with a pile of wire netting. They have several of these piles of netting near by so they can have the use of several at a time. The wire has been blown up so many times that it looks dirty, rusty, torn and matted into what looks like small brush heaps. They are heavy and it takes several men to tumble or drag them to the place. When they are in place, the mass of wire is a foot or so deep and covers an irregular surface of about ten feet in diameter. When all is ready, the electrician springs his battery and the mass of wire netting jumps into the air a foot or two but not high enough to allow any pieces of the stone to fly away, there is a dull, heavy report, a small cloud of dust, and that is all. Not a piece bigger than dust particles has got away. But the foundation is broken up and splintered and now the men can pick it apart, shovel it into wagons, and it is then taken to the lake front to help fill up the basin and enlarge the new park This is but one of the wonders of ingenuity to be seen in the building and the tearing down in a big city like Chicago.

The Schiller.

The most fetching item in the theatrical small talk of Chicago lately has been the information of that is called the Schiller Theater Company. This company is composed of five or six big men locally. They are on this account of the place they have done in trade and the professions. In other words they are rich individually and by their success in different ways they have proved their quality. This is important in this connection, because the average new theatrical enterprise is founded in hope and small means. The purpose of this organization is to establish an old fashioned stock company theater of the highest class, and to make the Schiller a producing theater. They have shown their mettle by going over the swarming fields of actors and picking out for their ends only such as have attained the highest consideration for acting ability. In this list are such known values, in the sense of acting reputation, as, J. H. Gilmour, Elita Proctor Otis, Minnie Dupree, George Nash, Minnie Radcliffe, George Edeson, Benjamin Horning, George W. Leslie, Mattie Earle, and several others of like excellence. The first play to be offered is one of American life, with an army flavor. It is the dramatization of a story, which the author Captain King, put into the form of a novel, after he had written the play. It is called "Fort Frayne." It is a curious fact that the book of this name, which is known to most readers and held to be remarkably popular, was written after the play. This came about through the loss of the manuscript which was first written for the stage, and the subsequent embodiment of the plot of the play into a book of fiction, which secured a copy right protection and prevented play piracy. In the dramatic work, as it now stands, the honors are shared by Mrs. Sutherland, dramatic critic of the Boston Journal, and Mrs. Emma Sheridan Frye, of literary and dramatic repute, as well as the clever writer of army stories, Captain Charles King.

Beautiful eyes grow dull and dim
As the swift years steal away.
Beautiful, willowy forms so slim
Lose fairness with every day.
But she still is queen and hath charms to spare
Who wears youth's coronal—beautiful hair.

and you preserve your youth. "A woman is as old as she looks," says the world. No woman looks as old as she is if her hair has preserved its normal beauty. You can keep hair from falling out, restoring its normal color, or restore the normal color to gray or faded hair, by the use of

THE KLONDIKE.

In these days of rapid transmission and concise collection of news, how frequently the arena of interest shifts. Now one region, then another. becomes for the time being a focus point for the gaze of the whole world. The average reader must often be impressed by two facts: one, how little he really knows about the world; the other, what unexpected relation exists between localities that he has never thought of connecting.

This ignorance has been recently emphasized by the marvelous accounts of gold-finding in the Klondike. A short time ago few had even heard of the region, while to-day its name is a household word. Now that the first excitement is over, we settle down to learn something about the spot, and it comes to us almost as a surprise that this wild region, which our imagination pictured as inhabited only by moose and mosquitoes until the arrival of the miner, has been thoroughly investigated by the United States Geological Survey. In Harper's Weekly of Aug. 21st, Harold B. Goodrich, a member of the expedition, will describe a journey made by his party from Juneau to the Klondike, following the route that is taken by the miners approaching from the south. But the interest in the Klondike naturally extends across the frontier into Alaska. Here we are on our own territory; but what do we know of it? And yet it is a territory equal in area to all the States east of the Mississippi! In the same number of Harper's Weekly there will be a descriptive article on this interesting region by the well-known authority, Cyrus C. Adams.

Now that our eyes are turned in this direction, there is a peculiar timeliness in the series of articles, commencing in Harper's Weekly of August 21st, by a member of the World's Transportation Commission, in which the writer describes his travels over the route of the Trans-Siberian Railway.

Losing Flesh

You naturally lose flesh in the summer and running down is so easy. You get a little weaker each day without hardly noticing it. There is loss of appetite, headache, weakness of the muscles, disturbed sleep, weakness of memory, and these are the beginning of nervous prostration. Iron and tonics and bitters may afford some temporary relief, but what you need is a food for body, brain and nerves.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod-liver Oil with the Hypophosphites, furnishes just the nourishment needed for those who are run down and pale and thin and weak. If you lose flesh in summer take Scott's Emulsion now. Don't wait till fall or winter before beginning.

For sale at 50c. and $1.00 by all druggists.

Queer Calf

They have a queer calf down at LaOtto. It is the property of H. L. Holbrook, but may be seen in the grounds just back of Harvey Ross' butcher shop It is apparently a regular calf till it comes to the knees, and below these, the legs are more like those of a horse, and it has solid hoofs like a horse. The legs and feet are small, something like those of a sheep. But the animal now two or three months old, seems in the best of health and is very lively. It will be brought here and left for inspection at the Auburn Carnival Sept. 22, 23 and 24. It is a strange freak.

Is Marriage A Failure?

Is marriage a failure? I suppose sexes has or will be at some future time interested in matrimony. A good husband or wife is the greatest of all earthly blessings. But in those days of frivloty and nonsense when the mother does the work and the daughter plays the lady, or the father does the farming, and the son could not raise an acre of corn fit for a china pig to digest. It is hard to find a true model Where are the boys of the olden times? Sadly and mournfully echo where? Give me one of the old fashioned boys who will stick to his wife through thick and thin, or a man that the maker God can look upon as he did on the first and say he is very very good.

With a heart like the ocean
So strong and deep,
We may launch our all on its tide;
A loving woman finds heaven or hell
On the day she is made a bride.

In the first place how does a good husband go home to his wife. When he enters his home and finds a little woman who has been hard at work all day receiving calls, jobs of mending, pastry making and see that she has found no time to curl her hair or put on her best gown to receive him. What does he do? Why, like a dear old sympathized fellow takes her in a warm embrace whispers in her ear. Never mind dearie, I've got home and we will share the cares for the rest of the day. You go and rest while I put Johnny and the baby to sleep. If a man after years of toiling and slaving succeeds in laying up a comfortable nest egg and then marries a lady who cannot bring sunshine and happiness to his home. His money will soon melt away and he will not have the heart to strive for more such love will soon take wings. But the man whose wife cheerfully does her duty in the beginning keeps the house neat and clean always meets him with a smile, sees baby sitting on the floor cheerfully sucking its thumb, such a marriage will be a howling success. This is a glimpse of one side, now let us take a look at the other how does the other meet his wife when he comes home finds her trying to quiet a sickly child, and supper not ready. He bolts into the house and the first thing he says, why is'n't supper ready? I'm hungry as a hound: Great scott! can't you keep that child quiet; or what's the use of burning so much coal, turn down the damper, your are enough to ruin Cornelius Vanderbilt, and yet he expects this wife to bring sunshine and happiness into his home, he excuses his indifference by. Oh, well she knows I love her, so what's the use of spooning at our age. There may be love in his heart but he is careful to keep i on ice. I am unwilling to believe that marriages is a failure with all mankind. But there is nothing so sad in all life's history as the vanished opportunity to manifest a love for which some friend went hungry through slow years of undemonstrative and stupid reserve. If one wants a happy home he should be good and kind to his wife, otherwise he deserves to sleep by himself, as he did in his bachelor days, and the same may be said of the wife who does not make the home happy.

Robison Park and Returned

Four Auburn girls, Emma and Carrie Beuret, Mary Ashley and Libbie Hosler went to Robison Park yesterday on their wheels. Miss Ashley and Carrie Beuret remained over night with friends in Ft. Wayne, but Emma Beuret and Libbie Hosler started back for home about four o'clock. They ran into the rainstorm, and the roads got so muddy they could not go. So they left their wheels and got a chance to ride home with a passing team. They reached home after dark, wet and weary, but in good spirits. They had a good time up to the hour the rain struck them and think Robison Park is a very nice place.

GARRETT HAPPENINGS

Garrett was particularly unfortunate last Saturday. Here are several accidents that happened there:

Eddie Martin a son of Samuel Martin, was going across the B. O. tracks on the Main street on his wheel, about two in the afternoon, when the yard engine came pushing down some cars. He was hailed to get out of the way, but the car struck him, breaking an arm and crushing a leg. He died at 6 p. m.

Wesley Baker, a nephew of Chris Reyher, went to get onto the yard engine but slipped and struck it him. His leg was broken, but he will live.

At almost the very minute that young Martin was hurt, C. K. Shaffer, a Garrett conductor, fell off the boat at Cedar Beach and was drowned. His body was found in sixty feet of water. He was getting ready to go to Klondike.

The same day, a Miss Wray, whose father is a B. & O. conductor was shot while she and a lady friend were out riding their wheel in South Chicago.

—F. M. Merica moves Tuesday to his new home at Lagrange where he has charge of the city schools.

BICYCLES.

Saturday evening last, was bright and pleasant, and the streets were full of people, people from town, from the country and from surrounding towns. And walking along the Kiblinger Block, one could see leaning against the building, thirteen bicycles. On the opposite side of the street, leaning against the Farmers Bank Block were four others. Thus, there were seventeen bicycles in going half a block. This at an average price of $70 would make up a sum total of about $1,200. A great part of this money is sent into eastern states. This gives one of the reasons why eastern states have more money than central and western states We part with our money and they get it. We are not complaining, but these things should be studied. Nor do we blame those who can afford it, for buying wheels and enjoying them. But we must remember that we cannot keep our money and spend it too. Nor should we complain too much of hard times, when it is our own love of enjoyment that causes some of it. And by another year when bicycles come down to about $20, we may hope to save a part of this expensive drain.

LaGrange and Noble.

Mr. Merica has returned from Rome City where he has been a few days attending the joint teacher's institute. The two counties of Lagrange and Noble had this week, their joint county institute at this pleasant resort. It enabled them to unite in bearing the expenses of a single set of lecturers and teachers. It was all very good and interesting but Mr. Merica believes we have better ones in DeKalb. He was particularly attracted to the work of a professor from Boston, who was leading out with the very ideas and methods we were teaching in our institutes here many years ago. It is not always wise to send east for instructors, as their methods, etc, are necessarily different from ours. Last evening, he heard the lecture by Robert McIntyre, the same he delivered in Auburn, "Buttoned-up People," but Mr. Merica liked it much better this time, than even the first time.

THE LAKE SHORE ROAD

S. R. Callaway for some years, president of the Nickel Plate road has been elected president of the Lake Shore road in place of the late D. W. Caldwell. He has had over thirty-five years experience as a railroad man.

This election, says the Mercantile and Financial Times means that one of the best known and most popular railroad men in the United States takes charge of one of the most prosperous railroad properties in the world, for Lake Shore is one of the few companies that seem to prosper in hard times as well as good. It operates a total of close on 1,500 miles, and has a capital stock of $50,000,000.

Its funded debt is $47,476,000, and its gross eardings since 1881 have ranged from $14,133,505 in 1885 (the lowest), to $23,655,932 in 1893 (the highest). Since 1886 it has paid to its security holders something like $27,000,000 in dividends. It pays 10 per cent. per annum on guaranteed stock, and since 1890 has paid 6 per cent. per annum regularly on common stock—that is, on $49,466,500

GERMAN FORESTS.

The law requires that every land owner shall plant a certain proportion of his acreage to trees, and it must be done under the direction of the head forester, who selects the variety for which the soil and location seem best adapted. The ground is plowed and cultivated just as it would be for corn or wheat, and the trees at first are planted very thickly, so that they grow up like a dense mass of underbrush. At the end of ten years the head forester inspects them and gives directions for the clearing out of a certain proportion that look the least promising. Five years later there is another clearing, and by that time the forest has reached proportions of importance, and will furnish each year a certain amount of fuel and timber, just as a dairy farm will furnish its quota of milk, butter and cheese. But if the owner desires to fell any of his trees he must obtain permission from the head forester, who selects those which are in a state of decay or for some other reason can be spared, Most of the fuel used by the German farmers and in their villages comes from its forests, and in the winter the supply for the next year is cut. Then the forester goes through the woods and brands the trunks of the trees that may be chopped. There is a heavy penalty for any violation of the forestry law.

ROMANICT WEDDING

Young Lady Travels 900 Miles Alone to Meet Her Lover.

NEWVILLE, IND, Aug. 28,
SPECIAL TO THE COURIER:—Some twelve months ago an advertisement appeared in a Chicago paper the signiture of gentlemen matrimonially inclined. It was answered by Miss Katie Davish who resides in Lancaster City, A correspondence ensued, photos exchanged etc. Three weeks ago a lady alighted from the cab at the residence of Mr. B. Franks, atty. and at once inquired for Mr Franks who was attending to his sick mother. The parties were mutually pleased with each other. License was procured last week and they were married. Mrs. Franks leaves for her home in a short time, but Mr. Franks will remain until November. We wish the couple a happy future and a continued honeymoon. This is another instance of the fact that advertising pays and the successful man is the man who advertises his business.

Obituary.

Lois D. (Miller) wife of S. L. Parret, was born in Markle, Huntington Co., Ind., Sept. 4, 1850, and departed this life in Huntington, Ind., Sept. 2, 1897, aged 46 years, 11 months and 28 days. She was united in christian marriage to Thomas Prickett, Sept. 29, 1872. To this happy union were born five children,: two daughters and three sons, all of whom are still living. This happy relationship continued until death came into the home and took from them husband and father, August 2, 1879. Mrs. Parret lived in widowhood and cared for her children until the fall of '86, when she was united in marriage to S. L. Parret. To this union no children were born. Seven years ago they moved to Auburn, where they have since lived. June 6, 1894 Mrs. Parret united with the order of the Ladies of the Maccabees, Conrad Hive No. 9, of Auburn, Ind., of which she was a member at her death. She was a loyal and commendable member, and is the first one to break the ranks by death. The Hive deeply mourns the death of their worthy member. As you follow your sister to her last resting place the question comes up before you, "who will be the next?" It matters not who shall be next if you all are prepared for this event. About two years ago Mrs. Parret's health began to fail, and medical aid was sought at once, but all to no avail. She grew worse and worse until physicians pronounced her case a hopeless one. During the two years now gone Mrs. Parret suffered untold pain and misery, but she bore it quietly and in patience waited until her change came. Long ago she gave her heart to Christ and on Sabbath afternoon, Feb. 21, 1897 she, with her son, Charley, united with the Lutheran church, of which she was a member at her death. She was unable to attend the church services, yet she trusted her Savior at home. The last words she was heard to say was, "I am saved." What a comfort in such words as these, I am saved. What a precious Savior the christian has in the last struggles of life. David long ago said, "Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil for thou are with me, for thy rod and thy staff they comfort me."

Thus one by one the blessed Master calls for his own, that they might be with him. For where he is there shall his people be also. Mrs. Parrett was a good woman and had many friends in whose memory she shall live for many years. She was an affectionate mother, a faithful and devoted wife and a kind and generous neighbor. A few weeks ago she had a desire to visit friends in Huntington, Ind., before she went away. She was not permitted to return to her home to die with her friends. It makes no difference where or when we die if we have on the wedding garment, if Christ is in the soul. It is just as near to the better land from one place as it is from another. Death was a welcome messenger to our sister, she longed to move out of this old house and be with Christ which would be far better. Her companion and children except Frank and Charley, were by her bedside when she departed this life. The storms of this life are over and the victory is won in Christ. She leaves to mourn her death a companion, five children, one sister and four brothers.

Funeral services were held at the house at 3 o'clock, Rev. Brosy officiating. Interment in Woodlawn.

More Scared than Hurt.

While the funeral procession was returning from Woodlawn, Saturday, when Mrs. Parrett was buried, John and Woodburn the two little sons of Frank Dills were riding in the buggy with A. J. Ralston, and when near the bridge over Cedar Creek, John, from some unknown cause fell out. He struck the ground squarely between the wheels and the hind wheel ran over both his legs. It was all done so quick, the horse could not be stopped in time to keep the wheel off of him. Mr. Ralston put him into the buggy again and it was found he had not been much hurt. But it is hard to tell which was worse frightened, he or Jack. They drove home, and by that time the lad was himself again.

Report of Expert Ernst.

The readers of the COURIER are doubtless anxious to know how the report of Expert Ernst on Steuben county official books stands, and we therefore publish the following editorial from the Angola Magnet, which gives the result:

"Mr. Ernst, who has been inspecting the records and files since about the middle of June last, submitted to the County Commissioners in special session last Monday, a report which appears on the first page of to-day's Magnet. In that report he charges ex-Sheriff Legg with holding back $264.21 from fees collected; Sheriff Hauver with holding back $382.61, and J. B. Parsell $271.92. Ex-Treasurer C. V. Tuttle is charged with $42.21 mistakes in footings, and Lorenzo Taylor with $189.66. As is well known to almost everybody, there is a dispute as to the construction of the statute which provides $2 a day for the sheriff and the clerk for attending court, one side contending that it means that they shall receive that amount in addition to the sairlary, and the other side that they can receive no compensation other than their salary. It is a question upon which good lawyers do not agree, and it will not be settled till the Supreme Court renders a decision in a test case now pending. And the officers named, claiming that the $2 a day belongs to them, are holding it back, awaiting the Supreme Court decision. But Mr. Ernst, in advance of the Supreme Court, in effect, tells the commissioners that they must pay it over.

Among the items charged against ex-Auditor Sol. A. Wood, is $989 paid Friend Sowle. On the 20th of July, 1889, the commissioners made a written contract with Sowle to build a bridge over the outlet of Crooked Lake, and to grade the banks and approaches to the bridge, agreeing to pay him therefor $989. The work was done, (as the public well knows, for the road and bridge have been in use seven or eight years past) but the commissioners inadvertently neglected to endorse upon the contract the fact that the work was done and accepted; and because of the absence of that endorsement Mr. Ernst assumes that payment for the bridge and road grading was 'unauthorized.' Certain allowances ordered paid by Judge S. A. Powers are charged up against Mr. Wood because they do not appear to have been made in open court; and we're informed that the 'unauthorized allowances' are made up of just such trifling technicalities as these cited.

We are told that Mr. Ernst states in private conversation, that he found nothing smacking of fraud against any county officer or ex-officer; but his report leaves the matter so that people anxious to do so, can construe it as evidence of glaring rascality."

SHOOT THE RATS.

No slang intended. It is a mere matter of cold facts. We found our friend James McClellan the other day, sitting on the guard railing of the embankment at the east end of Seventh-st, bridge, with a double barrel gun in his hands and murder in his heart. And daily he can be seen there or near there, like a sleuth on trail of robbers. And that is just what he is. Hundreds of rats have deserted the town to take up a sort of a summer residence in the great brush pile made by cartings from the town and its shade trees, by dumping on the north side of the road east of the bridge. It makes an ideal place, for there is hiding and water, two great essenials for rats. But there is another attraction that has evidently had weight with the rodents. It is food. And they have gone for the green corn on McClellan's side and on Madden's and their ravages are something dreadful.

The little beasts climb the corn stalks, strip the husks back and gnaw off the juicy new corn. It is a feast for them, but death for the corn crop. And they are working over into Hollister's side of the creek also. Hence, our friend and his shot gun, and about 100 slaughtered rats.

Something to Depend On.

Mr. James Jones, of the drug firm of Jones & Son, Cowden, Ill., in speaking of Dr. King's New Discovery, says that last winter his wife was attacked with LaGrippe, and her case grew so serious that physicians at Cowden and Pana could do nothing for her. It seemed to develop into Hasty Consumption. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in store, and selling lots of it, he took a bottle home, and to the surprise of all she began to get better from first dose, and half dozen dollar bottles cured her sound and well. Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds is guaranteed to do this good work. Try it Free trial bottles at Robbins & McCord's rugstore. 5

The Auburn Foundry & Machine Company.

A reorganization of the Auburn Foundry and Machine Works under the title of the "Auburn Foundry and Machine Company," has been perfected, and the works are now again in action operation.

The new corporation starts out with a capital stock of $25,000, and a board of directors consisting of C. A. O. McClellan, Albert Robbins, Franklin T. Zimmerman, and John W. Baxter, from whom the officers elected for the first year are, C. A. O. McClellan, President; Albert Robbins, Vice-President; and Franklin T. Zimmerman, Treasurer and Manager. Mr. Zimmerman will have associated with him in the management, Mr. H. E. Fisher of Fort Wayne, an experienced engineer and mechanic, while C. H. Hanna retains his old place in the office in charge of the books. Samuel D. Hanna will give his entire attention of the sales on the road, in which capacity he is very efficient. The reorganization gives promise of a successful and vigorous prosecution of the business, under the very competent force now in control. A recent visit at the works shows all the men and employers busily engaged in their various capacities, and already a good showing in the way of a cleaning up and systematising of the business. The COURIER is glad to note this change, as it has always had faith in the possibilities of the establishmet. We expect to see this company bearing out the reputation of Auburn's active business concerns.

Pageant and Human Menagerie.

All of the organizations in Auburn, including lodges, churches and individuals are asked to furnish a float or some display in the Pageant to be held twice during the Carnival. Several displays will be made by our business men. No advertisement will appear on the float, but the name of the maker will be printed in a large program to be posted on the streets and in a catalogue of displays. Characters on foot and mounted will be appropriate, as well as historical and fanciful floats.

The HUMAN MENAGERIE will be a parade of animals represented by people driven in the street, mounted and in cages. This will be given twice during the Carnival. It will be a faithful representating of a circus parade in all its glory. The Association can secure animals suits suitable for the pageant displays at a very low cost. Every business man is asked to participate in this, a grand feature of our grand Carnival. W. H. MCINTYRE, Pres.

MR. SPENCER STEPS OUT

And J. D. Leighty Takes Charge of the Pension Office.

(Indianapolis Sentinel, Sept. 2.)

After having served faithfully as pension agent for the state of Indiana for three years, five months and nineteen days, Mr. M. V. B. Spencer was superseded yesterday afternoon by J. D. Leighty of St. Joe.

For the first time in the history of the office the incumbent was not allowed to serve out his term, the charge being made for purely political reasons.

The tansfer of the office was formally made at 3:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Mr. Spencer made a speech, saying that he regretted that he had not been allowed to serve out his term as his predecessors done and thanked the clerical force for its excellent service and uniform courtesy toward him. He then introduced Mr. Leighty and expressed the hope that they would serve Mr. Leighty as well as they had served him, adding a word to the effect that if any one of them did not contemplate serving the agent faithfully, the proper thing would be for him to resign. This was interpreted as a thrust at the men who have held the office under Mr. Spencer, but have not hesitated to harass him by bringing unfounded charges. Mr. Leighty spoke briefly.

During his incumbency of the office Spencer make the remarkable record of having paid out $38,428,348.39 without a loss of one cent to the pensioners or the government and with only 47 cents loss to himself.

Letter from the President.

Mr. Spencer yesterday received from President McKinley a letter giving formal notice of his removal, It is about as brusque and abrupt a document of the kind as was ever formulated. It reads:

"Sir:—You are hereby removed from the office of pension agent at Indianapolis, Ind., to take effect upon the appointment and qualification of your successor." Respectfully,
WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

Mr. Spencer did not reply to this directly, but he wrote a letter to Secretary Bliss of the interior department. He called attention to the fact that on day before yesterday he received the first official notice of his deposal and added:

"I presume that your intense anxiety to get possession of the office must be considered by me as sufficient excuse for omitting a courtesy that has been extended to my predecessors on like occasions."

One remarkable fact about President McKinley's letter is that it bears the date of July 21, showing that it has been laid away ready to be sent since that time.

Requests for his Resignation.

The republican leaders must have been very hungry for the spoils of the office if one were to judge from the way they dingdonged at Mr. Spencer to get him to resign. Mr. Spencer yesterday revealed the fact that he received two separate letters from the president's secretary asking him to resign. To these Mr. Spencer replied that he liked the office, was getting along nicely and until cause was shown him why he should resign he would continue in the even tenor of his way.

The most nerve, however, was evinced by Mr. Leighty himself, who actually called on Mr. Spencer three months ago and asked him to resign. The conference took place at the Denison House. Mr. Spencer said that the charges that had been brought against him were unfounded whereupon Mr. Leighty gave the nervy bit of advice, "Mr. Spencer, if I were you I would resign." Mr. Spencer said:

"All that I ask of you Mr. Leighty, is that you will allow me to serve my time out," whereupon Mr. Leighty promptly replied: "I won't do that."

Mr. Spencer says that he will remain in the city and will probably engage in the practic of law.

A NEW MOVE.

Congress May Be Called for a Special Session.

Congress called in special session to consider the Cuban situation is the probable outcome of Minister Woodford's mission in Madrid. A prompt rejection on the part of Spain of the offer of friendly mediation which he will bear will bring about the inevitable message to Congress.

Gen. Woodford's instructions are to leave no doubt in the minds of the Spanish Government as to the attitude which President McKinley has been compelled by the logic of events to assume toward the Cuban rebellion.

The inference will be equally plain to the Spanish mind that the rejection of the offer which he bears will be followed by immediate steps on the part of the administration to protect the remnant of American interests so long neglected and permitted to suffer the fortunes and vicissitudes of a destructive warfare.

President McKinley knows that he would be held responsible for any advantage which delay should give to Spain, so should Spain reject his offer he would probably take the necessary precaution of calling Congress in immediate session.

Successful Electrocution.

Frank Mueller was successfully electrocuted in the annex of the Ohio Penitentiary. The electrocution was very successful. Mueller had no friends in this country. He was a Russian Pole and was born at Warsaw 27 years ago. On March 27 last, while employed on the farm of J. W. Miller, at Black Lick, near Columbus, he murdered Mrs. Saluda Miller, wife of his employer, first stabbing her in the face with a pitchfork and then breaking her neck with an ax. After the crime he put her body in a sack and hid it in a grain box in the barn.

Storms in Ohio.

A violent wind and rain storm swept over Cleveland, Ohio. It came from the northwest, and the wind blew 56 miles an hour. Yachts and small boats in the harbor had a rough time. A cat-boat was capsized and blown ashore. People tried to rescue the occupants of the boat, but were unable. They were drowned. The wind blew down the walls of the Academy of Music, which burned some time ago. At Dunkirk, Hardin County, the corn crop was practically destroyed by hail.

Judge Dean of Xenia, Ohio, has made an innovation in the matter of the appointment of a member of the Board of County School Examiners by naming Mrs. Elizabeth H. Carruthers to succeed Prof. E. B. She holds the office of Treasurer in that body.

KILLED BY FALLING WALLS.

Two Pittsburg Firemen Meet Under a Mass of Heated Brick.

Fire at Pittsburg caused the loss of $165,000 worth of property, injury to firemen and created a panic in the Seventh Avenue Hotel. Flames were discovered in the five-story building at Smithfield street, occupied by Edmundson & Perrine's furniture establishment. They gained such rapid headway that the building was a mass of flames before the engines reached the scene. In a short time the building was entirely destroyed. The fire originated from the explosion of a gas engine in the cellar. The building is T shape, running back from its Smithfield street front to a ten-foot alley in the rear, separating it from the Seventh Avenue Hotel, the extensions extending to Seventh avenue and Strawberry alley. The guests of the hotel, numbering 150, were nearly all at supper at the time the flames were seen pouring from the rear windows of Edmundson & Perrine's building. A small-sized panic ensued, and a grand rush was made for the exits. A portion of the rear wall of the furniture store fell into the alley, catching the firemen, one of whom—John Neelan—was badly hurt, but not seriously. After the fire had been subdued and the firemen were taking up their hose, the Strawberry alley wall of the Edmundson & Perrine building fell, burying under the debris two firemen, Zeke Glover and Harry Holt. Two boys who were watching the firemen work were also struck by the wall.

ROUTED BY WOMEN.

Foreigners Who Take Strikers' Places Attacked with Stones and Clubs.

The first attempt to start any of the coal mines in the Pittsburg district was made at the Champion mines of Robbins & Co., near McDonald, Pa., on the Panhandle Railway, Friday morning. Two carloads of foreigners, gathered up from about Pittsburg, were sent to the Champion mines about daylight and put to work loading slack into the cars. The miners heard of the arrival of the new men and 500 women marched on the mine. The new men were attacked with stones and clubs and driven from the cars. The women followed them up, and the foreigners, without resisting, fled to Noblestown. The mob then returned to McDonald and dumped the slack that had been loaded from the cars. They were met by 1,000 strikers, and headed by a band marched a short distance from the mine, where they encamped, watching for the return of the non-union miners. The company officials say they are determined to load the slack, and a conflict is expected if the new men are brought back to the mine.

SHORT CORN CROP.

Iowa Official Says Cold Rains Have Caused a Big Shrinkage.

Director J. R. Sage of the Iowa weather and crop service has returned from a trip over the State inspecting the corn crop. Ten days ago he became alarmed because of the cold weather and started out to make a personal investigation. He finds his worst fears realized. There will be a big shortage of Iowa corn, and unless warm weather comes, a partial crop failure. He finds the stand poor, and thinks at best that 600,000 acres will not be harvested. Under favorable conditions the Iowa crop will be 25 per cent short, and it may be only half a crop. The cold rains have been very discouraging. He estimates the total loss in the State at 50,000,000 bushels.

ELECTRIC CAR KILLS A BABY.

Fifteen-Months-Old Boy Thrown from His Buggy.

At Berwyn, Ill., a Cicero and Proviso electric car struck a baby carriage in which 15-months-old John Young was being wheeled by his nurse. By the force of the shock the child was thrown from the carriage far to the front of the car, and before the speed of the latter could be checked the wheels passed over the infant, completely severing the right foot and three toes of the left foot. The child died.

Savings of $1,000 Secured.

Three robbers tortured Louis Simons, a Chicago milk dealer, Sunday night until he revealed the hiding-place of his lifetime savings of $1,000. After securing the money the men forced a napkin down the unfortunate Simons' throat, then bound his hands and feet, and rolled him into a closet in his kitchen. Simons, who occupied the house alone—his wife is in the East visiting relatives—was asleep when the robbers entered his house. The first intimation he had that there was anybody in the room was the clasp of strong fingers about his throat and the weight of a man sitting astride his breast. He was admonished to keep still on pain of death by one of the men, who drew the sharp edge of a knife across his throat. While one of the men held Simons the other two looked for a rope. In a closet in the kitchen they found his wife's clothesline, and with it bound Simons' feet together and his hands behind his back. They then dragged him into the kitchen, where he was asked to reveal the hiding place of his money. Simons said he had no money, and one of the men suggested that they burn the soles of his feet until he was willing to tell where he had his savings hidden. Lighted matches were held to the bare soles of the bound man's feet until he was willing to tell where he had his savings hidden. Failing even by this means to secure information as to the hiding place of the money the men told Simons they would kill him. One placed a revolver at his ear and another touched his throat with the point of a knife, and told him they would give him two minutes to tell the location of his money. Simons weakened at this and told the men of money in the drawer of a washstand in a small paper box and in a shaving mug. As they were leaving the house one of the men rolled Simons into a closet, and, taking a table knife, forced the gag further down his throat.

Cupid Had to Get Out.

Near Holgate, O., fifteen armed tramps surprised and captured the farmhouse of John P. Williams the other evening. Miss Williams and Frank Collins were to have been married. The tramps drove the family and guests out, ate the bridal supper and ransacked the house. All valuables were taken, even the coat of Mr. Williams that contained the marriage license.

The Armour Packing Company at Kansas City is filling an order this week for forty cars of mess beef for shipment to Japan, for use by the Japanese army and navy. The shipment is perhaps the largest single beef order ever filled by a Kansas City house. It consists of 3,600 tierces of 350 pounds each, in all about 1,250,000 pounds.

Brick Was of Brass.

D. MacGregor, the manager of Molson's bank at Calgary, Que., has resigned his office in consequence of a swindle perpetrated upon him. It was the old gold-brick deal, and it worked to a charm, MacGregor paying $10,000 for a brick alleged to have come direct from the Klondyke.

Attacked by Pirates.

The British steamer Hegu was attacked by pirates off the coast of Achentakacnen, the captain and many of the crew and passengers killed and the vessel looted.

Cattle Barons' Plan.

News of a stupendous scheme to depopulate Clark County, Kansas, and convert its broad acres into a vast cattle ranch for the benefit of "Barbecue" Campbell and a few other cattle barons has reached Wichita. A few years ago Clark County was quickly settled, and in the boom times a majority of the settlers mortgaged their claims to the limit. Subsequently the greater part of the land passed into the hands of the mortgage holders and was voicelessly appropriated by a few big cattlemen and syndicates. The county is now entirely fenced into great pastures, no attention being paid to leaving out unoccupied claims, farms, government lands and school lands, but all being taken in and utilized for pasture by the big cattlemen. A meeting of all the cattlemen of the county was recently held at Ashland, the county seat, and an association was formed ostensibly for mutual protection, but in reality to prevent anybody from settling in the county. The constitution presented for adoption provided that the members of the association bind themselves to not permit any person to settle upon a claim or to purchase or lease any school land belonging to another person or any school land within any fenced pasture occupied by any member of the association. This unwarranted usurpation of power in the interest of the few big cattle barons met spirited opposition from the stockmen of small means who desire to see the county better settled and a riot resulted. Finally, a division of the house was called on a vote upon the constitution. Nine cattle barons stood up in favor and eleven stockmen voted against its provisions. The few settlers of Clark County are greatly excited over the question, which is still being agitated by the barons.

AVOID THE KLONDIKE.

Surveyor Ogilvie Advises Against Going to That Country.

In speaking of the Klondike gold fields, William Ogilvie, dominion surveyor for the Northwest Territory, discourages all strangers from going into that bleak country. He denies that any difference regarding the boundary line exists between Canada and the United States. He says: "Gold has been found in a certain zone in British Columbia, running through the Cariboo and Cassiar districts. Project the axis of this zone northwesterly, and we touch the Teslin Lake, Hootalinqua River, Stewart River, Indians Creek, Troandike, Sixty Mile, Forty Mile, American Creek, Seventy Mile and Birch Creek. Now it is highly improbable that gold being found at all these points, the intervening spaces are barren, and will do no more than say generally that we have a zone of upwards of 500 miles in length, some of it in Alaska, more of it in the Northwest Territory, and much of it in British Columbia, which will yet be the scene of numerous mining enterprises, both on the quartz and placer, the former practically inexhaustible. The conditions, however, are most unfavorable. There is a nine-months' winter, barrenness is almost total, so far as vegetation and food is concerned, the earth is bound in eternal frost, and the thermometer often reaches 60 and 70 degrees below zero."

HARD BLOWS FOR LUETGERT.

Mrs. Tosch Proves to Be a Very Effective Witness for Prosecution.

Mrs. Agatha Tosch, to whom Adolph Luetgert was wont to confide his business and marital troubles, took the stand for the prosecution when the famous murder case was resumed in Chicago Tuesday, and gave damaging testimony against the prisoner. According to her evidence, the day after Mrs. Luetgert disappeared Mrs. Tosch had a long conversation with the sausagemaker, who, she asserts, was pale and laboring under excitement he vainly endeavored to suppress. In the course of their talk she boldly told him she believed him guilty of making away with his wife and that he thereupon manifested much excitement and begged her to help him, as he was in great trouble. Mrs. Tosch dilated on Luetgert's disturbed condition of mind as much as the rules of evidence would permit and finally swore that the man, in the extremity of his distress, declared he was tempted to shoot himself and escape the trouble that hung over his head. Before she left the stand Mrs. Tosch also testified to the hatred felt by Luetgert for his wife and his significant threats to crush her.

PORTLAND IN PORT.

TREASURE STEAMER ARRIVES FROM THE GOLD REGION.

She Carried Thirteen Miners Who Bring About $575,000 in Dust and Nuggets — Earthquake in Japan Causes Loss of Life and Property.

Gold from Klondyke.

The long-looked for Portland has arrived. The ship about which so many stories have been told since she left St. Michael reached Seattle Sunday morning. The Portland carried thirteen miners, and the total amount of gold dust on board is about $575,000. The miners had brought only a small part of their stakes and the size of the Portland's cargo was disappointing.

The miners on board, with the amounts of their total mining profits, parts of which were brought with them, are as follows:

J. Rowan, $50,000; James Bell, $45,000; Joseph Goldsmith, $35,000; N. W. Powers, $35,000; W. W. Caldwell, $35,000; W. Oler, $30,000; C. K. Zilly, $25,000; F. W. Cobb, $25,000; W. Zahn, $15,000; A. Buckley, $10,000; M. S. Lansing, $15,000; B. W. Farnham, $10,000; M. R. Camler, $15,000.

While the small amount of gold brought from the Yukon by the Portland was a disappointment to many, the miners who returned unite in saying that the country is fabulously rich. The claims which have been worked promise well, and in fact many of them give assurance of proving very rich. All estimates of the amount of gold which will be taken out of the Yukon next year must necessarily be very rough, as there is no means of determining how much work will be done. If men could be secured to work the claims already located there would undoubtedly be many millions of dollars taken out, but the majority of men who go there prefer to prospect on their own account, notwithstanding the fact that high wages can be had.

Statements have been made that the steamer Portland on her next trip will bring fully $2,000,000 in gold, but the most reliable men from Dawson City say that no such amount of money will come, as it has not been taken out of the ground. One miner who came down places the outside figure at $1,000,000. El Dorado and Bonanza Creeks, where the richest strikes have been made, have been staked for many miles, but desirable claims are scarce, and the prospectors are beginning to scatter out.

Hundreds of miners are looking toward the Stewart river, the second largest branch of the Yukon, and hundreds of prospectors will undoubtedly be on its banks and bars within the next few months. Although the bars of the main river have been successfully worked for the last ten years, there has practically been no real prospecting done on the many important tributaries. Everywhere that the explorers and scattering prospectors have gone in the Stewart and its branches gold has been found. On many creeks the prospects were extra good. Several things have conspired to leave this field practically untouched. The question of getting supplies is a very serious one. At the same time the few hundred men who have been on the Yukon up to last year have found sufficiently attractive diggings nearer to the older districts and closer to supply bases. The Indians also have a superstition regarding a powerful and savage tribe who live on the upper part of the river and whom they call the "Mahonies" and consequently will not go up the river any great distance.

From the mouth of Stewart over to the north fork the distance is estimated at 450 miles, and to the head of this fork in the vicinity of 500 miles in all. The south fork is practically unexplored. One or two persons have been on it, and then not for a sufficient distance to determine its character or length. The prospectors and those who have been on the river say that it carries a larger volume of water than the Pelly river. It is beyond doubt the second largest feeder of the Yukon. The first gold discoveries on the Stewart were made in 1885 on bars within about 100 miles from the mouth. These were rich. During the fall, in less than fifty days' time, as high as $6,000 to the man was rocked out. In 1886 fully 100 men were working on the river bars with good success. Some went up the north fork nearly to its head. Each succeeding season the bars have been worked until now they do not pay wages.

EARTHQUAKES IN JAPAN.

Great Loss of Life and Property Is Reported.

A great earthquake occurred in Japan Aug. 15. It lasted eight minutes and was followed by a tidal wave which swept up rivers, following into the sea and caused great destruction. Up to Aug. 10 it was known in Yokohama that over 5,000 houses had been inundated or washed away. Between 100 and 300 people were known to be drowned or seriously injured. It was then too early to estimate the amount of damage done to railways, crops, roads, bridges and shipping. It was reported from Hosoku that coal mines there were flooded by an overflowing river, drowning over 100 miners.

Earthquake shocks on the morning of Aug. 5 varied from four to sixteen in number in various places, the movement being from east to west. Less than an hour afterward a tidal wave was felt in towns along the coast. For a week previously rains had fallen almost all the time and the rivers were already very high. The tidal wave raised them in so many minutes from twelve to twenty feet higher. The Governor of Nigata prefecture reports that the Arakawa rose twenty feet at Naoyetzu. Fifteen hundred houses were flooded and thirty people killed or injured. The waters rose so rapidly that over 600 people were afloat in their houses before they knew what had happened. These were all rescued with boats. Further down the same river twenty boats were swept away or wrecked and 2,000 filled with water. Nearly 700 houses were wrecked and inundated in other towns

At Omagari one-third of the city is under water and the rice fields all along Omono river are flooded. Bridges and embankments were swept away by the score.

Reports from province of Bikuzen state immense waves rolled in forty-five minutes after the earthquake and flooded eight fishing villages. All official buildings and the railway station at Naoyedzu were flooded. Nine railway officials were carried down stream to sea in their houses. A steamer rescued them, but many smaller boats were swept away.

Beautiful Cuban Girl May Be Sentenced to Long Years in Prison.

Gen. Weyler's determination to make war upon women and children as well as Cuban patriots bore fruit in the prosecution of the beautiful Evangelina Cisneros, whose only crime lies in being a niece of President Cisneros, the rebel chief. The trial in Havana has attracted great interest and even the loyal Spanish residents profess pity for this persecuted girl whose very life is in danger at the hands of the bloodthirsty tyrant. For months she has been subjected to the cruelties of a Spanish military prison in the Casa de Recojidas, at Havana.

The crown prosecutor, in his harangue before the military court, demanded that the terrified girl be sentenced for twenty years to the galleys in Ceuta, a place famed for its horrors. Cueta is one of the penal colonies on the North African coast, where already hundreds of Cuban patriots have entered upon a living.

WORLD'S HARVEST SHORT.

Annual Estimate Furnished by Hungarian Authorities.

The Hungarian Ministry of Agriculture has issued its annual estimates, in which it describes the world's harvest as extraordinary light. The total yield of wheat is placed at 573,760,000 metric hundred-weights, while the present annual requirements are estimated at 655,150,000 metric hundredweights.

It is calculated that for 1897 and 1898 there will be a shortage of 50,800,000 hundredweight. The stocks remaining on hand from 1896 are approximately estimated at somewhere between 38,000,000 and 45,000,000. The total supply for the year, reckoning both the present stocks and the harvest, is estimated from 610,000,000 to 651,000,000 metric hundredweights.

In Autumn.

Let us sing of the sheaves, when the summer is done,
And the garners are stored with the gifts of the sun.
Shouting home from the fields, like the voice of the sea,
Let us join with the reapers in glad jubilee—
Harvest home!

For the smile of the sunshine, again and again,
For the dew on the garden, the showers on the plain,
For the year, with its hope and its promise that ends,
Crowned with plenty and peace, let thanksgiving ascend,
Harvest home!

We shall gather a harvest of glory we know,
From the furrows of life where in patience we sow.
Buried love in the field of the heart never dies,
And its seed scattered here will be sheaves in the skies.
Harvest home!

The Lie Joe Told.

Down in the southern part of Baylor County, Texas, you may still hear old settlers make occasional references to the Savages, or the Savage brothers, as they sometimes call them. This does not refer to the time when the Indians were in the country, although that time is by no means so far distant as to be beyond the memory of living man; nor does it imply anything especially wild and ferocious about the character of the men in question. It merely goes back to the first half of the '80s, when two brothers of that name were among the prominent inhabitants of that sparsely settled district. In some countries events of that period would be considered comparatively modern, but in Western Texas they are ranked as strictly ancient history.

It seems, from a careful survey of the facts in the case, that neither of the brothers was really a bad man at heart, notwithstanding the fact that a great many people who ought to know are strongly inclined to think otherwise. It is certain that one of them was as true a man as ever trod the soil of Texas, or any other state for that matter. All who knew him agree that the final year of his life, at any rate, was a year of such courage and self-sacrificing heroism as one reads of in books but seldom looks for in real life. The people of West Texas are not much prone to hero worship, and whenever they agree that a man of their acquaintance is above the average of mortality there is very likely to be some basis for the belief. Judging merely from physical appearance one would have had little trouble in deciding which of the two men would have been more likely to prove of heroic mold. Bill, the younger, was a man of magnificent physique, not unduly large, but with muscles of such herculean strength as perfect health and the free life of a Western cowboy are apt to impart. He was light-complexioned, and is said to have possessed a vigorous, manly countenance, such as ought to have made him more successful in his love affairs than he really was. Joe, on the other hand, was as much a picture of weakness and deformity as his brother was of health and strength. He was not only a peaked-faced, slender slip of a man, but he was a cripple as well. When he was 5 years old and Bill only 3, a cyclone had struck the log house in which the boys and their parents were living.

The mother and father were killed, but when the neighbors came to look through the ruins of the cabin they found Joe crouched on the bed with his limbs spread out in such a manner as to protect his baby brother. A heavy log had fallen across his right foot and right wrist, crushing them both very badly, but Bill was still sleeping in absolute unconsciousness of the existence of any such disturbing affairs as cyclones. As a result of his injuries at the time Joe was club-footed through the whole of his life, and his right forearm had a big knot on it, and a crook that made his right hand turn out when it should have turned in. It is said that Joe was proud of his deformities rather than otherwise, presumably because they had been incurred in the defence of his baby brother, and that Bill was, for the most part, tenderly regardful of the brother who had sacrificed health and almost life for him.

Naturally enough, Bill was the more prosperous of the two. Before he was 30 he owned a considerable "bunch" of cattle, and leased quite a body of land in the eastern part of Baylor county as a ranch. Joe was his line rider, and in that capacity was enabled to do a great deal of such work as did not require any great amount of mere muscular strength. Everything worked smoothly with them until May Conley came to live with a married brother of hers who lived only a few miles from the Savage ranch. She was not a highly educated girl, by any means, and it is doubtful if she was more than fairly intelligent, but she was pretty, and she was fickle—and that tells the whole story. In this case Joe was the first victim. He met May at one of the big camp meetings that are common in that country in the fall of the year, and after that he was very pronounced in his attentions to her for several months. Then his attentions ceased as suddenly and abruptly as they had begun. People noticed this, and they also noticed that just about that time Bill began going to see her.

"Bill took it up just where Joe laid in down," remarked one cowboy to another during one of the intervals in a dance on one occasion.

"Naw, that ain't it," responded his friend. "I think Joe laid it down just where Bill took it up."

One day as the two brothers and one or two others were engaged in branding some of Bill's yearlings the subject was brought up.

"Sure enough, Joe, whatever made you quit goin' to see that Conley gal so sudden?" asked Jim Smith, one of the helpers, in a jocular way.

"I stopped so's to give Bill a chance," said Joe, with what was evidently a forced attempt at gayety.

"Shucks!" ejaculated his brother. "You needn't a stopped for that. If I couldn't beat you I'd better quit."

There was just the least bit of contemptuous emphasis on that word "you," and Joe noticed it. A slightly shamed, pained look came over his poor, thin face as he faltered:

"W—well, I didn't keer much for her, no way. I was just a foolin' from the first."

My deliberate opinion is that this statement was a lie. It is my opinion, furthermore, that in this single, ungrammatical, mispronounced, mutilated lie there was a loftiness of thought and purity of purpose such as an angel in heaven might well aspire to. Bill did not take any such view of the matter, though, for he only looked up and retorted angrily:

"My opinion of anybody that would go foolin' 'round a woman when he didn't care nothing for her is that he ain't much of a man."

"He's pretty small potatoes—he shore is," put in Tom Jackson, the fourth man at the branding. Nobody noticed the remark particularly at the time, but subsequent events caused them to think a great deal about it later on.

"I'm surprised at you, Joe," said Bill.

The ghost of a forced smile hovered piteously on Joe's lips for a moment, but he merely rubbed his forehead with the knot on his wrist in the nervous way peculiar to him on such occasions, and said nothing.

Aside from one or two little incidents like this—which are hardly worth counting as exceptions—Bill's courtship was an illustration of the fact that, notwithstanding a certain very eminent authority to the contrary, the course of true love does occasionally run smooth—for a while. In this case it ran smooth down to the very day set for the wedding. The ceremony was to be performed at what was known as Plum Creek school house, and early in the morning Bill went with a number of his friends to get ready for the festivities.

The ceremony was to take place at 10 o'clock. Perhaps a half an hour before that time Joe and his friend, Jim Smith, were riding through the timber which always abounds around creek bottoms in Texas, and were much astonished when, at a sudden bend in the trail, they came across the supposed prospective bride. She was on horseback and unaccompanied.

"Hello!" exclaimed Joe in supprise. "Are you lost?"

"Yes," answered May with a nervous laugh. "I never was as glad to see anybody in my life. This here creek bottom timber's so thick a wild cat would mighty nigh get lost in it, let alone a woman."

"I should think that you and Bill had been to Plumb Creek school-house often enough to know the way by this time?"

"I ain't a going' to Plum Crick," said May, with a foolish giggle.

"What! ain't you goin' to get married?"

"Yes."

"Well, Bill's at the school house now, waitin' for ye."

May tossed her head and then giggled again.

"I ain't a waitin' for him none," she said. "I might as well tell you now as any time. I'm goin' to be married to Tom Jackson this morning at Round Timber. I've lost my way there, and I want you to tell me how to go."

At the mention of Jackson's name Joe's face hardened for a moment. He was the man who had been so quick to take Bill's part in the quarrel with his brother. Then Joe began to reason with May as to her conduct, but a very few moments sufficed to show him the futility of the attempt. Promptly changing his plans he gave her a detailed account of the way to Round Timbers.

"Say!" interrupted Jim Smith, who had listened in profound astonishment to the whole conversation, "you're mistaken about—"

"No, I ain't," retorted Joe. "The trail's been changed lately. That's all right, May. Come on Jim."

"I still think you were mistaken about that trail," said Jim, as the two men rode on together.

"No, I wasn't mistaken," said Joe. "I just lied—that was all. I did it for Bill's sake. If May goes the way I sent her she'll not get to Round Timbers this morning."

After they had ridden a few moments in silence Joe began again.

"Jim, old fellow, for God's sake don't let on that you've seen nor heard nothing this morning. It'll be plenty tough on Bill, anyway."

"I shore won't," said Jim.

There was quite a crowd assembled around the door of the little log school house when these two men rode up. The groom was there, and so was the preacher; so also were the people. The house was decorated within and without with flowers and leaves and other ornaments more or less appropriate to the occasion. However, there was one ornament generally considered necessary on wedding occasions which was still missing—namely, the bride.

"Seen anything of May lately?" asked Bill, stepping to the front as the new comers rode up. There was just a trace of anxiety in his voice as he spoke.

"Naw," answered Joe promptly. His face looked perfectly unconcerned as he spoke, but in a very few moments a cloud began to rest upon it. I suspect, though, that instead of grieving over the lie he had told—as of course he should have been—he was merely wondering how he might spare Bill the mortification which a public discovery of the real facts in regard to May might occasion. He was now sitting with one leg thrown over the horn of his saddle. Suddenly his face lighted up with its old sickly smile, and in a voice that trembled a little in spite of the bravado he tried to throw into it, he began:

"Say, Bill, that was a lie I told you about May just now. I saw her not half an hour ago."

"You did, did you? When will she be here?"

"She won't be here at all."

Bill's face grew stern and white.

"Why won't she?" he demanded.

"Because I directed her in the wrong road. Jim tried to tell her right and I wouldn't let him. Ain't that so, Jim?"

Jim nodded grimly. With faces that now began to grow drawn and anxious, the spectators glanced from one speaker to the other in turn. Bill's face was fairly livid with rage, and his voice trembled with the awfulness of repressed fury as he asked the next question:

"What did you do it for?"

The expectant silence that followed was deathlike, but even then Joe's voice was hardly audible as he answered with the same sickly smile hovering about his lips:

"Because I uster court her myself and you cut me out!"

Before the words were fairly out of his mouth Bill sprang at him with the fury of a wild beast. With all the force of his mighty arm he struck and the blow descended upon the arm—the crippled, knotted arm—which Joe had interposed to ward it off. Some say it fell upon the very knot itself. He fell from his pony as if he had been shot, and lay for several moments on the turf where he had fallen.

"Which way did you send her?" asked Bill, in the same awful tones he had used before.

"I won't tell," gasped Joe.

"Then get up off that ground."

Joe meekly obeyed.

"Get on your pony—I see it's got away from you. Then saddle up mine yonder and go after May and bring her back at once, sir! Do you hear?"

Joe meekly took the huge Texas saddle in his left hand and carried it to where the pony stood grazing, tied by a long rope to a tree. His right arm hung limp by his side. After some ineffectual efforts to throw the saddle on with his left arm, he gave up the attempt.

"I can't get the thing on," he said.

"Use your right arm, sir!" called his brother.

"I think you've broke his lame arm, Bill," said Jim Smith.

"It's a lie!" shouted Joe, "that arm 's as good as ever it was."

To prove the truth of this assertion, he made a mighty effort and managed to lift his arm to his shoulder, though the wrist still dangled loosely from his elbow. Even then he could not restrain his face from wincing and his teeth from clinching with the pain. Dropping the saddle, he turned abruptly and limped off into the woods without a word.

Jim Smith afterward said that only his solemn promise to Joe kept him from telling the whole truth at this juncture just as he knew it to be, and that he had to grit his teeth hard and say cuss words under his breath to do it then. As to the rest of the crowd, it must be remembered that they knew nothing but Joe's own statement about the matter, and that consequently they all sympathized with Bill. After some moments of condolence and consultation with the crowd, Bill, with some four or five others, started out to find Joe.

"Get that rope off your saddle there and bring it along," said he to one of them.

"You ain't goin' to string him up, are you, Bill?" was the rather anxious reply.

"No; just want to skeer him a little. Come on."

In a very short time they found the man they were looking for.

"Are you ready to tell where May is or to go after her?" Bill demanded.

"N-no," faltered Joe, with a distrustful glance at the little group of attendants.

Again his brother sprang at him. This time he threw him to the ground and held him there with his grasp firm upon his throat.

"Don't Bill, old fellow, for God's sake," gasped Joe, as his brother somewhat relaxed the grip on his throat, "I didn't mean to harm by it—honest I didn't. I won't do it no more. What are you going to do with that rope, Bill? You're not going to kill your poor, no-account brother, are you, old boy?"

Without a word Bill and his attendants continued wrapping the rope around Joe. Then they stood him up beside a tree and tied him to it so that his club foot touched the ground, while the other, the strong one, was doubled back in the coil of rope.

"Now, you ungrateful whelp," said Bill, as he started to leave, "I'll be back in thirty minutes to see if you're ready to tell me."

"Didn't he kiss your hand while you was tying him?" asked some one as they walked away.

"Dogged if I know," said Bill. "Did he?"

Hardly had they left when Jim Smith came up and at once began to untie the ropes.

"Don't!" said Joe. "Bill will be back in a few minutes. Just unslip this loop here. Thank you! The strain was on my right arm and it hurt because it was sore. Jim, this is hard—but I guess I can stand it, for Bill's sake. I ain't hurtin' so much now, though, as I was. It's mostly all a joke. Bill was allers a powerful fellow to joke. I wisht you'd go tell him when he comes back I say please not to bring anybody else with him."

At the appointed time Bill saddled his pony and rode off to where Joe was.

"I'll take the hoss, so that if Joe's ready by now he can start out after May and bring her back. I rather guess he's ready by now, too. Maybe we'll get to eat a wedding dinner today yet—only a little late, of course."

After some time had elapsed and neither brother had "showed up," as the phrase goes in Texas, Jim Smith walked to the place where he had left Joe. There the poor fellow was, still tied to the tree—but dead! The thirty minutes' strain had been too much for his crippled leg to bear and it had gradually given way, and this had allowed the poor fellow to choke to death. Of course, Jim lost no time in rousing the quasi wedding guests and in telling the real facts about May. It is not the first instance in the history of the world when a man has had the truth told about him too late to do him any good. A pursuing party was out after Bill at once, but all to no avail. Some say he committed suicide shortly afterward in San Antonio; others, that he is still alive in New Mexico; still others, that he is to-day in the insane asylum at Terrell. I do not know what the truth about it is. Mr. and Mrs. Tom Jackson still live in Cattle County, Texas. Jim Smith is the man who first told me this story. Joe Savage is buried on the banks of Plum Creek, and on his wooden headboard you can still decipher the inscription: "He Loved Mutch."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

sold but little, and is so many times a millionaire that his wealth cannot be estimated. He is the Barnato of Alaska, the man who struck it rich, and knowing a good thing when he saw it, held on to it. It is only another tale of South African luck, but much nearer home—enviously near.

At present, if you want to get to Alaska and become a Barnato, there are two ways of going. One is by sea and the other is overland. If you take the sea route you can start by steamship from Seattle, and, crossing the Gulf of Alaska, touch first at Unalaska, passing through the Aleutian Islands. From there the route lies directly north, getting colder and colder every minute. Here you will need all the Arctic wraps you have brought with you. The ship's fare will be warm, nourishing food—cereals, chocolate, meats and spices. But for all that you will need fur overcoats, fur hoods, blanket wraps, woolen mittens and big, warm, fur-lined bags in which to sleep. For one going from a very warm city into this region the change is so great and so sudden that there is sure to be great suffering, and many of the would-be Barnatos turn back.

The steamship stops at St. Michael's; and here, within sight of Bering sea, almost within hailing distance of the Bering strait, you leave the steamship and start inland to search for gold.

The Barnatos have nearly all followed the Yukon. It leads into Klondyke, and one of its tributaries is the Klondyke River. Dawson, Joseph Ladue

JACK M'QUESTEN.
"The Father of the Yukon."

Barnato's town, is on the Yukon; and Circle City, another rich spot, lies on its banks. Land is for sale here very cheap. Or you can do as many prospectors have done—start in hunting for gold without making too many inquiries. The find is so sudden that there is no sharp line drawn between that which is sold and that which belongs to the United States, and a man is free to hunt where he will. For your own comfort, however, it is well to have some definite arrangement made with the nearest authorities, so as to avoid trouble in case of a rich find.

Another way to reach the gold fields is by the overland route. Many journey this way in wagons, as they went to "Pike's Peak or Bust" years ago. The route begins at Seattle and follows the coast north past Sitka, past Juneau and through the Chilcoe pass, and so north through the gold fields to Dawson. The "finds" here are rich, and when Klondyke is reached, on the other side of Dawson, a man finds himself in the very middle of the gold country. The distance to be traversed is great and the journey is a long, hard one, but, notwithstanding this, thousands are struggling Alaska-wards.

It cost Ladue nothing to become a Barnato. But those who want to follow in his footsteps will need something like $1,000 in money. The country is more thickly populated now and prices have gone up, whereas they used to be next to nothing. At Circle City you must now pay $40 for a fur coat when you used to get one for $5. And flour, sugar and spices, the absolute necessities, have advanced 50 per cent. The luxuries—tea, coffee, eggs and butter—are bringing fancy prices, so that a man now needs ten times the sum required a year ago for traveling through the settlements of Alaska.

It is certainly true that better "finds" are being made in American territory than in British Columbia. Four hundred miles southeast of Dawson, on the Pelli river, there has been a "find" located that is richer than any yet discovered. Prospectors say that as soon as attention is called towards the American side of the gold field line and working upon it becomes general there will be gold mined there in greater quantities than has ever been found on the British side of the Klondyke fields.

The way to travel to Alaska is in parties of four. These can easily be accommodated in one room, and can travel in one small conveyance. One of the party should be a practical chemist, or understand the compiling of drugs, and one should be able to sew. A woman is of the utmost assistance, but few of the sex have ventured out. In the baggage which the four carry should be pieces of tanned skins, shoe leather, flannel and wool, everything for repairing the Alaskan wearing apparel. One of the number should be able to cook and the fourth should understand the art of putting up a quick shelter. All should be willing and ready to share and share alike in hardship.

One of the hardest things the prospector has to endure is the sight of the sacks of gold dust that are being shipped from every seaport and the tons of ore that are being sent down from St. Michael's and south from Juneau. In one day there came advices from St. Michael's that $1,400,000 worth of gold dust would be shipped by the Wells-Fargo south, and that $768,000 in dust was awaiting transportation. In one day there came down on the Puget Sound steamship $200,000 in Alaska gold.

Ladue was one of the first to strike the Yukon region, rich in gold. He settled Dawson City and built a sawmill. However, he found it difficult to get men to work for him at $15 a day. He has made a fortune out of the mines and will return to Dawson in the spring with his wife.

PRINCESS OF THE KAFFIRS.

Barney Barnato's Little Daughter Who Will Inherit Millions.

Barney Barnato left a little "princess of the Kaffirs" to inherit his great wealth. If the noted financier and promoter really possessed all the money he was said to have been worth this little lady will come into one of the biggest private fortunes in the world. Barney left another and an elder child, if Mrs. W. W. Blackman, of Cleveland, is right in her claim, for she says that she, too, is the daughter of the diamond king of Africa. Mrs. Blackman's mother has gone to England to contest Barnato's will. The mother is a Russian, and she says that Barnato married her in Russia twenty-seven years ago. The Kaffir king was known at that time as Barney Brolobjitschy, and he disappeared in a most mysterious manner many years ago. Mrs. Blackman says that, although she was very young when her father disappeared, she remembers him very well and readily recognizes him from his latest photographs. Her mother is now at work with her lawyers in England, making arrangements to go into court and contest the will, in which Barnato left the bulk of his hundreds of millions to his widow and his little daughter. The case promises a big fight.

Kind Forbearance.

Frederick Walker, who did such beautiful work in art, and who died so young that all the great promise in him could not be disclosed, began his drawings for the Cornhill Magazine by an interview with Thackeray, wherein he was much agitated, and the great writer proved correspondingly kind.

Walker had an exceeding reverence for Thackeray, and greatly dreaded an interview with him.

"Bring him here," Thackeray had said, "and we shall soon see whether he can draw."

So, early one morning, the young man was taken to the author's house in Onslow Square. The drive was a silent one, for the artist became every instant more agitated and distressed. This Thackeray noticed at once, and did his best to set him at ease.

"Can you draw?" he asked, after a little general conversation. "Mr. Smith says you can."

"Y-e-es, I think so," stammered Walker.

"I'm going to shave," said Mr. Thackeray. "Would you mind drawing my back?"

So he turned about, and Walker made a most excellent likeness of him in that position. If the lion had faced him, subjecting him to the ordeal of scrutiny, it was probable that he could not have worked at all. Doubtless Thackeray knew this, and so took his delicate precaution.

Hands Off!

In connection with the recent death of Blondin, the greatest of funambulists, it is recalled that President Lincoln once made use of him for one of his characteristically apt illustrations. To a fault-finding delegation that visited him, Mr. Lincoln said:

Gentlemen, suppose all the property you were worth was in gold, and you had put it into the hands of Blondin to carry across Niagara Falls on a rope; would you shake the cable, or keep shouting out to him, "Blondin, stand up a little straighter! Blondin, stoop a little more; go a little faster; lean more to the south?" No, you would hold your breath, as well as your tongue, and keep your hands off until he was safe over.

LABOR LEADERS MEET.

Conference in Aid of Miners Is Held in St. Louis.

In a speech at the conference of labor leaders in St. Louis M. D. Ratchford, president of the United Mine Workers of America, advocated a great sympathetic strike of all branches of organized labor unless Congress met at once and gave the laborers relief and wiped out the laws which empowered the judiciary "to conduct government by injunction."

The forces of labor met at Masonic Temple at 10 o'clock Monday morning. H. W. Steinbiss, secretary of the Trades and Labor Union, occupied the chair. No business was done at this session, a recess being taken until 11 o'clock. About 200 men composed the convention. At 11 o'clock Sheridan Webster nominated W. B. Prescott, president of the International Typographical Union, for temporary chairman. His election was unanimously adopted and was greeted with applause. Chairman Prescott then appointed a committee composed of M. D. Ratchford, James O'Connell, Grant Luce, J. R. Sovereign and W. D. Mahon.

The Committee on Credentials made its report immediately upon the assembling of the conference for its afternoon session. It was shown that eighty-eight delegates, representing the following organizations, were represented: United Mine Workers of America, the Social Democracy, the American Federation of Labor, the Stonemakers International Union, Brotherhood of Painters and Decorators, Brotherhood of Bottle-Blowers, Building Trades Council of St. Louis, the Patriots of America, International Brotherhood of Track Foremen, the Single-Tax League of America, Central Labor Council of Cincinnati, the International Typographical Union, the People's party of Kansas and the Industrial Order of Freedmen.

Mr. Ratchford took the floor and went over the miners' strike from its inception to the present day, dwelling particularly upon "government by injunction." He pleaded for prompt action, and, coming to the point of his argument, advocated a special session of Congress as the best and in fact the only relief. "In case of a refusal to convene Congress," said Mr. Ratchford, "it will then be time to consider more extreme measures. I am in favor, if the President refuses to call Congress together, of a complete paralysis of business. I believe then in a sympathetic strike."

Patrick O'Neill of Rich Hill, Mo., who said he represented 1,500 unorganized "picks," favored a labor revolution. He was a Socialist, he said, and believed in the miners taking things in their own hands if necessary. Mr. Sovereign put himself on record as opposed to Mr. Ratchford's plan. He believed that the crucial test now confronted organized labor. Mr. Mahon of Detroit said a resolutions committee was useless. The convention should vote on Ratchford's porposition, and then go home. The power of the nation, he said, was in the courts, and if anybody was to be convened let it be the courts. He was oposed to Mr. Ratchford's proposition. James M. Carson, president of the Illinois miners, then recited at great length the conditions confronting the miners of his State, and said he believed his men would be beaten in two weeks.

Mr. Ratchford took exception to Mr. Carson's statement that the Illinois miners had lost their strike. He said the miners were winning their strike, and, furthermore, his men were not asking this convention for aid.

At 5 o'clock the convention adjourned until Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock.

KILLED FROM AMBUSH.

Arizona Moonshiners Waylay a Posse of United States Deputies.

Six men were probably massacred in the wilds of the mountains of Pope County, Ark. Two were killed outright, two were fatally wounded and left for dead and two have mysteriously disappeared and are either dead or being held captive by the bloodthirsty bandits who committed the awful crime.

The victims were all officers, United States deputy marshals and deputy sheriffs, and the men who did the awful work of carnage are moonshiners of the boldest and most desperate class. The scene of the bloody crime was a gulch or ravine in the mountains of Pope County at an isolated spot thirty-five miles from Russellville, the nearest telegraph office, and ten miles from Will Springs. The region has for years been the favorite rendezvous for counterfeiters and moonshiners and a district in which no lawabiding citizen could live.

Marshal Taylor, with his posse, located a large moonshine outfit Saturday night and decided to make the raid Sunday in daylight. Proceeding slightly in advance of his men, Taylor was within thirty feet of the distillery when he was suddenly fired upon from ambush and instantly killed. As Dodson ran up to Taylor he was also shot dead in his tracks. Rifles began to crack in all directions and a terrific volley was fired into the officers. Two fell mortally wounded and lay by the roadside until later in the day, when a traveler named Pack chanced by. All traces of the bandits had disappeared, as well as two of the deputy sheriffs.

The United States marshal will make a determined effort to capture the murderers.

BIG HAUL OF GRAIN.

Railroads Bring Chicago Over 5,000 Cars in One Day.

The roads running to Chicago from the West and Northwest are doing the largest business they have ever done before at this season of the year. Monday was a record-breaker. Over 5,000 carloads of grain were brought in by the Western roads. This means over 100,000 tons of grain in one day, or more than three times as much as the ten east-bound roads took from the city during the whole of last week. Of the above mentioned 5,000 carloads of grain, 3,500 carloads were corn. The Burlington brought in 1,100 cars and the Rock Island over 900 cars, and they ran short of rolling stock.

While the lake lines took out of Chicago last week nearly 200,000 tons of freight—the largest amount on record—the Chicago east-bound roads are carrying no more through freight than they did at this time last year. The reason is the rates charged by the railroads are higher than the traffic will bear.

Total shipments of flour, grain, and provisions from Chicago through to seaboard points and for export by the ten east-bound roads last week amounted to 44,340 tons, against 40,153 tons for the week previous and 41,117 tons for the corresponding week last year. Flour shipments last week were 2,510 tons, against 5,828 tons last year; grain, 30,488 tons, against 20,851 tons; provisions, 11,351 tons, against 14,938 tons.

Common School Graduation

I have been asked a number of times concerning the origin and the beginning of the common school graduation in DeKalb county. In reply to these inquiries and a communication lately received I make the following general statement: In my first county school manual issued in 1883, under the heading of "Graduation and Diplomas." I said, "A committee was appointed at the county superintendents' convention in June 1883, consisting of five county superintendents and one member of the state board of Education with the state superintendent as chairman to prepare a list of questions on the eight 'common branches' to be furnished the county superintendents for examination of graduates from the district schools. It was further decided that diplomas be granted to pupils who shall attain an average of 75 per cent., and not fall below 60 per cent in any branch."

"All pupils who attain the required grades shall then meet on a stated evening when the diplomas shall be granted. There shall be a program of appropriate exercises arranged for these commencements to be given by pupils, teachers, etc." The first year after the publishing of the manual and the attempt at grading the schools, 1884, there were no regular graduates. Newville had exercises and diplomas were granted to three applicants. As the pupils did not pass upon the regular state questions and the papers were not graded by the superintendent no official record was ever made of these exercises or diplomas. The first regular examinations were held in the spring of 1885, under instructions sent out from the office of the county superintendent. The town of Butler had a class of ten pupils who graduated from the common school course May 29, 1885, Prof. T. J. Sanders was the teacher. The first regular graduation exercises of the country schools of the county took place at the M. E. church in Spencerville, Concord township, June 12, 1885. There were three graduates all from Dist. No. 10,—Alda Shutt, Willis Carey and Geo. Smith, Miss Laura A Shutt was the teacher. Fairfield township followed the next evening, June 13, with three graduates all from No. 3. The graduates were Walter D. Smith, David S. Gardner and Clarence E. Gardner with Miss Anna D. Ramsey as their teacher. Keyser township held the only other exercises of the year, graduating Harry E. Bruce. From these small beginnings in 1885, the interest in grading and classifying the pupils in the schools, and of graduating pupils from the common school course, has increased until every township in the county has furnished some graduates, as have also the incorporated towns of Butler, Garrett, Auburn and Ashley, the county this year issuing one hundred and fifty-five common school diplomas.

CARNIVAL

The "Carnival"—a festivity, parades and amusments is, in its various forms, becoming an important part of the life of many Western cities, New Orleans and St. Louis have led with their Mardi Gras and Veiled Prohphet festivities. Chicago will hold a Carnival next year. A flower carnival recently held at Colorado Springs was a grand success.

An annual event of this character not only advertises the town and helps every man doing business in it, but the amusement adds life and enterprise to a community supporting it. Every individual and organization can afford to sacrifice time and money in the aid of such an event.

A Carnival, a time when visitors are welcomed, business is laid aside, amusement and a free spirit of festivity reigns and the joyous throngs are satisfied, pleased and educated to appreciate the beautiful and strange.

Auburn should feel proud of her coming Carnival. The event is attracting attention all over the country. The amusements, the grand pageant and other parades will be novel and intensley interesting.

There will be none of the features of a street fair and the Carnival should not be confounded with such events. Sept. 22, 23 and 24. We wait im patiently,

BUTLER.

The possible move of the Lake Shore to make changes that would result in favor of Butler is again being discussed and a strong undercurrent is flowing in that direction. Certain moves already made point strongly that way. The eastern divisions, from Cleveland to Erie, and Erie to Buffalo have been consolidated and one division now is operated where two have formerly been operated. This is a large saving in expense. Now it only remains for the Company to drop out Elkhart, make the run from Cleveland to Butler, and Butler to Chicago to complete the change. Railroad men at Toledo think this will be the next move by this great company and if so Butler would become the principal town between Toledo and Chicago, as Elkhart now is.

The writer and son are enjoying a little holiday in the way of a wheel ride. We left Butler Friday morning Sept. 3 and run to Napoleon, Ohio, over excellent roads. The Henry Co. fair was on but it was its last dav. We rode into the grounds at 5 p. m. and found many thousands of people still lingering there. The fair had been a grand success over 7000 tickets had been sold the day before. The booths out numbered any county I had ever attended. On Saturday morning, we started down the Historic Maumee, for Toledo, our route lay along the east bank close to the river nearly all the way, passing many fine barns with splendid buildings and many resorts for pleasure seekers on its wooded sloping banks. We passed old Fort Meigs, where the earth works are yet plainly apparent, but the government seems slow in making promised improvements to note the place of burial of a large number of its defenders against the inroads of the savages. This point is situated between Maumee and Perrysburg, and ten miles from Toledo, but both are on the electric belt line of street cars—as are also Bowling Gceen about ten miles more distant. A small break in my saddle made the last twenty miles of my trip somewhat unpleasant. We reached Toledo in good time, and found the place somewhat quiet. Sabbaths in cities are always quiet, so Sabbath here was not an exception. As I write (Monday morning) the forces are gathering from all quarters for Labor Day, which promises to be a red letter day in the city's history. Our future route is not fully mapped, so we are yet in doubt about it.

Thought It Was Old Nick.

David Hull is a Spencerville lad living with his grandmother. Now, Davie ought to be quite a man, but he is still a boy although sixteen or eighteen years old. He seemed to stop growing years ago and this left him a little sawed sort of a chap, with the size and disposition of a child. And little Davie was a little inclined to be tough and wayward. He liked to go off on his own hook almost any time, and especially evenings when he should be at home and in good company. But these evening rambles were Davie's especial weakness and caused his grandmother a world of worry. It was in vain the talked, counseled and scolded, Davie would sneak off and not return till a late hour. She had tried to scare him, telling him that some of these dark night "Old Nick" would appear and carry him off. But Davie didn't believe his grandmother knew as much about Old Nick as he was determined to known. So, he kept on, and on, and on. One night last week, however, Davie took a long twilight stroll, as usual. In fact he prolonged his excursion among the town lads, etc, till a about nine o'clock he happened to cast his eyes up to the calm evening sky, and he fairly jumped with astonishment. There, where he had alseen the old constellations that were arranged for "when the morning stars sang together," and which since he could remember had been sweetly reflected in the placid bosom of the conservative old St. Joe, But now not so. A fierce white light was dashto and fro in the firmament, sending streaks of light here and there, now lighning up the tail of "Ursa Major," now dashing across the heavens and illuminating the "Southern Cross," and anon pouring out a fiery light in the place where it could best melt the buckle on the "Belt of Orion," then again across to the side, as if hunting for the "Lost Pleiad" where once we are told there had been "Seven Stars." It was wonderful. It was terrible. The boy's eyes bulged out. His knees trembled, and what was still more unusual his conscience smote him, and the many words of advice and warning given by his old grandmother came back to him like good angels on a delayed message of hope and mercy. He resolved to turn over a new leaf at once. And in fact he turned over several new leaves and a few accidental summersaults as he wildly tore for home. A quarter of a mile of wild flight brought him, breathless and exhausted to his grandmother's door, and as he burst into the room and told his tale of horror, a new light gleamed in the old lady's eyes." "Didu't I tell you so, Davie? Didn't I tell you the Devil would get you, if you kept on in your wild ways?" And Davie said she was right. He remembered every word of the kind she had ever said, and owned up like a little man. And since that day, you can't get little Davie out at night, any more than you could have got Tam O'Shanter t watch the witches in Old Kirk Alloway, at their midnight dances. The Auburn search light has made a man of Davie, for that was dreadful sky spirit he had seen.

Chicago's New Stock Company

At the Schiller theatre in this city "Fort Frayne," an American play, dramatized from a successful American novel by two American playwrights, was presented for the first time Monday night Sept. 6, and won from the local dramatic critics a unanimous verdict of approval.

For many reasons this event in the local theatrical world is noteworthy. It is especially pleasing because it introduces to Chicago a new permanent Stock Company, which for general excellence compares favorably with the best organizations of that kind in this country. Such a company will do much to make Chicago a producing center. It will also open to native dramatists a new market for their wares, and will guarantee and adequate production of any play that is staged by it.

Many who have been watching this Schiller experiment have predicted that its success will be the signal for a return to the high-class stack regime of former days. Whether it shall have this effect or not, there can be no doubt that it is destined to exert a powerful influene upon thericals in Chicago and throughout the west. The acquisition of such an organization as apermanent institution here furnishes good ground for congratulation. That it has begun its career so successfully augurs well far its future.

The Bridge Letting

This matter was all settled on Saturday as far as the Board of county commissioners is concerned. The following are the bids:

FOR THE BRIDGE.

C. F. Hunt & Co	$1,700
Toledo Bridge Co	1,986
King Bridge Co	1,889
Champion Bridge Co	2,000
G. W. Werntz	1,380
H. H. Barker	1,748
A. Wheelock	1,512
Lafayette Bridge Co	1,520
Joilet Bridge Co	1,699
Massillon Bridge Co	1,699
Iron Substructure Co	1,478

Werntz also allows $150 for the material in the old bridge. So he gets the job.

STONE WORK.

This part of the work is put in at a certain price per cubic foot of stone and the total cost cannot be given till the job is completed and the stone work measured. The bids were:

Clemmer & Johnson per. cu. ft.	$7.29
A. Wheelock " " "	7.45
Iron Substructure Co " " "	7.25
Ruple " " "	6.75

Ruple's bid being the lowest, he gets it.

Werntz also gets the piling, his bid being at 25 cents per foot for the piles. He is to lay the lumber on the top of the piles, so as to be ready to put on the stone work.

The piles are driven thickly into the ground, and will be cut off several feet below the level of water in the creek, and on these the plank are laid and on the plank will be put the stone work. This way is taken to avoid the danger of the heavy stone abutments settling into the quicksand. The commissioners have already had to pay out quite a sum of money to save the bridge on the Morningstar road north of town, as it is settling in the quicksand. And they don't know yet whether they will save it.

Werntz is to do the excavating necessary; dry at 15 cents a cubic yard, and wet at 45 cents- There is little or none of the dry. The town board locates the bridge and pays $500 towards it. The county will pay, as estimated for 1400 cubic yards of fill and the town, pays for any filling over this. The work is to be done this fall.

The Carnival Kites

Many and varied have been the comments of the district papers on the kite ascensions to be made here during the Carnival by H. S. McIntosh, and, from the remarks made on the streets by strangers visiting in the city and by many of our own citizens, it appears that the majority have a mistaken idea as to the character and magnitude of the exhibition. To correct this we give a brief discription of the kites, their carrying capacity, and the pressure of winds under varying velocities. Five kites have been constructed, as follows: An 8-foot "Malay," having an area of 32 square feet; a 6-foot "Hargrave" or box-kite, of 40 square feet; and three 9-foot "Hargraves," of 90 square feet each, giving a total wind surface of 342 square feet. In a breeze of 15 to 20 miles per hour these kites will lift a weight of nearly one pound per square foot, inclusive of their own weight, which aggregates 75 pounds. At 15 miles, the wind pressure is about 1¼ pounds per square foot; at 20, 2; at 30, 4½; at 40, lbs 8. It will be seen that with even a moderately brisk breeze the "pull" is very strong, while at 40 miles, it becomes tremendous. To meet this, a massive windlass is used, and this must be securely anchored. Heavy wire of great tensile strength is used to fly this great "team." The man who will attempt the ascension will swing in a chair attached about 300 feet below the last kite to the main line by a gripping device, and having attained the desired attitude, will, at pleasure, descend the line. These kites are no experiment, but have been built upon the lines of those used at the weather bureau at Blue Hill observatory, Milton, Mass., and with which Lieut. Wise made an experimental ascension some time ago.

THE CANAL OF JOSEPH.

As Useful as Ever at the End of 4000 Years.

How many of the engineering works of the nineteenth century will there be in existence in the year 6000? Very few, we fear, and still less those that will continue in the far-off ages to serve a useful purpose. Yet there is at least one great undertaking conceived and executed by an engineer which during the space of 4,000 years has never ceased its office, on which the life of a fertile province absolutely depends today. We refer to the Bahr Joussuf—the canal of Joseph—built, according to tradition, by the son of Jacob, and which constitutes not the least of the many blessings he conferred on Egypt during the years of his prosperous rule.

This canal took its rise from the Nile at Asiut, and ran almost parallel with it for nearly 250 miles, creeping along under the western cliffs of the Nile Valley, with many a bend and winding, until at length it gained an eminence, as compared with the river bed, which enabled it to turn westward through a narrow pass and enter a district which was otherwise shut off from the fertilizing floods on which all vegetation in Egypt depends. The northern end stood 17 feet above low Nile, while at the southern end it was at an equal elevation with the river. Through this cut ran a perennial stream, which watered a province named the Fayoum, endowing it with fertility and supporting a large population. In the time of the annual flood a great part of the canal was under water, and then the river's current would rush in a more direct course in the pass, carrying with it the rich silt which takes the place of manure and keeps the soil in a state of constant productiveness. All this, with the exception of the traditions that Joseph built it, can be verified today, and it is not mere supposition or rumor. Until eight years ago it was firmly believed that the design has always been limited to an irrigation scheme, larger, no doubt, than that now in operation, as shown by the traces of abandoned canals and by the slow aggregation of waste water which had accumulated in the Birket el Querun, but still essentially the same in character. Many accounts have been written by Greek and Roman historians, such as Herodotus, Strabo, Mutianus and Pliny and repeated in monkish legends or portrayed in the maps of the Middle Ages, which agreed with the folklore of the district. These tales explained that the canal dug by the ancient Israelite served to carry the surplus waters of the Nile into an extensive lake lying south of the Fayoum, and so large that it not only modified the climate, tempering the arid winds of the desert and converting them into the balmy airs which nourished the vines and the olives into a fullness and fragrance unknown in any part of the country, but also added to the food supply of the land such immense quantities of fish that the royal prerogative of the right of piscary at the great weir was valued at $250,000 annually. This lake was said to be 450 miles round, and to be navigated by a fleet of vessels, and the whole circumference was the scene of industry and prosperity.—Engineering.

You Can Have Your Eye Tattooed.

The latest discovery of scientific medical men is that the human eye may be tattooed any color. It is now quite within the bounds of possibility for even doctors to tattoo a man's eye bright scarlet or green. Of course, eyes are tattooed only in cases where one of them is blind and has assumed in consequence a peculiar dead and ghastly appearance. An eye in this condition will entirely disfigure a face, but a modern oculist may color one of these "dead" eyes and restore it to its natural appearance, so that nothing but the closest scrutiny can detect the difference between it and its fellow. The operation of tattooing is performed by first treating the eye with cocaine until it becomes absolutely senseless to pain. When all is ready the part to be operated upon is covered thickly with India ink of the required color. The tattooing is then performed by means of a little electrical machine which operates a specially made needle.—Answers.

The Diver's Heavy Dress.

The dress of a fully equipped diver weighs 169½ pounds and costs about $500. It is made up, among other things, of 8½ pounds of thick underclothing. The dress itself weighs 14 pounds and the heavily weighted boots weigh 32 pounds. The breast and back pieces weigh 80 pounds and the helmet 35 pounds. The greatest depth at which a diver can ordinarily work is 150 feet, though there are rare instances of work being done at a depth of 210 feet, where the pressure sustained is 88½ pounds to the square inch. It is not generally known that the present system of diving was first suggested by the action of the elephant, which swims beneath the surface, breathing meanwhile through its trunk, which it holds above the water. —New York World.

Out of the World.

Members of the Nansen expedition say that so tired did they become of seeing the same faces and hearing the same voices day after day in the course of the slow drift northward that in the end a feeling of irritation became well nigh insupportable, and the men would set off on long walks across the ice, each man by himself, and carefully avoiding his fellows.

UNNECESSARY HEROISM.

A Connecticut Man's Experience With a Substitute Bathtub.

One of those ridiculous situations which at the time bring the cold sweat out on a man's brow and even after remains with him as a source of mirth, occurred to a Shelton merchant a few days ago. He thought he would take a bath, and as his flat is minus one of the chief requisites for the job—a bath tub—he extemporized one out of a small washtub and enjoyed a cooling ablution. He had just concluded and stepped from the tub for the towel when suddenly the top hoop of the tub burst with a sharp report, and the man saw to his horror that the whole contents of the tub would soon be flooding the floor. At the same moment he thought of the store beneath and the amount of damage the water would do if it ran down through the ceiling. He is a man of quick thought and in a moment he did the only thing possible, threw himself down beside the tub and, clasping his arms around it, held the already fast swelling staves together. He was successful in keeping the water in—but what a situation! He dared not yell, for he was hardly in a condition to receive callers especially as he knew that all in the block at the time were of the gentler sex, and he realized at once that the only thing left for him was to stay in that position until the return of his wife, who was out on a shopping expedition. Like the boy who saved Holland, he manfully remained in his most uncomfortable position until relief in the shape of his wife appeared. Then to cap the climax, when he asked her to get a rope or any old thing to tie about the tub, she, after a long fit of uncontrollable laughter, asked him why he didn't carry tub and contents out to the sink room and pour out the water. With a look that froze the smile on her face he did as she said, and without a word donned his clothing and wandered out into the cold, unfeeling world, a crushed and humiliated man.—Ansonia Sentinel.

Specks Before the Eyes.

The generality of mankind have in all probability, at one period or the other, been troubled by specks floating before the eyes, and this condition of affairs is frequently caused by a torpid condition of the liver. These specks are occasioned by some foreign substance floating in the aqueous humor. The image of an object is formed on the retina in the back part of the eye, and the foreign object passes before that field, casting a shadow upon it in the same manner that clouds float between the earth and the sun, casting a shadow upon the earth. Of course, it interferes with a clear vision, and is noticeable to a greater or less extent. These specks are foreign substances which should have been eliminated. With a torpid liver and a torpid elimination, these foreign substances accumulate in the body everywhere, and it is common for them to be thrown into the cavity of the eye. They occasion considerable annoyance, and can only be relieved of this disturbing element by improving the elimination to the extent that all foreign matter is removed from the body. This can be done by regulating the diet.

Cut a Boy's Finger Nails.

William Ottman was fined in Terre Haute, Ind., for assault and battery which perhaps has no precedent in court records. A boy who had been annoying him, and whom he caught, scratched him. Ottman then held the boy on the ground and forcibly trimmed his finger nails.

—Parties are fumigating the country school house in some parts of the state, for the purpose of killing "disease germs." It would be cheaper, and more sensible to open the windows for a few days this nice weather. Fresh, sweet air is what the rooms need.

—All the Petoskey colony came home Friday, when Mr. and Mrs. Guild did, but we did not then know it. They are Geo. Grund, John Zimmerman, Joe Forman and Joe Pfefferl. We are led to believe they had caught all the fish in the northern lakes, and used up all the bait, and so there was nothing left to do but to come home.

—Ed. Kunderd's huckter team became frightened this morning just as the tugs were unhitched from the wagon, which was in front of Myers' livery barn. —The children's exercises at the Lutheran church last evening were very fine, but the crowd was so large that not more than two thirds got in. Mrs. Matt Zewes and others, had given a great deal of work and thought to make it a success. —Mrs. Trover and her daughter Maud, go to Chicago this week, where we believe they will reside for a year or two, so as to enable Maud to take a course in vocal music. She is a most worthy young lady and an admirable singer. She will be greatly missed in the choir and social circles. Mrs. Trover will also be greatly missed as she is always a leader in Sunday School, church and other good works. There was a sad scene at the Presbyterian church last evening, when they said good by and announced that they were to go away so soon.

—A new teacher takes her place in our schools today, Miss Grace Smith of Garrett but for some time a student at Valparaiso. The great number of pupils compelled the board to do this. She is well spoken of by those who know her.

—In driving through Ashley last week we noticed twelve empty residences. And had we driven over all the streets we no doubt could have counted many more. Evidently prosperity has hot struck Ashley.

Changed Her Mind.

Sherm Hollister, like a good city farmer, keeps pigs, and among them is a brood sow, a sort of family pig, if one may use such a term. Last Tuesday, she presented Sherm with a small litter of pigs, three of them. The mother, at first seemed satisfied with this because she had heard somebody say "There's luck in odd numbers." But it would appear that after more mature consideration she changed her mind, for on Sunday, she presented Sherm with another one, and now she has four. In was simply a case of sober, second thought.

BRIDGE LOCATED.

The town council located the 7th street bridge this week changing it about the width of the bridge to the north and the length of the bridge to the west. The new line of the street begins to bear to the north soon after getting past the Bachtel mill going east, and striking the center of the road as it now lies, just east of the creek. The old fill this side of the bridge will be taken for the new fill by moving it to the north. The county will assume filling 1400 cubic yards, and the town fills the rest. Had the bridge not been moved to the north the county would chave made all the fill, that is the 1400 yards. C. E. VanAuken has been making the surveys.

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

Topics of Times

The Portland (Ore.) Council imposed a tax of $10 annually upon all milliners doing business in the city, and thereby cooked such a storm as only women can create. At the next meeting of the Council the obnoxious ordinance was repealed unanimously.

A new process of obtaining gas from peat is attracting much attention in Massachusetts, a State which has immense peat beds in its southeastern corner. Great deposits of peat are also found near the City of Mexico and elsewhere on this continent where coal is scarce.

Schabler, the well-known botanist, has recently found that out of 1,000 flowers, 284 are white, 226 are yellow, 226 red, 141 are blue, 75 are violet, 36 are green, 12 are orange, 4 are brown, and 2 are black. White flowers become still more numerous as one advances toward the North.

Dahebel Naibo, which signifies the Sinking Mountain, is a vanishing Algerian peak. It is now only about 800 feet in height, and is known to be slowly yet surely disappearing, as it were, into the bowels of the earth. In the time of the Cæsars it was nearly twice its present height.

An interesting bit of news was unearthed in Fall River, when it was given out that the flagstaff on the First National Bank building was formerly the boom on the schooner yacht Magic, which successfully defended the America's cup in the race with the Cambria, Aug. 8, 1870.

The best way to prepare for a long walking tour is to take running and walking exercises for an hour or so daily for a month or so previous to starting. The lungs should be emptied and fully expanded every morning and evening, and a course of gymnastic exercises will be beneficial.

The inhabitants of New York are at present possessed of a mania for drinking milk, and it is said that the sales of milk by the glass have reached surprisingly large figures. Indeed, the receipts of the saloon-keepers of the metropolis have begun to suffer to a considerable extent from the milk mania.

The Calais (Me.) Times notes an interesting coincidence in the fact that the schooner Polly, eighty-four tons, built in 1805, and schooner Hiram, Capt. Hatton, built in 1819, the two oldest vessels in the merchant service of the United States, both arrived at that port on the same day recently.

It is a singular discovery that the outlines of the Defender are almost precisely identical with those of an ancient Egyptian boat, 5,000 years old, recently found by De Morgan and Meir at Gizeh. It has the extreme overhang at bow and stern, which is the chief characteristic of the 1895 racing yacht.

The irrigation works in India are proving of immense value. Returns just in show that in 1893-94 between 14,000,000 and 15,000,000 acres were irrigated, the produce yielding being valued at over 39 crores (a crore is 10,000 rupees). The net retrn to the Government on the capital sunk was over 4½ per cent.

Corporal William Anthony, of the United States marine corps, attached to the marine barracks in Brooklyn, is the owner of a flinty stone of a white, calcined surface, or covering, which he swears descended with a lightning bolt during a heavy storm that passed over that vicinity and Long Island.

The plains of Josulla were uplifted in 1759 to the extent of 1,700 feet in a single night by violent crust motions. In 1783 the earthquake in Calabria caused immense upheavals and subsidences, with monster chasms, fissures, and precipices; in some cases the fissures were 600 feet wide, and went to an unknown depth.

The Pitecheir of Java and Sumatra is a tree-climbing rodent or night rat, which lives in trees. It is particularly fond of the tubercules of the kateli, or sweet potato, and the fruits of certain trees. The animal resembles an ordinary rat, but thanks to the formation of its claws, it can climb with the agility of a monkey.

The stuffed calico cats, made of print cloth stamped with the picture of a tabby and stuffed with cotton into quite a lifelike counterfeit of the animal, which were a common toy with children a few years ago, have been put to a novel use lately in Lincoln County, Maine. The farmers have fastened the calico cats up among the branches of their fruit trees, and it is said they most effectually scare away predatory birds.

On May 1, 1896, an industrial exhibition will be opened in Berlin. The time has been chosen to coincide with the twenty-fifth anniversary of the German empire. Upward of 5,000,000 marks have been subscribed to the guarantee fund and 5,000 exhibitors have engaged their places. Electric and elevated railways have been laid down in order to facilitate passenger and other traffic between the city and the exhibition, situated on the Upper Spree.

Dr. Edward Everett Hale says that if you happen to be traveling in Spain and want your trunk you say to the porter at the railway station: "Cavalier, might I ask you to have the goodness to carry this trunk across to the hotel opposite?" And he says with equal courtesy: "Cavalier, so soon as the cavalier who can read comes and reads the address to us all the trunks will be taken to the hotels." Such an experience grows wearisome after a while, but it gives a foreigner an interesting glimpse of the lack of popular education among the Spaniards.

The Baby's Bottle of Rum.

The inflexibility of Russian official orders has resulted in many queer and needless fixtures in the official system. The story is well known of the sentry who was put on guard over a rose in bloom in the imperial garden in the seventeenth century. The rose and its bush disappeared, but every day for a hundred years a sentry mounted guard over the spot, because no one had ordered the service discontinued.

A story quite as ludicrous is now told of a discovery made by the Empress Catharine, mother of the Emperor Paul, who was assassinated in 1801. Catharine, at one time, was inspired by some passing whim of economy to scrutinize the imperial housekeeping accounts. In them, among other queer things, she found that "one bottle of rum daily" was charged to the Naslednik, or heir apparent.

As her son, who was then a young man, had never given any sign of intemperate habits, the Empress was greatly astonished. She went over the accounts to see how long he had been addicted to this practice, and found, to her still greater surprise, that the expenditure went back to the day of his birth—and indeed, far beyond it.

The heir to the throne had not only been charged with drinking over thirty dozen bottles of fine Jamaica rum yearly ever since he was born, but for a long time before that. The Empress, it is hardly necessary to say, made a thorough investigation of this strange matter, and with the aid of an antiquarian, she at last reached the original entry.

A century or so before, the imperial physician had prescribed, for the Naslednik of the period, "on account of a violent toothache, a teaspoonful of rum, to be taken with sugar." This dose was given for several days in succession; and the nurse or steward in charge had deemed it more fitting to the imperial dignity, as well as more profitable to himself or herself, to purchase a new bottle of rum every day. No one had ever given the order to discontinue this purchase, and it had gone on for a century, the rum having constituted one of the perquisites of the court steward.

The Empress submitted the discovery to her husband, who at once declared that the method of keeping the accounts should be thoroughly reformed, and such abuses ended. He carried out his threat.

MONITORS REGAINING FAVOR.

European Naval Architects Regard Them as Superior Fighting Ships.

European naval experts are turning their attention from battleships to monitors. For many years after the civil war the maritime nations of the world let the monitor type of vessel go unregarded. The great things accomplished by the original monitor in her fight at Hampton Roads and the building by the United States of several powerful vessels of this type caused for a time several of the European powers to experiment with it, but they soon abandoned the attempt to improve upon and perpetuate the type, and evolved the present kind of battleship, with all its immense expense and unknown effective qualities. Even in the United States the old monitors were allowed to go to ruin, and the new ones ordered were abandoned and laid up unfinished.

The first step, however, which was taken in the direction of rebuilding the new navy was to order the completion of the double-turreted monitor Miantonomoh on modern lines. The rebuilding of the Amphitrite, Puritan and Terror was accomplished afterward, and the Monterey built for the Pacific coast. All these vessels have proved successes, and have been found able to stand heavy weather at sea in a manner which surprises even their strongest advocates. The effect of this has been that in Europe there is a strong party among naval officials who want to have the monitor type reintroduced.

Lord Brassey in his last naval annual says of this: "Many recoil from the large expenditure and believe the monitor type ought to be revived. On this point it may be observed that the monitor type, dear though it be to the Americans, has no place in their new fleet."

This is hardly correct on the part of Lord Brassey, considering the fact as already stated, but it is true that the type has not received that attention in the building of the new navy that perhaps will be given to it hereafter, both in this country and in Europe.—New York Press.

Escaped in a Flour-Sack.

Sir John Waters, says the author of "English Eccentrics," was the most admirable spy ever attached to an army. In the Peninsular War he gave Lord Wellington the most accurate and valuable information about the Spaniards and their movements. On one occasion he was taken prisoner by a company of Spanish dragoons while still clad in the English uniform. He was supposed to be a stupid Britisher who could not understand a word of French or Spanish, and his captors conversed freely before him.

He learned from his guards, while riding between them, that they were going to kill and rob him at an old mill where the company was to stop for dinner. They would pretend that they shot him because of his attempt to escape.

On reaching the mill the dragoons dismounted and went into the house, leaving their prisoner outside in the hope that he would attempt to escape.

The instant they were out of sight Waters threw his cloak upon a neighboring olive-bush, and mounted his cocked hat on top. Some empty flour-sacks lay on the ground, and into one of them he crawled. A moment later the dragoons came out, fired their carbines at the supposed prisoner, and galloped off, intending to return later to rifle the body.

A horse, loaded with sacks of flour, stood near the door, and Sir John, still enveloped in the sack, managed to throw himself on the horse's back, as if he were part of the load. The owner at length came out, mounted, and rode away, without detecting the peculiar contents of one of the sacks.

When far enough away for safety Waters, finding his position most uncomfortable, managed to free himself from the sack, and sat up. The horseman, chancing to look around, beheld the man covered with flour and took him to be a ghost perched behind him. Terrified at the sight, he fell over in a swoon, and the supposed ghost thrust him to the ground and galloped off.

Sir John reached the English camp without further adventure, and was warmly greeted by Wellington.

Baconianism.

SIAM AND ITS KING.

SOME EVIDENCES OF SUBSTANTIAL PROGRESS.

King Chulalongkorn's Personality, Intelligence, and Methods of Life—Wonderful Temple in the Grounds of the Royal Palace at Bangkok.

Marvel of the East.

The King of Siam, who has been making an extensive tour of America and Europe, in order to more thoroughly familiarize himself with the languages, customs and institutions of the great nations of the world, is an absolute ruler in his own country, and has wielded his autocratic powers to the benefit of his people.

King Chulalongkorn's personality, intelligence and methods of life do the utmost violence to the traditional notions of what an Oriental potentate is and should be. The historical portrait of the king, decked out in headgear that resembles a Chinese pagoda, is all wrong. He wears no Chinese pagoda, but a modern silk hat, which becomes him as well as any other gentleman. To Oriental silks and brocades and fantastic shoes with long turned-up toes, and all sorts of sashes and bands and diamonds and collars of gold, he prefers a modern gentleman's frock coat, waistcoat, trousers, linen collar and four-in-hand tie. And he dresses his sons in the same sensible sort of costume.

This latest photograph of the king was taken not long ago at Geneva by the well-known artist Pricani. It shows his majesty seated, with the crown prince standing at the right hand and the prince's younger brother at the left. There is nothing Oriental in the portraits except the features of the sitters. Chulalongkorn's manly and intelligent feaures are a fine index to his character. One would hardly look for monstrous cruelty or black ignorance in a man of his appearance, and none is found. It is all the more surprising, for Chulalongkorn was not born and reared in an environment out of which one would expect to see arise a product such as he is. When, in 1873, he came into the full possession of his kingly power—for there was a regency in Siam during the King's boyhood—he proceeded to turn the country inside out. He abolished, by decree, many of the barbarous customs of the people, and under his wise and enlightened and liberal rule Siam became conscious of the great blessings of modern civilization. The King had always a great admiration for Occidental manners and ideas and the extravagant hyperbole and nauseating adulation of the Orient disgusted him. Before he ascended the throne the Siamese monarch was regarded as semi-divine. Subjects, when saluting the king, were required to prostrate themselves on all fours, and to emphasize their boundless homage were accustomed to grovel at the feet of royalty. All this disgusted the young and progressive king. He bade his ministers, his friends and his visitors to arise, walk upon their feet and shake hands with him like men. The conservative (i. e. the groveling) party opposed this reform, but Chulalongkorn allowed them to see that he was not to be trifled with and, willy-nilly, the grovelers were compelled to act like human beings.

THE KING OF SIAM AND TWO OF HIS SONS.

His majesty is a firm believer in Buddhism, the ancient religion of his race and of his fathers, and he is an adept in its intricate and refined subtleties. But he is far more liberal in his ideas of toleration than most European rulers, and perfect religious liberty, thanks to him, prevails in Siam to-day. In him the Christians especially have found a friend and protector. He no sooner became master of the government than he decreed that the Christians should not be interfered with in their work or worship, and he has seen that this law has been enforced. To a man so far advanced as to insist upon religious liberty human slavery was by no means a pleasant matter, and the king set to work to reform his people in this respect. He has practically abolished slavery in Siam. He set to work, too, to reform taxation, and he greatly diminished all internal taxes that were burdensome or unnecessary. These reforms were but the beginning of his work. He had an ambition to lift his country out of the depths of degradation and ignorance in which he found it. He had a mighty task before him, but he had mighty power, and he has given an excellent account of it to the world.

The reign of Chulalongkorn has been the most peaceful and prosperous in the history of Siam. He gave new life to the fettered industries of the country by cutting new canals for purposes of irrigation and distribution, he built railroads, steam and electric, in many parts of his domain, constructed telegraph lines that opened up communication with the western world and with the Chinese Empire, improved the coast with lighthouses and harbor signals, improved the big rivers of the country, thus adding largely to the facilities of commerce, and instituted numberless other reforms connected with the commercial activities of the people.

In moral reform the king has been no less active. How he has accomplished so much in so short a time is indeed a wonder. Among other radical chances he has made is the introduction of an entirely new code of laws and a judicial system modeled after the best Western fashion. He has instituted a fine system of public instruction, built hospitals, and has even gone so far as to found and open an art museum that compares favorably with many institutions of its kind in Europe and America. Indeed, there is nothing in the history of the world that can compare with the tremendous changes from a purely barbarous—not to say savage—system to a regime of civilization which Chulalongkorn has accomplished.

Why did not the king follow in the steps of his predecessors? The answer is simple. In his youth he was a diligent student. He learned to speak and read French and English and he was supplied with books, magazines and newspapers from Europe and America. This literature told him what the Western world was like. The contrast between that and what he saw around him was enough to fire him with ambition to lift up his people and his country. He turned to the West for light and the result has amazed those Americans and Europeans who know what has been done in Siam of late years. As a prince he was tutored by an American gentleman, Mr. Chandler, who was delighted with the rapid progress his pupil made. When the prince became king in 1868 he continued his studies and nursed his ambitions, and when, in 1873, he became absolute in power he began to turn into realities the dreams of his boyhood and his youth. He surrounded himself with a number of Europeans and Americans and with their aid and advice reorganized the army and the navy and established a modern police system in Bangkok. He has by his precept and example encouraged his people in the practice of temperance, truthfulness, industry and humanity.

This real reformer is a little man, just 45 years old, and as full of restless energy as his liquid, black eyes are full of gentleness. Without his official crown, which he seldom cares to use, he measures 5 feet 4 inches in height. His color is that indescribable color of the Orient that is called orange for want of a better descriptive word. He has a large harem, but only one wife. The succession of primogeniture was not a law of Siam until he made it so. There is but one woman in the kingdom that can be called "her majesty." The eldest son of this woman shall be crown prince, according to Chulalongkorn's decree. His present queen is his second wife, and the present crown prince is the eldest son of the present queen.

Chulalongkorn ascended the throne in 1873, but not until about ten years later, at the death of the regent during the king's minority, did he have an altogether free hand in government. He has advanced agriculture, increased the exports from his country, granted charters to companies that have laid steam and electric railways, built a State railroad, cut canals, improved the roads in all parts of his domain, and caused justice to be impartially and speedily administered.

The favorite palace of the king stands on an island in the river Menam. He has several other palaces, all of great magnificence, but the greatest of all is the royal palace in Bangkok, the capital. Part of the court yard of the temple within the grounds of this palace is shown in accompanying picture. On the left are seen, in perspective, three gateways opening into the space occupied by the principal building, in which is enshrined the so-called Emerald Buddha of Siam. At each of the gateways stand two gigantic figures of the mythical demons known to the Siamese under the name of "Yuck," and corresponding pretty closely to the djinn or genii of the "Arabian Nights." A few small statues of gray marble, carved by Siamese artists in imitation of European sculpture, stand near, forming incongruous features in an otherwise typically Oriental scene. Behind, and to the right, is seen the prachadee, a huge conical mass of brick and mortar, covered with glass tiles gilded on the inner surface, and so maintaining their brilliancy with no other aid than an occasional washing. This great palace at Bangkok, or rather group of structures, is one of the sights of the East. The buildings were put in hand early in this century, and although one Siamese sovereign after another added to them, it was reserved for the present king to complete them.

Siam occupies a territory about the size of Germany. That its area has not been cut down to half that size is no fault of the sly statesmen of France and England, who have been grabbing the king's land on either side under the pretense of "protecting" him. These two States were about to absorb all of Siam except a small parcel of land not much more than enough for a royal garden when Chulalongkorn showed them that he could be a diplomat as well as a patriot. He "played" one power against the other, and thus stopped further encroachments. There is now no longer any danger that the land grabbers will hurt him. In the navy of twenty-two powerful ships he has created and in his reorganized army he has furnished himself with a protection that needs no increase from without.

MAKING A FLYING-MACHINE.

Silas Conyne and His Preliminary Experiments at Chicago.

Chicago is just now interested in a remarkable kite. Recently 30,000 people stood on the street corners watching the machine as it soared in the air 1,000 feet above their heads. Some thought that the flyer was a flying-machine and indulged in all sorts of speculations. But the majority soon found out that the aerial contrivance was nothing more than an immense kite.

The kite is the invention of Silas Conyne. Mr. Conyne claims to have discovered the principle necessary to make an airship manageable, and his experiment was made to determine the effect of the wind. The kite is a combination of the Hargrave kite, modified from a square to a triangle, with the addition of the wings of the Malay kite on each side. The one flown was 39 inches in height and 33 inches in breadth, being of a diamond shape, with the longer points cut off, making it six-cornered. The front or wind surface of the kite is formed of two triangles, and at the sides are silk wings six inches wide at the top and tapering to a point. The silk is stretched loosely over the framework and fills with air when the kite is flying.

Mr. Conyne expects to construct a large kite on the same principle and will try to fly with it by jumping off a high building or hill. His previous experiments have been conducted in the vicinity of Humboldt Park. But he will doubtless look for a more extended field in order that his experiments may be more satisfactory.

WOMAN'S LONG RIDE.

Mrs. Margaret Le Long Wheeled from Chicago to San Francisco.

Mrs. Margaret Valentine Le Long is a plucky little woman with a long name who recently rode, alone, from Chicago to San Francisco, her home, on a bicycle. She was on the road ninety days, covering the distance, 2,000 miles, without a puncture. She made the journey not to save expenses, for it cost twice as much as by rail, but for the sake of the adventure and the experience. She had only one accident, a broken pedal, when she had piled herself up at the foot of a hill in the dark. She did her own washing, had the good sense not to try for a record, and rested when she was tired. Eighty-six miles in one day was her best performance. On the way she lost eight pounds, made a detour from Ogden to Salt Lake, rode the railroad track for numberless rough and bumpety miles, and walked on an average ten miles a day. She is muscular as few women are, and is as brown as the proverbial berry, for she even tanned her hands through her thick chamois gloves. But she is not the least bit footsore or weary, and she would do it again.

Played Marbles Long Ago.

Dean Farrar thus describes Oliver Wendell Holmes when he made his last visit to England in 1886: "He was an old man, and his diminutive figure, perhaps, showed that he could never have had great physical strength. It is a fatiguing thing to go over the abbey, and he undoubtedly felt tired, and was glad to get back to my house for a cup of tea. But he has recorded the intense pleasure the visit gave him, and he told me that he thought those two hours 'in the great Temple of Silence and Reconciliation,' were among the most interesting he had ever spent. He mentions also the curious fact that we are often more struck by little things than by great. 'Amidst the imposing recollections of the ancient edifice,' he writes, 'one impressed me in the inverse ratio of its importance. The archdeacon pointed out the little holes on the stones (of the cloister benches) where the boys of the choir (he should have said of the Monastic school) used to play marbles before America was discovered—probably centuries before, it may be. It is a strangely impressive glimpse of a living past, like the graffti of Pompeii.'"

The Deadly Australian Tiger Snake.

There is no known antidote for the bite of the tiger snake of Australia. Persons bitten die almost instantly, and the Government has a standing offer of £1,000 for any one who will discover a remedy. Some few years ago a man actually discovered an efficacious antidote. To prove its value he allowed himself to be bitten repeatedly by snakes in full possession of the power to kill. One day he gave an exhibition before some Government officials, but being much under the influence of liquor, he did not recollect what he had done with his antidote, and he died shortly after the snake bite, his secret perishing with him

Writing to Mrs. Pinkham.

She says:—I have been using your Vegetable Compound and find that it does all that it is recommended to do. I have been a sufferer for the last four years with womb trouble, weak back and excretions. I was hardly able to do my household duties, and while about my work was so nervous that I was miserable. I had also given up in despair, when I was persuaded to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and to-day, I am feeling like a new woman.—MRS. ELLA MCGARVY, Neebe Road Station, Cincinnati, O.

One of the provisions of the greater New York charter, a provision existing in the present law, is that the walls and ceilings of every tenement-house shall be whitewashed at least once a year. A 10-centime piece, about 2 cents, was found by a porter at a railway station in the north of France. The man carried the coin to the station master, who thereupon registered and forwarded it, with a report, to the office for lost articles, which then communicated with the police commissary at Paris. This functionary sent the parcel on with a fresh report to the prefecture of police, by which it was also registered, and there the 10-centime piece will remain a year and a day awaiting a claimant.

Demoralizing Amusements.

Sweden has taken a very advanced and decided step in doing away with demoralizing amusements. Its government has abolished every variety theater and every variety music hall in the kingdom. The ministers assigned as a reason for this procedure that these resorts were morally injurious to the public, especially to the young. What a good thing it would be if other nations would recognize this pioneer movement by similar action! There would, no doubt, be a howl of opposition and a cry of trespassing upon the rights and liberties of the community, but the effect of a suppression of this and other debasing, immoral and vicious forms of amusement in our cities would be to greatly promote the morals of the people, and save thousands of our youth from vice, licentiousness and crime.—Presbyterian.

Do We Need Big Muscles?

By no means. Persons of herculean build frequently possess a minimum of genuine vigor, and exhibit less endurance than very small people. Real vigor means the ability to digest and sleep well, and to perform a reasonable amount of daily physical and mental labor without unnatural fatigue. It is because a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters enables the enfeebled dyspeptic to resume the allotted activity of every-day life, as well as to participate without discomfort in its enjoyments, that it is such a preeminently useful medicine.

Marriageable Ages in Europe.

The ages at which the inhabitants of some European countries are considered capable of aspirations for the matrimonial noose are as follows: Germany, France and Belgium, man 18, woman 15 years of age; Spain, Portugal, Greece and Switzerland, man 14, woman 12; Austria, man and woman 14; Russia and Saxony, man 18, woman 16. In Hungary Catholic youths of 14 may wed maidens of 12, but Protestants are supposed to require maturer age to know their own minds, as the young man must be 18 and the woman 15.

FOR A SHADY CORNER.

FOR a shady corner of the library or reception room, and especially appropriate if the room decorations are in Japanese style, is the lily arrangement shown in the sketch. The main stand is in Japanese lacquer ware, with brass claw feet, and upon it is set the odd bowl (also provided with little feet), of wedgewood, which is filled with water to keep saturated the porous pots holding the lily bulbs. Since the bulbs float in the water, it is an easy matter to replace them when they are done blossoming.

DAINTY PARLOR ORNAMENT.

Woman's Carriage Must be Right.

The stylishly made gown must be carried off with a stylish air, else all good results in the manufacturing are lost. Many women ruin the most faultless creations by a poor carriage and ungraceful walk, or by sitting down all in a heap, which crushes and twists the best hanging skirts out of their original shape. Some women are hopeless so far as style goes, while others are a great success no matter what they may have on. The woman utterly devoid of some natural style is, as a rule, slovenly, having her clothes pitched on any way to get into them.

Her hair is stringy, gloves ill-fitting and soiled, veil looking as though it had blown toward her and by accident found a lodging place on her millinery. Her general air is one of neglect and usually in keeping with the ungainly walk seen in so many women who give their personal appearance little or no thought. The stylish woman has a good poise, stands well, walks well and her clothes take on just the correct swing. Put these same clothes on the woman who shambles and stands on her heels with shoulders forward and abdomen thrown up and the style of toilet is swallowed up in the lack of style in the woman herself. It is safe to say that more style is lost in the way a woman carries herself and wears her clothes than in the actual making of her wardrobe.

Where Women Toil Like Men.

While American women have their own grievances the sex enjoys a freedom of action and an opportunity for getting ahead greater than are found elsewhere. The men of European countries, as a rule, are far less considerate of women than are Americans. In Belgium woman digs in the mines and does the coarsest of work. In Germany she toils in the fields. Even in France, the country of politeness, she toils laboriously and often with little consideration on the part of the male portion of the community. The towns where art and culture most abound often present striking counter pictures. Budapest is a beautiful city, yet in this apparently civilized community the tourist sees young girls and women of all ages carrying bricks and mortar, and mixing the latter, wherever a building is going up.

Cooked by Cold.

Any one who has ever picked up with a bare hand a piece of intensely cold iron knows that the touch burns almost as badly as if the metal were redhot. Indeed the action of the great heat and extreme cold is so similar that a Hungarian chemist has turned the latter to account to prepare meats for food. He subjects the meat to 60 degrees of frost and then seals it up in airtight tin cans. The result is that the meat, which is practically "cooked by cold," will keep any time and can be eaten with very little further preparation.

Frog Skin Gloves.

Tanned frog skin is about the prettiest and softest leather for gloves imaginable, and also the strongest for its weight. Oak bark, the usual tanning medium, is not serviceable for these little skins, and a special kind of root is used, and the process is long and expensive, but well worth the trouble. The fair sex are somewhat prejudiced, however, and so far have become reconciled but slowly; however, the demand is growing and they will no doubt become popular ere long.

Women and Strong Language.

It has often been asserted that woman is deficient in humor, and another feminine "shortcoming" is thus described by a writer of the sex: "Women, it has been said, cannot bear strong language. There are certain words in English that we have not yet learned to use. But give us time and we will overcome this weakness. We are getting hardened; modern literature and modern tendencies of all sorts are doing this for us. I heard the other day of a little domestic scene that shows how we are improving in this respect. A dignified and pious old man was being harried by his energetic little wife. His exasperation became unbearable at last, and, forgetting his stiff joints, he sprang from his chair and began to gesticulate wildly, too angry to speak. As soon as he could he said: 'Jane, I am going to swear!' 'Do! Mr. Simpson,' she said; 'it will do you good.' She called to her sister in the next room: 'Sarah! Mr. Simpson says he's going to swear!' The sister dropped her work, exclaiming: 'Oh, do ask him to wait till I get there!'"

Queer Economy of German Empress.

It is well known that the German Empress is an ideal housekeeper as well as an ideal wife and mother. Her dread of waste goes so far that the suits of her elder children are cut down to fit the younger boys, and her own court dresses are altered again and again, so as not to be recognized when they are worn at many court functions. Yet it is also reported an army of twelve dressmakers is always at work for the Empress, and that it is increased to over thirty whenever the Empress is about to start on a journey. New gowns would, after all, be less expensive, since the great Berlin artist in dresses who makes the court costumes for her Majesty charges only about $75 for making a gown of state.

Wheelwomen's Aches.

A preparation of quinine and whisky is said to be excellent for external use after a fatiguing bicycle ride. Not only as a panacea for aching muscles is it satisfactory, but it also serves as an excellent tonic, if well rubbed into the skin, for the strengthening of weak members suddenly called upon to do much unwonted duty. The proportions are sixteen grains of quinine dissolved in a pint of whisky. Clear alcohol is only in a less degree excellent for the purpose, either to use in the water of the bath or directly upon the person. Both the quinine mixture and the alcohol will serve a triple purpose, that of a preventive of cold, a pain alleviator and a tonic.

Heater Right in the Iron.

One who travels has had to carry a little alcohol lamp for heating the curling iron. With the new curling iron shown here this trouble is obviated, for the curler contains a little alcohol lamp arrangement within the handle, which keeps the iron heated as long as required. It is not necessary to wait between heatings, as is the case with the ordinary heaters. The curler is always clean, never having an opportunity to become smoky or sooty, and so the hair is kept in better condition by the use of the self-heater. The construction of the heating apparatus is such that it is absolutely safe when held in either an upright, horizontal or perpendicular position. It never becomes so hot as to burn the hair, but preserves a uniform heat throughout the time it burns.

A prominent physician of New York city has arranged a scale, showing how much an average baby should weigh at birth, and from then on up to the age of 2 years. The table, which was prepared for the New York Sun, is as follows.

How the doctor arrived at his conclusions is not written; but the proud parents who announce 10-pound boys had better try the steelyards again, to be sure, before the cards are given the engraver. Medical men seem to have special fondness for dashing the pride of young parents. The wonderful new baby is coldly regarded as similar to every other new baby in town, and its remarkable achievements fail to awaken the slightest enthusiasm.

As a matter of fact, few infants weigh at birth more than eight pounds, and the great majority range below that figure.

Notes on Gowns.

Silk mull is modish for full collars and long sashes, and is particularly pretty with tinted soft batiste costumes.

Negligee underwaists for warm weather are of flexible woven stuffs. Strong, lightweight corsets are of canvas and of satin.

Frocks for demi-evening wear are of green, blue, gray or violet silk, with insertions of renaissance lace and rows of black velvet ribbon.

The ground of an elegant embossed foulard in white; the design an arabesque in green, red or blue satin, traversed by a small white satin pattern.

An exquisite frock is of silver gray Swiss, dotted in white and made over a slip of gray glace taffeta. Girdle and collarette are of cerise and gray changeable louisine ribbon, with a white gauze edge.

A London firm which rents wedding gowns to brides also furnishes a "father" to give the bride away when the marriage takes place too far away from home to admit of parents and relatives being present. This professional father, as he might be appropriately called, is an ex-major in the army and a member of a fine old family. But he is poor, and willingly gives away a bride for a small money consideration. He is said to look like a model father, with snowy hair and a kind and lovable expression. Sometimes he is called upon to manage a wedding breakfast, and he is said to be a charming speaker. Surely this is one of the oddest professions of advanced days.

COULD NOT EAT.

THE STATEMENT OF AN INDIANA WOMAN WHO WAS A DYSPEPTIC.

From the Journal, Logansport, Ind.

Leading physicians assert that three-fourths of the patients who come under their care are affected in some degree with stomach trouble arising from biliousness, indigestion, irregularities of the liver and bowels. While these cases are common, the remedies applied have, in most cases, been but temporary measures of relief.

A report came from Idaville, Ind., of a number of cases where sufferers from the causes mentioned had found welcome relief from pain in the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. A reporter was sent to investigate.

Druggist Reed gave names of people who had purchased the Pink Pills, and who had spoken of the benefit they had received from the use of the medicine. The druggist cited to the reporter Mrs. Louisa Elder, who lived in the village. Mrs. Elder was found at her home, busily engaged in sewing. When asked if she could say that the Pink Pills had benefited her, she said:

"Yes, sir, I am sure that I have been greatly benefited by them. Before I began using the medicine I was troubled with my stomach. I had to be careful of what I ate, and then I was sick most all the time with my stomach. I would have fainting spells, and while walking about the house I would suddenly be seized with a spell of dizziness and fall to the floor. I could not go out of doors unless some one was with me to hold me when the dizzy spells came on me. I tried all of our doctors here, and they could do me no good; I went to Monticello and tried a noted doctor there, but he helped me but very little.

"Finally my husband noticed the advertisement of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and he got a box to try them. I had not finished the first box before I felt better. I was able to eat, and my sleep was undisturbed by the bad dreams that had bothered me before. When the first box was gone I felt as though I must have some more of the medicine, for the improvement in my feelings was so great that I seemed like a new woman. My husband got five more boxes and I have used all but one of them. I feel now as if I could eat anything, the dizziness is all gone, and my stomach is not troubling me as it did. I sleep well, and I believe I owe it all to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

D. S. Droke is a prosperous farmer living one mile south of Idaville, Ind. He has not been actively engaged in farm work for ten years until this year. "I have been troubled with constipation and piles for forty years," said Mr. Droke. "My condition was such that I was forced to give up active work on the farm, so I rented my place. I took box after box of all kinds of pills and nothing gave me more than temporary relief. The doctors told me that I must not take so many pills; that it would cause permanent injury. But I had to have relief in some way, so I took the pills. Why, sometimes I would go a week without a passage and I suffered torment. I could not sleep and had no appetite. I was advised by a physician to eat nothing but vegetables, and I tried dieting, but it did not do me any permanent good. Last spring I saw an article about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and concluded to try them. I bought six boxes, and have used all but one. I am able to eat heartily now, and I sleep well, I have done more work this summer than I have done in ten years before, and I do not know what it could have been that put me in such good shape if it was not the Pink Pills, for I have taken no other medicine since I began to use them."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. They are manufactured by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., and are sold by all druggists at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50.

Siberian Forests.

Siberia, from the plain of the Obi River on the west to the valley of the Indighirka on the east, appears to be one great timber belt, averaging more than 1,000 miles in breadth from north to south—being fully 1,700 miles wide in the Yenisei district—and having a length from east to west of about 3,000 miles.

Unlike equatorial forests, the trees of the Siberian tiagas are mainly conifers, comprising pines of several varieties, firs and larches. In the Yenisei, Lena and Olenek regions there are thousands of square miles where no human being has ever been. The long-stemmed conifers rise to a height of 150 feet, and stand so closely together that walking among them is quite difficult.

The dense, lofty tops exclude the pale Arctic sunshine, and the straight, pale trunks, all looking exactly alike, so bewilder the eye in the obscurity that all sense of direction is lost. Even the most experienced trappers of sable dare not venture into the dense tiagas without the precaution of "blazing" the trees constantly with hatchets as they walk forward. If lost there, the hunter rarely finds his way out, but perishes miserably from starvation and cold. The natives avoid the tiagas, and have a name for them which signifies "places where the mind is lost."

What Success Means.

Chauncey M. Depew has not only in his speeches but in private talks made many observations upon success, and they are all good. Said he in a recent speech: "As an employer of 35,000 men, in all sorts of positions, I wish to say that my experience leads me to believe that the men who fail to succeed fail because they do not grasp the opportunities before them. I went into the office of one of the great lawyers of New York and said to him, 'You are working yourself to death,' and he replied, 'I know it, and will tell you why. It is because every one in that room full of clerks is watching to see when I go out, so that he can fool away his time, or watching the clock for the hour to quit work. If there were a single one who would take a case and work on it all the afternoon, and into the evening and night if necessary, as I did, I would make him my partner, but there is not one; so I am working myself to death.'"

Wolves, Dogs and Sheep in Kansas.

Most Kansas counties pay a bounty on wolves killed. Yet wolves in that State have in a year killed only 1,150 sheep, according to statistics collected by a member of the State Board of Agriculture, while the 155,570 dogs owned there have killed 1,294 sheep.

Healthy men don't commit suicide. The man who takes his own life is the man whose nerves are on edge—whose brain is worn out with overwork and worry—whose bad digestion makes him morbid and melancholy. A man can commit suicide in more ways than one. He can let sickness kill him. If he is losing vitality he can let it go on till he dies—it won't be hard. Many men hesitate to take medicine. They forget that sickness merely shows the body's need for some material that is lacking in the food. The right medicine supplies this want. In nine cases out of ten Ripans Tabules are the right medicine. They help to digest what is eaten and assist in the assimilation of nutriment. They soothe the nerves and make them strong and steady. They purify the blood and fill it with vitalizing properties. They are the one great and infallible medicine for men and women whose nerves are out of order, who are losing flesh, losing sleep, losing vitality. They bring back health and strength. The ingredients of Ripans Tabules have been used by physicians for a hundred years and have a record of thousands of cures for every year—a record unapproached by any other medicine in the world. It is only in the present decade, however, that it has been possible to obtain this medicine in the present convenient and portable form which makes it so easy to be taken and so capable of being kept for months or years with qualities unimpaired.

A new style packet containing TEN RIPANS TABULES in a paper carton (without glass) is now for sale at some drug stores—FOR FIVE CENTS. This low priced sort is intended for the poor and the economical. One dozen of the five-cent cartons (120 tabules) can be had by mail by sending forty-eight cents to the RIPANS CHEMICAL COMPANY, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York—or a single carton (TEN TABULES) will be sent for five cents.

TWO GOOD THINGS.

"77" FOR GRIP AND COLDS.

"77" is Dr. Humphreys' famous specific for the cure of Grip and Colds. It is more widely used and more highly spoken of than any medicine of the present day. Those who habitually carry and take "77" never suffer from Colds. It is the greatest preventive and cure that has ever been known.

NO. 10 FOR DYSPEPSIA.

A fit companion to "77" is Dr Humphreps' specific No. 10 for dyspepia, indigestion and weak stomach. It brings sunshine into the dyspeptic life, hereto-fore unknown.

In Smoker's Heart-burn it acts like a miracle, the first dose gives relief. These specifics are for sale by all druggists, or sent prepaid on receipt of 25c. by the Humpereys' Company, New York.

MADE A NEW MAN OF HIM

Bryan, Ohio, Jan. 11, 1897.

Genlemen:—For years I had been suffering from indigestion. Had a poor appetite and could not eat anything containing grease and had constantly a worn out feeling. After using three 50 cent bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin I am now able to eat anything my appetite craves and can say it has made a new man of me. ELI BOWEN

MARRIED.

Vague rumors which for past months were quietly whispered among the "knowing ones" finally materialized Thursday evening, Sept. 2, at 8 o'clock in one of the most pleasant social events of the year, by the marriage of Miss Orpha Kiplinger to I. R. Ladd, at the residence of the the bride's father, M. Kiplinger of Waterloo, Indiana, in the presence of the immediate members of the family and a few invited friends.

The ceremony was performed by Rev F. Biglow of the First Congregational church, of East Chicago, Indiana. The form of ceremony was most pleasing and impressive, having been arringed by Rev. Biglow, expressly for this occasion. After warm congratulations by friends assembled and the assurance of a crowd of well behaved boys without, who by a sort of "college yell" affirmed that "Mr. and Mrs. Ladd were all right," the guests repaired to the dining room, where all did justice to the sumptuous feasts prepared for the occasion.

The evening passed rapidly midst music and song until two o'clock, when the bridal party started for Chicago. After a short tour, they expect to return to Argos, Indiana, where the parents of the groom will tender them an infare. After which Mr. and Mrs. Ladd will be at home to their many friends, at East Chicago.

The bride is well known at Auburn, and is recognized as one of DeKalb's most noble and good looking young ladies. The groom is recognized by acquaintances as a young man of sterling qualities and integrity, having filled satisfactorily several important positions as cashier of banks, but at present has charge of a large real estate and insurance business at East Chicago.

Among the guests from outside of Waterloo, were: John Ladd, brother of the groom, of East Chicago, Miss E. Gibbens, of Bourbon, Ind., Miss Anna Pomeroy, of Canal Fulton, Ohio, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Pomeroy and Mr. and Mrs. R. Thomas, of Auburn, and Rev. F. Biglow, the future pastor of the bride and groom, of East Chicago.

They Swapped.

A funny little episode went hand-in-hand with the Ladd Kiplinger wedding at Waterloo Thursday evening. Mr. Ladd and J. E. Pomeroy, of this place are intimate friends, having become aquainted at the time Mr. Pomeroy was in charge of the schools at Bremen in this state, Mr. Ladd being then cashier in the bank at the same place. And it might be added right here, that Mr. Ladd's first acquaintance with Miss Kiplinger was at the time he came to visit Mr. Pomeroy when the latter was Miss K's teacher at Waterloo. So it was but natural that when the auspicious day drew near, he should come to Auburn and stop at Mr. Pomeroy's to make some of his final arrangements. When the day drew near, the two friends were up town together and Mr. Ladd bought some of the choicest fruit displayed at our stores, to add to the wedding feast. Among the lot was a sack of lovely peaches. At the same time Mr. Pomeroy bought a similar amount of potatoes, and both walked up to Mr. Pomeroy's residence and left them. When Mr. Ladd started for Waterloo, he took his packages and bundles along, and soon after reaching the bride's home, Mike Kiplinger's, he informed them he had something fine in the way of fruit he would like to show them. The plums were all right, but when he opened the peaches, and the people saw the potatoes, there was a peal of laughter that made him feel that marriage might possibly be a failure. In the meantime Mr. Pomeroy had discovered the exchange, and made arrangements to carry the peaches up when he and his wife went. But when they started they were in a hurry and forgot it. So the wedding guests made merry with potatoes instead of peaches.

The Same... Old Sarsaparilla.

That's Ayer's. The same old sarsaparilla as it was made and sold by Dr. J. C. Ayer 50 years ago. In the laboratory it is different. There modern appliances lend speed to skill and experience. But the sarsaparilla is the same old sarsaparilla that made the record—50 years of cures. Why don't we better it? Well, we're much in the condition of the Bishop and the raspberry: "Doubtless," he said, "God might have made a better berry. But doubtless, also, He never did." Why don't we better the sarsaparilla? We can't. We are using the same old plant that cured the Indians and the Spaniards. It has not been bettered. And since we make sarsaparilla compound out of sarsaparilla plant, we see no way of improvement. Of course, if we were making some secret chemical compound we might.... But we're not. We're making the same old sarsaparilla to cure the same old diseases. You can tell it's the same old sarsaparilla because it works the same old cures. It's the sovereign blood purifier, and—it's Ayers.

Bed Spring Factory.

The neatest and easiest business opening we know of, is the business of making the improved wire beds springs, the kind found in the room south of the public square. The first thing to be considered is the article itself, which at once satisfies anyone that it is the best to be had. It is so perfectly constructed that one can lie and sleep on it, without any mattress, for the bare wires form an even support. It is moreover, so made as to be serviceable. One can hardly explain how such a mattress could ever wear out or be injured. It is stayed and fastened and interwoven in every direction. Yet is as easy to make and all very simple. This is a second good point, for it means it can be made so as to sell at a reasonaqle price, and still leave a handsome profit to the maker. Again, the work of making them is easy and quite simple. This would give boys or even women, a job that could readily be mastered, for any one, though with but little strength or skill can run any one of the machines by which the work is done, Again it takes but little capital, for the machines are all simple and cheap. In fact they are so simple that one really wonders to do them do their work. But they do it easily, rapidly and strongly. These little machines, are not easily described but can be seen working at any time by calling there.

The inventor of the machines and bed springs is now here and in charge of the room, and will take pleasure in showing how the springs are made and how the machines work. Anyone can run these little machines after seeing them run two minutes. The inventor owns all the patents, and we understand he wishes to sell the right to make and sell in the state. What price is asked we have not inquired. But if within reasonable bounds, we would consider this the best and easiest method of adding another to Auburn's varied industries. It looks to us as if it would pay well. If no one wishes to undertake it alone, it would be a good chance for several to unite and join in it, or take stock or in some way get hold of the business. It will pay to investigate this matter. It is a plain, simple business. All of it can be seen and examined. Every detail is within reach. We hope our people will go and see this new line. It will take but little time, and can be seen any day and each evening. The proprietor has sold rights for the establishment of many factories over this country and Canada, and many thousands of people are at work who would otherwise be idle Call and see about this, south of the public square.

Advertising The Carnival.

All week the two and three wagons have been billing the country within a radius of 25 and 35 miles. Every large and small town hes been thoroughly advertised. The association has a large amount of large lithograph and poster paper and no pains will be spared to let every one know of our grand Carnival Sept. 22 to 24. Tuesday of next week we bill Fort Wayne. And so far everybody seems anxious to attend at least one day.

Yesterday, Friday evening, John Lochner of the COURIER, and Capt. Frank Lahnum returned from a two days trip to bill the country. To give our readers an idea of how thoroughly this work is being done, we give their route for this trip. They started Thursday morning and went first to Ashley, then Hudson, then Pleasant Lake, Angola and Fremont where they staid over night. Then Friday, they took in Jamestown, Nevada Mills, Flint, Salem Center, Turkey Creek, Helmer and Corunna. Everywhere they went, they found the people were going to come to the Carnival. And in this thorough way, all the country for thirty-five miles around has been billed. Then, too, notices have been paid for in all the papers in the territory and single notices and papers have been sent by individuals to their friends. All this means we are to have the largest crowd ever seen in Northeastern Indiana. And we expect our people to keep pace with these expectations and keep getting up new ideas and displays. And they are doing it. Every day we hear of some new thing that some society is doing.

OBITUARY.

Charlotte Rowley was born in Lancaster, Erie Co., N. Y., Oct. 31, 1820; died at Auburn, Aug. 26, 1897, aged 76 years, 9 months, and 25 days.

She was married to James Latson in Wyoming Co. N. Y. April 7, 1842, and they lived in Genessee county, N. Y., until 1854, when they settled in Auburn where they have since resided. To this union were born nine children, three sons and six daughters, all of whom with the husband survive her, and the death of the mother was the first break in the family circle. The children were all present at the funeral, save one daughter, Mrs. Sadie Balliet, who resides at Beulah, Mich., and who is afflicted with heart failure.

The funeral was held Sunday p. m. in the M. E. church at Auburn, Rev. J. D. Brosy officiating. The deceased had been a member of the church for over half a century and lived and died in the faith of Him whom she served. During the life that has passed she knew of the hardships and struggle to rear a large family, but she has gone to her rest and her good deeds will live after her.

Card of Thanks.

J. J. Latson and the children wish to thank earnestly all the friends and neighbors who gave so much assistance and sympathy during the last illness of the wife and mother. They will always be gratefully remembered.

OBITUARY.

Orrin Keep was born July 4th, 1821. Died Aug. 23rd, 1897. Aged 76 years, 1 month and 19 days.

He was one of a family of three sons, and one daughter, who resided at the at the time of his birth in Lake Co., Ohio. His parents, Luther and Rhoda Keep and a sister and brother have long preceded him to the immortal realm. His oldest brother survives him and resides in the state of Kansas.

The parents came to Franklin Twp., DeKalb Co., in 1837, and the next year, moved upon the farm which, has been the home of the Keeps ever since. Thus, Orrin Keep has been found at this one spot maintaining his manhood and family for over 59 years. He has ever stood for a peaceable, intelligent citizen and came to the end of his earthly career with a history adorned by everything which comprises good citizenship and highly civilized manhood.

He never made a relationship with any church, but always believed in the same doctrines and maintained a character which would have not only made him eligible to membership, but would have adorned any church society. His wife departed this life nearly a year since and it seemed that with her loss his interest and aims ceased.

He had been married to Miss Amanda Beard Oct., 25, 1848, and for nearly forty-eight years they had labored together as one heart. To this union there was born one child Prof. H. H. Keep, who is now, and has long been the superintendent of the Waterloo Schools.

The ailment which terminated in his death, was long and distressing. A foster daughter, Miss May Beard and his son were tireless in their ministrations; but at last he announced to them that his end had come and he could do for them no more, telling them to be kind to each other.

Cottage services were held at the old home on the 25th inst. and were very largely attended. The body was laid beside the dust of his wife in the Hamilton cemetery.

OBITUARY

Mary Ann Osbun (Watson) was born March 15, 1824, in Ashland county, O. In 1836, she with her parents, came to DeKalb county, Indiana, settling in Jackson township, which was then a vast wilderness containing but few houses. In 1844 she was united in marriage to Elias Osbun. To this union were born three sons and two daughters, all of whom still survive. A husband, four brothers and four sisters have preceded her to the unknown world, while three sons, two daughters, two grandsons, three granddaughters, one brother and one sister are left upon the shores of time to mourn their loss. She united with the Methodist church about the year 1839 where she remained a consistent member, and faithful to her Master until death. For more than two years she was a great, but very patient sufferer, but amid it all she rejoiced greatly in the Lord and often prayed Him to take her home to rest. Her prayer was answered on the afternoon of August 26, 1897, when she departed this life to dwell henceforth with her Savior.

Aged 73 yrs, 5 mo, 11da. Funeral services were held in Grove Bethel church on Aug. 28, '97, conducted by Rev. F. L. Erlougher of the M. E church. Interment in the Evergreen Cemetery.

Counterfeit Mileage Tickets

Recently there appeared in Pittsburg a man giving the name of R. C. Lucas, accompanied by a woman calling herself May Anderson, who attempted to dispose of counterfeit B. & O. Mileage Books. They did succeed in selling some to the brokers, and then departed for Cleveland, where they registered at the American House as R. C. Lucas and wife.

In their efforts to dispose of the spurious tickets they aroused suspicions which were at once communicated to the B. & O. Agent, who immediately took such action as led to the arrest and conviction of the woman, who was found guilty of selling counterfeit tickets, and sentenced to six months in the workhouse and to pay $500 and costs. The man succeeded in making his escape, but as he is known to the railroad people an the police, his arrest is only a question of time.

The B. & O. officials have taken every precaution to prevent the sale or use of those spurious tickets, and have expressed a determination to prosecute to the fullest extent of the law anyone caught attempting to use counterfeit mileage or other bogus forms of transportation, and will be especially vigorous against brokers found offering them for sale.

WORK OF FOURTEEN YEARS.

Ex-Co. Supt. Merica, yesterday took out and destroyed the manuscripts of the many examinations he had held during his fourteen years of service. There were some thousands of sets of them, besides other papers, such as essays, etc. He had kept all papers connected with these examination, so as to be able to meet any complaints that might arise. It was wise to do so, but now, that he has closed his work in that line, it is proper to dispose of the papers. It would make a wagon load, and when one looks at the thousands of papers and remembers that each had to be examined carefully and conscientiously, it almost makes the brain weary, merely to think of it. Nor should the teachers be forgotten. How much of brain work of anxiety, of hopes and fears, of successful achievement, of disappointed ambition and crushed hopes are represented by this mass of papers, now given to destroying flames. It opens up a field of thought, too extensive to cover. Let us draw the veil over it, and indulge in a hape that these many teachers and their retiring superintendent may, in their several ways, achieve that success for which they have striven and are still striving. Mr. Merica is soon to move away, and as for the teachers many of the once familiar faces will become strange; many will be foregotten, but the influence for good, that has grown out of these examinations and this work will not soon be lost.

It is Thought by Many

when the Creator said to woman "in sorrow shalt thou bring forth children," that a curse was pronounced, but the joy felt by every Mother when she first presses to her heart her babe, proves the contrary.

Danger and suffering lurk in the pathway of the Expectant Mother, and should be avoided, that she may reach the hour when the hope of her heart is to be realized, in full vigor and strength.

"Mother's Friend"

so relaxes the system that the natural and necessary.....change takes place without Nausea.....Headache, Nervous or Gloomy.....Foreboding and at the trying hour makes Child-birth easy, as so many happy mothers have experienced. Nothing but "Mother's Friend" does this. Don't be deceived.

BAD RUNAWAY.

Mrs. Stewart and I. M. Johnson Escape Death by a Miracle.

Monday's Daily.

Mrs. Samuel Stewart, whose home is on the old Tarney place in east Jackson, was in town this morning to make purchases. Her business completed, she started home, her rig being a steady, single horse and new top buggy She stopped a few minutes at the residence of Nathan Johnson in the south part of town, they being relatives and old neighbors. At Johnson's was Isaac Johnson, who had expected to ride out into the old neighborhood, with his brother Nathan. But Nathan was not going, and so, Isaac started out with Mrs. Stewart. The went along leisurely, talking, but when they had reached the short piece of road between the Wabash track and Cedar Creek bridge a runaway team crashed into them like a cannon ball, carrying the top and also the seat forward and upward over the heads of the two occupants throwing the mass of wreckage onto Mrs. Stewart's horse, which in its wild fright broke loose and escaped. And this part was lucky, too, as Mrs. Stewart and Mr. Johnson were forced forward.falling where her horse had been. There they were in the wreck, she between the wagon tongue and a big, frantic horse on her side, and Johnson in the same fix on his side. He called to her to grab the horse next to her, and he caught his, both with a coolness and nerve, that alone saved their lives. The horses were powerful and wild, but were held more or less till Geo Swander, his wife, daughter, and another, whose name was not learned, came to their rescue. Then,overcome by the terrible struggle, and by her injuries. Mrs. Stewart fainted, and or a time was unconscious. Both persons were got out of the wreck, the runaway team got under control, and Mrs. Stewart was carried in Mr. Swanders while Mr. Johnson went back to get Mrs. Nathan Johnson. Later on, Nathan Johnson took Mrs. Stewart home. She was badly hurt in the back and stomach, supposed to be by the lazy back, striking her when the tongue of the dray struck it. For it was Charlie Reesch's dray that ran into them, They were loading furniture at the Wabash freight house, and started and ran off, following down in a way to overtake the buggy, and as they came from behind the buggy top prevented their being seen. The first known of them was the crash that carried everything over. It was found that each horse had run his own side of the buggy, and got tangled in the wreck, one hind foot of each was fast in the fore wheel of the buggy on his side. This no doubt assisted to stop them, but they had forced the buggy quite a distance ahead. It is a marvel that both people escaped with their lives. It was only their coolness and nerve that saved them. We have not heard how badly Mrs. Stewart is hurt. It may prove serious. Mr. Johnson has quite a number of bruises, and was generally mussed up,but not otherwise hurt. There is no question, but the accident of his being along, saved the life of Mrs. Stewart. The new buggy is a total wreck, one wheel not having a spoke left. The dray was not hurt, but the load of furniture was some damaged.

UP IN FLAMES.

Two Sheds At Lewis' Lumber Yard, Burned at noon.

ALL COVERED BY INSURANCE.

And Mr. Lewis Will not Sustain Much Loss The Troublesome Hose-cart.

THE alarm of fire was turned in at noon today and the clanging of the bell brought out a large crowd, and all exclaimed "where's the fire." But smoke could be seen rolling over the north-west part of town, and it was soon located in the lumber sheds, at the A. Lewis & Co., lumber yard, near the Lake Shore freight house. The department made the run in good time, and after a little trouble in getting the hose unreeled, two streams of water was playing on the angry flames. The fire was first discovered by Agent DeLapp. He had been down to the depot attending to his work, as the noon train had just departed. When he came back to the freight house, he discovered a smoke, in the long shed which stood near the track. Mr. Carmer used that part of the shed to store hay, and it is supposed that a spark from the north bound train started the fire. Mr. De Lapp informed Ed. Yates, and he at once ran to the east shed and procured a pail of water, but when he got back the roof was ablaze. An alarm was sent in to the Home Telephone exchange, but did not state where the fire was located. Mr. Stimely at once notified Mr. Guilford and the fire alarm was sounded. Mr. Stimely says message after message followed, but all failed to state what was on fire.

The two sheds belonging to Mr. Lewis were burned to the ground with most all of the contents. Mr. Lewis carried a heavy insurance on the buildings and contents in the Lumbermen's Co. Mr. Carmer had recently bought the south half of the shed in which he had hay. He had about three car loads of hay burned up and had no insurance at all. Mr. Lewis' loss will consist chiefly of building lumber, a quanity of cement and salt. He had just sold out about 10,000 feet of lumber which was delivered a day or two ago. He will rebuild at once and will put up a good large shed.

ALL the fireman feel that the old apparatus of a hose cart is one of the biggest nuisances the town owns. It is an impossibility to unreel the hose quickly without experiencing more or less trouble, and takes up a lot of valuable time. The hose cart has been discarded long ago in the cities, and an open wagon used. From the wagon the hose can easily be taken out, one man, could almost do the work.

Another matter which needs the attention of the town, is the cisterns. The one located on West 5th, and where the engine was located today, soon gave out, and a good bit of time was wasted in moving the engine to the cistern on Seventh-st. More hose was needed to do this, and a team was sent up to the engine house for it. The great trouble, it seems, is that many of the wells are stopped up, and that the water has no inlet. Wells which have not been used, and are not known to the fireman to be reliable, should be tested occasionally, and if they would not fill up, then they should be looked after. Too much precautions cannot be taken, even if it costs us a sum of money, to furnish ample fire protection. No taxpayer could object to an additional tax, if he knew that his property would be protected. All cisterns should be tested, and we think the town should see to it at once, that they are pumped out. It may save the town many times the cost.

A Collision.

At about five o'clock last evening Tom Stoy who runs the billiard hall came up against a sprinkling wagon and was considerably hurt. He was at Wash Askew's bus barn and started to ride up town on his wheel. In some way he lost control of the wheel and one of the sprinkling wagons was just in front of the barn and he ran into it. The sudden jar made him quite sick. Dr. Baxter was called and he was taken to his boarding house. This morning he is much improved, and will soon be out.

The Electric Fonntain

This new Carnival feature has been on trial of and on for a day or two, and it wo.ks to a charm. As a mere daytime fountain it is beautiful and attracts crowds of citizens to see it. It stands for the present, between the jail and the court house. There is already a large spot of bright grass, showing our people the benefits of waterworks. The water rises in three sheaf-like bundles of jets, the jets being in a circle and crossing each other about three feet high, then spreading out and falling in graceful curves. With the sun shining, they sparkle brilliantly, but at night will be full of colored electric lights. There is also to be another bundle of jets. The entire work was planned and made by Alt Moody and Rus Guilford, and adds another feather to their caps as skillful and ingenious workmen.

TRIED TO BURGLE

Saturday's Daily.

Last night or rather about three this morning, Mrs. John W. Baxter was awakened by a noise in her bedroom and wakened her daughter Mary, who was sleeping with her, Mr. Baxter being away. They became aware that some one was in the room and then saw a man who had got hold of some of their clothes and was trying to get them away. As soon as the fellow saw he was noticed, sneaked out of the room stooping, with his hat drawn over his eyes, and got out of the window. Dr. Baxter, who lives just north was called and got out, but the man was out of sight. It must have been some one who knew the house, as this was the only window he could have got in at. The fastenings were on the outside, and he only had to turn them, then remove the screen and come in. He did not get anything, but left a well developed scare behind him.

They also broke into the residence of Howard McCord, got his coat, vest and pants, a watch and his store keys. They tried to get into H. E. Trout's residence, but started to get into the room where George slept, and he woke up by hearing them working at his window. He scared them away. McCord's keys have his name on and he will give a suitable reward for their return.

Seven Hoboes Landed.

Monday's Daily.

The burglars who gave Auburn such a scare last week suddenly came to grief in Garrett, Saturday afternoon a lot of hoboes were caught breaking into a box car filled with goods for H. E. Gettel at Altona. The officers proceeded to arrest them. There were seven in all, and they were brought over here that evening by a big posse under leadership of their marshal. The hoboes were landed in jail. The officers say, that when the men were captured one of them threw some thing away. They hunted it up, and it was a watch. The marshal at Garrett has it yet, but it is no doubt but what it is the same one taken at McCord's. He visited them at the jail yesterday, but they did not have his clothes. He thinks the one who had them is not caught yet. He asked them which one had the watch, and one man said he had it. But he denied ever having been in Auburn, and said the watch had been given him by another man, to pawn for a keg of beer. They will be held till court meets.

Able papers on some branch of these subjects were read, the four on this occasion being by Miss Laura Keeran, Miss McTighe, Mrs. George Henderson and Mrs. J. A. Barns. THE NEWS RECORD.

SUMMARY OF A WEEK'S HAPPENINGS.

The Latest News as Flashed Over the Wires from All Parts of the World—Regarding Politics, Religion, Casualties, Commerce, and Industry.

BLOOD IS SHED AT LAST.

Large Numbers of Miners Killed by Deputy Sheriffs.

Hazleton (Pa.) special: The strike situation reached a horrible crisis at Latimer Friday afternoon, when a band of deputy sheriffs fired into an infuriated mob of miners The men fell like so many sheep. The story leading up to the firing is as follows:

Early in the day a number of miners marching on the Hazleton mines, owned by Calvin Pardee, heard that two of their number were arrested. The crowd then turned toward the Latimer mines. When they reached the edge of the town they were met by Sheriff Martin, and about seventy deputies. Martin halted them and read the riot act to them, and brandishing a revolver above his head, ordered them back. The strikers answered that they were not doing any harm, and began to brush by Martin. Immediately a volley was fired, and when the smoke had cleared eleven dead and thirty-eight wounded were stretched on the ground, and the remaining miners began to scatter to all points for shelter.

ROCKED THE BOAT.

Six of a Pleasure Party Drowned at Detroit.

Detroit special: As the result of the capsizing of the yacht Blanche B, in Lake St. Clair, six men lost their lives and six others either swam ashore or were picked up by row-boats. The dead are:

Thomas Newsome, a driver.
Herman Gerters, a cigarmaker.
Jay Tansey, a printer.
Thomas Fritz, a sailor.
Charles Rice, aged 20, a driller.

The party started out from Fisher's dock. When somewhat over a mile from shore, between Peche Island and Lighthouse Bay, two climbed into the cross trees, while two others at the end of the boom began to rock the boat. Little by little she tipped and filled and then went down beneath their feet, leaving them to struggle in the water.

ANOTHER RAILROAD HORROR.

Twenty-five Dead and as Many Seriously and Perhaps Fatally Hurt.

On a mountain curve a mile and a half west of New Castle, Col., occurred one of the most disastrous railroad wrecks that ever happened in Colorado. A Rio Grande passenger train collided with a Midland stock train, and both were derailed. Shortly after the collision fire destroyed the mail, baggage, express, smoker and day coach and the tourist sleeper. It is estimated that twenty-five were killed and as many more so badly bruised, scalded and burned that their lives hang in the balance. A number of the passengers who were not killed outright were pinned in the wreckage and slowly burned to death. The scenes at the wreck immediately after the crash came were horrible beyond description.

Fortune Buried in Kettles.

Conrad May, a former wealthy farmer of Grant County, Wisconsin, but now living in Dubuque, had trouble with his wife, and was ordered to pay the costs of a suit for divorce and alimony. He was stubborn and refused to pay. Being pressed, he admitted he had $50,000 buried in two kettles in Grant County. He was told that he must either pay the court claims or disclose the hiding place of his money.

Forest Fires.

Buffalo (Wyo.) special: The forest fire which has been burning for two or three weeks in the Black Horn country, continues unabated and is spreading rapidly, fanned by a high gale. Already about twenty miles square are reported covered and millions of feet of timber destroyed. The settlers have fought the fire constantly until forced to give up. There is no prospect of rain, and unless something is done by the Government there is no limit to the loss that may be sustained. Another fire is reported over the divide in Big Horn County.

Murdered a Colored Bride.

Two negro women murdered another negress on a plantation in Laurens County, South Carolina. Henrietta Sullivan was set upon by Mary Poole and another negress. The Poole woman claimed that Henrietta, who had just been married, cut her out with Sullivan, who first paid her court. The poor bride was slashed and gashed in a horrible manner by the other women. She died instantly. The murderesses were arrested.

Jail Break.

Outside parties sawed the bars of the window in the jail at Zanesville, Ohio, liberating a horse thief and a burglar.

DREADFUL SLAUGHTER

Of Human Lives in a Nitro-Glycerine Explosion at Cygnet, Ohio.

A terrible explosion of nitro-glycerine occurred at Cygnet, Ohio, which resulted in the death of six people who are known and others who are not known.

The explosion occurred at a great well located near the National Supply Company's office building, in the village limits. The well had just been shot by Samuel Barber. The well was a gusher, and when the 120 quarts of glycerine was let down into the well and exploded, the gas ignited and with a terrific roar the flames shot high above the derrick. As soon as the drillers saw the flames several climbed into the derrick to shut off the gas, and had hardly gotten there when there was a terrific explosion. The burning gas had started the remaining glycerine in the cans in a wagon near the derrick. In another wagon near by, were some cans containing another 120 quarts of the stuff, and this was started by the force of the first explosion. The second blended with the first in a mighty roar and the town and surrounding country for miles trembled from the shock. The National Supply Company's building was demolished, and nothing remains but a big hole where the wagon stood.

OHIO GOLD DEMOCRATS

Hold Their Convention at Columbus and Nominate a Ticket.

The State Convention of National Democrates was not as large as was expected, the attendance being limited probably to half a hundred delegates. The platform adopted indorses the Indianapolis platform, declares against the annexation of Hawaii, commends President McKinley for upholding the civil service law, and denounces the Dingley tariff bill. Hon. Joseph Outhwaite for United States Senator was unanimously indorsed. The following State ticket was nominated: For Governor, Julius Dexter of Cincinnati; Lieutenant Governor, A. E. Merrill of Sandusky; Judge of Supreme Court, Judge John H. Clark of Youngstown; Attorney General, Daniel Wilson of Cincinnati; State Treasurer, Samuel Stevens of Columbus; State Commissioner of Schools, Prof. W. H. Johnson of Granville; member of State Board of Public Works, Henry D. Coffinberry of Cleveland.

Gen. Lee Returns.

Consul General Fitzhugh Lee, accompanied by his son, Fitzhugh Lee, Jr., has arrived in New York from Havana on board the Seguranca. The General said that he had been suffering from biliousness for some time past, but he felt very much better after the sea trip. When asked as to whether he would return to Cuba or not, the General shook his head and said: "I cannot answer that, and I would rather not talk of Cuban affairs until I make my report to Washington."

Indian Outbreak Feared.

Globe (Arizona) special: About 1,000 Apache Indians are off the reservation and are scattered through the Pinal and Superstition Mountains, killing deer and gathering wild fruits. None of them are provided with passes and all are armed. They have committed only minor depredations around the ranches of the region, but the settlers are alarmed and are on guard. The Apaches are all from the White Mountain Reservation, in the vicinity of San Carlos.

Mrs. Hose Secures Divorce.

Muncie (Ind.) special: Mrs. Sarah Hose, mother-in-law of Preacher Hinshaw, who is serving time for murdering his wife, has been granted a divorce. The husband believed Hinshaw guilty, and the mother thinks him innocent, and the difference of opinion as to the cause of the death of their daughter strained their relations, with the above result.

Kicking at Skaguay.

Victoria (B. C.) special: A letter received here states that there is an agitation at Skaguay, Alaska, in favor of the enforcement of the alien labor law, and the deporting of men who went from here to work for the British Yukon Company.

ARM TO FIGHT FEVER.

RIGID QUARANTINE IN SOUTHERN TOWNS.

Law Will Be Enforced with Guns if Necessary—Guards Watch All Passing Trains—Danger that the Pestilence May Spread.

Peril in the Plague.

The breaking out of yellow fever at Ocean Springs, Miss., New Orleans and other places has caused a very widespread alarm in the South. Practically every city and town in Alabama has established the most rigid quarantine against Ocean Springs, New Orleans and other yellow fever infected points, and most places a shotgun quarantine is the order of the day.

This is virtually true of Mobile, where the officials publicly proclaimed that the regulations would be enforced at the point of guns. Trains from the South and Southwest on all railroads passing through any part of the State are boarded by determined officers heavily armed, and no one from anywhere near the infected districts is permitted to leave the cars. At a number of small towns guards line the depot platforms as well as the trains. Many Alabamians summering at Gulf coast resorts are shut out entirely from the rest of the world, as trains between Mobile and New Orleans now run past all stations without stopping. It is feared that the delay of the health authorities in proclaiming the disease yellow fever will result disastrously, and it would be no surprise should it break out at various Southern points at any moment.

May Spread the Plague.

For three weeks past people from all over this and neighboring States have been leaving Ocean Springs in fright because, as they said, a peculiar epidemic was prevailing at that place. Those who thus got away before the yellow fever commenced are now scattered far and wide, and herein lies the greatest danger.

The Florida State Board of Health has issued a proclamation excluding from the State all persons and baggage from the yellow fever infected points in Louisiana and Mississippi, unless accompanied by a certificate that the person has not been exposed to the disease within fifteen days from the time of departure.

COAST ALONG WHICH YELLOW FEVER IS REPORTED.

The salt water resorts between Mobile and New Orleans—Pascagoula, Scranton, Biloxi, Ocean Springs, Bay St. Louis, Pass Christian, Waveland, the Southern Methodist Association camp grounds and all way stations on the Mississippi sound coast—contain at this season tens of thousands of visitors from all sections of the South. Mobile now has representatives by hundreds at Scranton, Biloxi, Ocean Springs and the camp grounds. These people, since the fever panic began, have been wildly anxious to get to their homes.

Federal Authorities Act.

The general Government will render all assistance in its power to check the spread of yellow fever. This will be done mainly through the agency of the Marine Hospital Service. Dr. Walter Wyman, the head of the bureau, has returned to Washington and assumed active charge in directing the work in assisting the State officials of Mississippi in their efforts to confine the disease to the locality where it appears to have started. Dr. Wyman says that as yet he has no opinion to express whether the disease is really yellow fever, although he admits it looks very suspicious. The precautionary measures he has taken are based entirely on the declaration of the State Board of Health of Louisiana in the Gelpi case, which was that the disease from which the person had died was yellow fever. Dr. Wyman says the situation at Ocean Springs is entirely in the hands of the State Board of Health, while the Marine Hospital Bureau is doing everything possible to assist.

Dr. Wyman has wired the physician in charge at Ocean Springs a copy of the treasury regulations relating to the prevention of the spread of epidemic diseases from one State to another. These regulations prescribe the manner of surveillance to be established over railroad trains coming from the infected district and give rules for the isolation of infected passengers and the disinfection of their baggage. The Marine Hospital Service has ample camp material on hand. The splendid outfit which has been at Gainesville, Ga., has been sent to the vicinity of Ocean Springs, and if a camp of detention is found necessary the outfit will be used as occasion may require. The bureau also keeps portable apparatus at Savannah, Ga., intended for use in epidemics. It consists of machines for disinfecting and fumigating purposes. They have also been sent to the vicinity of Ocean Springs.

EUROPE NEEDS WHEAT.

Agent Atwell Sends a Report to the State Department.

W. P. Atwell, commercial agent of the United States at Robaix, France, sends to the State Department a report on the short wheat crop in France. He says the crop in France and in fact in all Europe has fallen much below the average, and that it is estimated that the United States and Canada will be called upon to export from 20,000,000 to 130,000,000 bushels more than they exported to Europe last year. France will require about 60,000,000 bushels to meet the deficiency in that country.

Consul Heenan at Odessa has made an extensive report to the State Department concerning the failure of the crops in Russia. In many districts it has been the wettest season ever known, and grain has been destroyed by both rain and hail. Much of the grain was not worth the expense of binding. The wheat received at Odessa is of a very inferior quality. The report predicts that little wheat will be exported from Russia during the season of 1897-8, as there is little available for that purpose, the old stocks being practically exhausted and the new crop little more than sufficient for the home demand.

The failure of the wheat crop in Austria-Hungary, Roumania and Bulgaria, Consul Heenan continues, has brought buyers from those countries into Russia, and wheat which would ordinarily leave Odessa by steamers is destined to go by rail from the interior into the countries named.

Secretary Wilson was at his desk in the Agricultural Department in Washington Tuesday for the first time for a month, having just returned from his tour of the trans-Mississippi States. He went as far west as Montana and Utah, giving especial attention to the agricultural interests of the States visited, with particular reference to irrigation, horse-raising and sugar-beet growing.

"I found the farmers in especially good spirits wherever I went," he said. "There is no doubt that confidence is restored, and that the country is justified in its anticipation of better times. The people are all busy in the West. Indeed, I do not believe there is an idle man west of the Mississippi who wants work."

Mr. Wilson predicted a still further advance in the price of wheat, due to the fact that there is not only a short crop abroad, but also because of the fact that, according to his observation, the crop will not be so extensive in this country as has generally been anticipated.

"With the improvement of the times," he said, "the average American is going to have all the flour his family can consume, even though he may have to pay a little more for it. I believe that even without the shortage in the foreign crops the conditions in this country would have forced wheat to $1 a bushel. But," he added, "the improved condition of the farmer is due not alone to the enhanced price in wheat. There has been a corresponding improvement in all farm products."

LUETGERT'S LETTERS.

Missives Which Tend to Establish a Murder Motive.

When Luetgert, the alleged Chicago wife murderer, entered Judge Tuthill's courtroom Tuesday he smiled and nodded at the jury, but he failed to extend the sweep of his salutation to the crowd.

The first business taken up was the reading of translations of letters written by the defendant to Mrs. Christine Feldt. The reading of the fond missives sent by Luetgert to the widow occupied much time, several being very lengthy.

While Assistant State's Attorney McEwen read the epistles the jury listened carefully. The reader was careful to place due emphasis on each endearing word or phrase and to fully emphasize all reference to the fact that the big sausage manufacturer was anxious for the time to come when he would be free to wed the object of his affections. When those portions of the letters containing reference to Luetgert's trouble in engaging an attorney were read aloud it evidently embarassed the prisoner.

Luetgert's leading attorney, ex-Judge Vincent, smiled and the prisoner visibly winced when the sentence was heard in which Attorney Vincent was termed "greedy." The letter went on to state that Luetgert intended to release Attorney Vincent, as he did not consider him able to handle so important a case. In another letter Luetgert wrote to the effect that on the first day of the trial there was to be a great surprise for the police and the State. An attorney of world-wide fame was to be engaged, and when "the dogs of police" saw who it was they would quail with fear. This as yet unknown lawyer, Luetgert continued, was to supersede Attorney Vincent and then the case would be properly conducted.

Attorney Vincent shook with silent laughter several times during the above and similar references. He seemed to regard the matter as a huge joke.

Luetgert, whose chances for life were so considerably reduced by the introduction of the letters as evidence, rocked to and fro in his chair, and occasionally forced a sickly smile, during the endearing passages in the letters. He evidently did not enjoy the public exposition of his amatory correspondence.

After the letters were all read the recipient, Mrs. Christine Feldt, a middle-aged widow, was called to the witness chair for the purpose of finishing her testimony for the State.

When Mrs. Feldt was called to the stand her former lover, to whose case she had done so much damage, refused to glance in her direction. He twisted uneasily in his chair, and then leaned over to Attorney Vincent and a consultation was held. Meanwhile Assistant State's Attorney McEwen proceeded with the direct examination, which dealt largely with the financial relations between Luetgert and Mrs. Feldt. The latter admitted having received funds from Luetgert prior to his arrest, and said that she had withdrawn the money at his demand from a safety deposit vault for his use. The sums she had withdrawn at different times footed up $4,000, the entire amount which she had received. She asserted her ignorance of how this money was used by the prisoner, but admitted that portions of it had been retained by her on his order for the care of his children. She also testified as to the substance of the letters and asserted that she had refused to lend Luetgert her own money upon the requests which she had received from him in the letters. She testified to having received in all eight letters from the big sausage manufacturer.

The prosecution regards Mrs. Feldt as one of the most important witnesses, as through her testimony they expect to establish the fact of Luetgert's motive in the alleged murder of his wife.

The last witness called by the State on Tuesday was Nicholas Faber. Faber was employed as a fireman in the sausage factory and said that he had seen Mrs. Luetgert enter the factory about 11 o'clock on the night of the murder.

PROSPECTS OF GROWING CROPS.

Corn and Cotton Unfavorably Affected by the Weather Conditions.

The weather bureau, in its report of crop conditions for the week says:

"In the central valleys and Southern States the week has not been favorable, owing to general absence of rain and prevalence of high temperatures. Hot, drying winds have proved injurious in the States of the Lower Missouri and Central Mississippi valleys and rains, unusually heavy for the season, in Oregon and Washington interfered with harvesting and thrashing in those States, but caused no serious injury to grain.

"Corn has been very unfavorably affected by the weather conditions of the past week in the principal corn producing States. High temperature and absence of much needed rain have checked growth of the late crop and caused premature ripening, while the prevalence of hot winds have caused injury, particularly in the States of the Lower Missouri Valley. In Iowa and Missouri much corn is past help and will be cut for fodder. The conditions, however, have been more favorable to corn in the lake region, Upper Ohio Valley and New England, and in the Middle Atlantic States the crop is generally doing well.

"The general condition of cotton is less favorable than in the previous week, and over portions of the middle and eastern sections of the cotton belt there has been marked deterioration. Absence of rain has caused it to open rapidly and to some extent prematurely. In portions of South and Southwest Texas showers improved late cotton and the 'top' crop, but over the northern portion of the State and over the central and eastern portions of the cotton belt the conditions have been unfavorable, except for picking, which has progressed rapidly.

"The bulk of the tobacco crop has been cut and housed, generally in good condition, except in Kentucky and Tennessee, where the crop promises to be very short, particularly in the first named State."

SIX PERSONS ARE KILLED.

Terrible Explosion of Nitroglycerin at Cygnet, Ohio.

A terrible explosion of nitroglycerin occurred at Cygnet, Ohio, which resulted in the death of at least six persons. The explosion occurred at Grant well, located at the rear of the National Supply Company's office building, in the village limits. This well had just been shot by Samuel Barber, the shooter for the Ohio and Indiana Torpedo Company. The well was a gasser, and when the 120 quarts of glycerin let down into the well exploded the gas ignited, and with a terrific roar the flames shot high above the derrick.

As soon as the drillers saw the flames several climbed into the derrick to cut off the gas, but they had hardly gotten there when there was a terrific explosion. The burning gas had started the remaining glycerin in the empty cans standing in a wagon near the derrick. In another wagon near by were some cans containing another 120 quarts of the stuff, and this was started by the force of the first explosion. The second was blended with the first in a mighty roar and the town and surrounding country for many miles trembled from the shock. Eight buildings are a total wreck and many others damaged. The town has a population of about 1,200. Many bystanders were wounded.

COSTS TEN MILLIONS.

Extensive Coal Strike Proves Expensive for the Miners.

It is thought that the miners' strike will soon end. It is understood that the national officials of the miners' union are willing to accept the operators' offer of a compromise at 64 cents, an advance of 11 cents, although the strikers wanted 69 cents. The battle has been a costly one for the strikers, according to estimates made by their own officials. The strikers have lost in wages $10,500,000. It is estimated that in the bituminous coal districts of the country, including Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa and other States, 12,000 men were idle. The average earnings of the men is put at $1.40 a day. It will take two years of steady work for the strikers to recover what they have lost.

STRIKERS' CAMP NEAR DE ARMIT'S MINE.

Although the strikers are by far the heaviest losers, the operators claim that they, too, have lost, or rather will lose, $1,000,000. The operators say that up to date they have lost no money, because they have been able to sell at fancy prices immense piles of slack and mine refuse that is ordinarily worth nothing. But the advance of 11 cents proposed will result in their filling a number of large contracts at a loss, and for this there is no remedy until new contracts are made. The operators say there is but 1,000,000 tons yet to be shipped to the lakes under contract, but they are afraid they will not be able to get it out in time, because there will be a shortage of cars just as soon as the miners resume work.

The roundhouse of the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Memphis Road at Springfield, Mo., was destroyed by fire and several locomotives were damaged. Loss estimated at $55,000.

Mistaken Identity

Sorren Qvist was the pastor of the little village church of Vellby, in Jutland. He was a man of excellent moral character, generous, hospitable and diligent in the performance of his sacred duties; but he was a man of constitutionally violent temper—a scourge to his household and a humiliation to himself.

He was a widower, with two children—a daughter, who kept house for him, and a son, holding an officer's commission in the army.

At Ingvorstrup, a village not far from Vellby, dwelt a cattle farmer. Morten Burns, who was in ill-repute with his neighbors. The man paid court to the pastor's daughter, but his suit was rejected by both parent and child.

Morten Burns had a poor brother named Niels, who was a shiftless and lazy fellow, and withal quarrelsome. Soren Qvist, needing a farm hand, hired this scapegrace brother of the man who hated him. Niels Burns was constantly provoking the pastor's naturally irritable temper by his indolence and impudence.

Their relations as master and servant culminated in the mysterious disappearance which is the basis of a celebrated tragedy. Niels had been sent to dig a piece of ground in the pastor's garden; but the pastor found him not digging, but leisurely resting on his spade and cracking nuts which he had plucked.

The pastor scolded him angrily. The man retorted that it was no business of his to dig in the garden, at which Soren struck him twice in the face, and the man, throwing down the spade, retaliated. Thereupon the old pastor lost all self-control, and seizing the spade, he dealt the farm hand several blows with it.

Niels Burns fell to the earth like one dead, but when his master, in great alarm, raised him up, he broke away, leaped through the garden hedge, and made off into the neighboring wood. From that time he was seen no more.

Before long Morten Burns, the rich brother of the missing farm-hand, was hinting around the village that the parson had killed Niels and hidden his body. These rumors and insinuations passed from mouth to mouth, and as the farm-hand had disappeared the suspicion began to grow that the pastor had guilty knowledge of his end.

Finally Morten Burns appeared before the District Magistrate with three witnesses and charged the pastor with the murder of his brother. Two of these were a widow named Karsten and her daughter Else, who had been witnesses of the final struggle between the clergyman and the farm hand.

The third witness was a cottager named Larsen. On the night of the day following Niels Burns's disappearance he was returning home very late from Tolstrup, and was passing along the footpath which flanked the pastor's garden, when he heard the sound of some one digging.

Seeing that it was clear moonlight, he determined to find out who it was that was working in the garden at that late hour. He slipped off his wooden shoes, climbed up the hedge and parted the tops of the hazel bushes. Then he saw the pastor, in a green dressing gown and a white nightcap on his head, busied in levelling the earth with a spade; but more than this he did not see, for the pastor turned suddenly around, as if some sound had struck his ear, and Larsen, being afraid of detection, let himself down and ran away.

Thereupon the pastor's garden was searched under the direction of the Magistrate. The pastor welcomed the searching party and called his farm servants to aid. He was confident that they would find nothing to confirm the accusation against him. The man Larsen was asked to point out the place where he had seen the pastor digging in the moonlight. He pointed to a heap of cabbage stalks and refuse.

They had not dug long when one of them cried out: "Heaven preserve us!" and as all present crowded to look a hat was visible above the earth.

"That is Niels's hat," cried Morten. "I know it well. Here is a security we shall find him. Dig away!" he shouted with fierce energy, and was almost as eagerly obeyed.

Soon an arm appeared and in a few minutes the entire corpse was disinterred. There seemed to be no doubt that it was the missing man. The face could not be recognized, for the features had been destroyed by blows: but all his clothes, even unto his shirt with his name on it, were identified by his fellow servants.

There was no alternative but to arrest the pastor on the spot. He most willingly surrendered himself, merely protesting his innocence. "Appearances are against me," he said; "surely this must be the work of Satan and his ministry; but He still lives who will at his pleasure make my innocence manifest. Take me to prison. In solitude and in chains I will await what He in His wisdom shall decree."

The pastor was arrested and taken to jail. Next day the preliminary judicial examination was held. Two farm servants and a dairy maid, all in the employ of the accused pastor, testified that on the day of the murder they had been sitting near the open window in the servants' room and had heard the pastor and the man Niels quarrelling until they came to blows.

They added that they had twice before heard the pastor threaten Niels with his life. The dairy maid deposed that on the night when Larsen saw the pastor in the garden she was lying awake in bed and heard the door leading from the passage into the garden creak, and that when she rose and peeped out she saw the pastor in his dressing gown and nightcap go out into the garden. What he did there she saw not; but about an hour afterward she again heard the creaking of the door.

When asked what he had to say in his defense the pastor replied solemnly: "So help me God, I will say nothing but the truth. I struck deceased with the spade, but not otherwise than that he was able to run away from me and out of the garden. What became of him afterward or how he came to be buried in my garden, I know not.

"As for the evidence of Larsen and the dairymaid, who say they saw me in the garden in the night, it is either a foul lie or a hellish delusion. I have no one on earth to speak in my defense."

When, some weeks later, the trial came on two more witnesses were produced. They declared that on the oft-mentioned night they were proceeding along the road which runs from the pastor's garden to the wood when they met a man carrying a sack on his back, who passed them and walked in the direction of the garden. His face they could not see, inasmuch as it was concealed by the overhanging sack, but as the moon was shining on his back they could plainly descry that he was clad in a pale-green coat and a white nightcap. He disappeared near the pastor's garden hedge.

No sooner did the pastor hear the evidence of the witnesses to this effect than his face turned an ashy hue and he cried out in a faltering voice: "I am fainting," and was so prostrated in body that he had to be taken back to prison.

There, after a period of severe suffering, to the intense astonishment of every one, he made to his friend, the District Magistrate, who had first arrested him, the following strange confession:

"From my childhood, as far back as I can remember, I have ever been passionate, quarrelsome and proud, impatient of contradiction and ever ready with a blow. Yet have I seldom let the sun go down on my wrath, nor have I borne ill will to any one. When but a lad I slew in anger a dog which one day ate my dinner which I had left in his way. When, as a student, I went on foreign travel, I entered on slight provocation into a broil with a German youth in Leipsic, challenged him, and gave him a wound that endangered his life."

After a pause of anguish he continued: "I will now confess the crime which no doubt I have committed, but of which I am, nevertheless, not fully conscious. That I struck the unhappy man with the spade I knew full well, and have already confessed, whether it were with the flat side or with the sharp edge I could not in my passion discern; that he fell down and afterward again rose and ran away—that is all that I know to a surety. What follows—heaven help me!—four witnesses have seen, namely, that I fetched the corpse from the wood and buried it, and that this must be substantially true I am obliged to believe, and I will tell you wherefore.

"Three or four times in my life that I know of, it has happened to me to walk in my sleep. The last time—about nine years ago—I was next day to preach a funeral sermon over the remains of a man who had unexpectedly met with a frightful death. I was at a loss for a text, when the words of a wise man among the ancient Greeks suddenly occurred to me: 'Call no man happy until he be in his grave.'

"To use the words of a heathen for the text of a Christian discourse was not, methought, seemly, but I then remembered that the same thought, expressed in well nigh the same terms, was to be met somewhere in the Apocrypha. I sought and sought, but could not find the passage. It was late; I was wearied by much previous labor; I therefore went to bed and soon fell asleep. Greatly did I marvel the next morning when on arising and seating myself at my writing desk I saw before me, written in my own handwriting on a piece of paper: 'Let no man be deemed happy before his end cometh.' (Syrach., xi., 34.)

"Mark now—when the two witnesses this morning delivered their evidence before the Court, then my previous sleep-walkings suddenly flashed across me, and I likewise recalled that in the morning after the night during which the corpse must have been buried, I had been surprised to see my dressing-gown lying on the floor just inside the door, whereas it was always my custom to hang it on a chair at my bedside.

"The unhappy victim of my unbridled passion must in all likelihood have fallen down dead in the wood, and I must, in my sleepwalking, have followed him thither. Yes—the Lord have mercy!—so it was, so it must have been."

On the following day sentence of death was passed upon the prisoner—a sentence which many felt was severe, but not Soren Qvist. He longed, he said, for death, and he maintained his strength of mind to the last, and from the scaffold he addressed to the bystanders a discourse of much power, which he had composed in prison during his last days. Then he was beheaded.

One and twenty years after Pastor Soren Qvist of Vellby had been accused, tried, condemned and executed for the murder of his serving-man, an old beggarman applied for alms to the people of Aalsoe, the parish adjoining Vellby.

Suspicions were aroused by the exact likeness the beggarman wore to Morten Burns of Ingvorstrup, who had lately died, and also by the curious and anxious inquiries the man made concerning events long past.

The pastor of Aalsoe, who had buried Morten Burns, took the vagabond to his parsonage, and there the fellow, all unconscious of the portentous nature of the admission, acknowledged that he was Niels Burns, the very man for whose supposed murder the pastor had suffered the shameful death of a criminal.

The truth may be summed up briefly. Morten had nursed a mortal hatred of Soren Qvist from the time he refused him his daughter and had determined on revenge. It was he who compelled Niels to take service with the pastor; he had spurred him on to his repeated offences, in the expectation that violence would result, owing to the pastor's hasty temper, and had carefully nursed the feud which arose between master and man. Niels told him daily all that took place.

On leaving the garden on that fatal day he had run over to Ingvorstrup to acquaint his brother with what had happened.

Morten shut him up in a private room that no one might see him.

Shortly after midnight, when the old village was asleep, the two brothers went to a place where the roads crossed each other, and where two days previously, according to the custom of that time, a suicide had been buried—a young man of about Niels's age and stature. By the light of a lantern, in spite of Niels's reluctance and remonstrance, they bug up the corpse and took it into Morten's house.

Niels was made to strip and don a suit of Morten's, and the corpse was clad, piece by piece, in Niels's cast-off clothes, even to the very earring. Then Morten battered the dead face with a spade and hid it in a sack until the next night, when they carried it into the wood near Vellby parsonage and buried it.

"And now," said the vengeful Morten to his brother, "you go your way. Here is a purse with $100—make for the frontier, and never set foot on Danish soil again."

Niels did as he was commanded and enlisted for a soldier, suffered great hardships, lost a limb and finally returned to his native place a mere wreck.

This true story is still the foremost cause celebre of Danish jurisprudence. —Louisville Commercial.

BIGGEST FREIGHT ENGINE.

It Will Haul Forty-five Loaded Cars up a Mountain.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company is constructing, at its Juniata shops in Altoona, Penn., the largest, heaviest, and most powerful freight engine ever designed. It is intended to haul ore from the lakes to Pittsburg over the Erie and Pittsburg road, in competition with Carnegie's new line. It will not differ from the standard Pennsylvania Railroad freight engine except in size and weight, but, as it will have double the hauling capacity of the class R freight engine now in use, this difference is of the greatest importance. The steel boiler, or steam generator, of the new engine is a gigantic affair, 72 inches in diameter and 24 feet in length.

The sheet in the barrel of the boiler is 13-16 of an inch in thickness, fastened with one inch rivets. It will contain 318 flues. The naked boiler will weigh 42,150 pounds. Some idea of its size may be obtained from a comparison with an ordinary boiler, which is from three-eighths to one-half an inch in thickness, 18,000 to 22,000 pounds in weight, and contains from 180 to 200 flues. The engine is of consolidated type, four wheels connected with pony truck, and will weigh, when completed, ninety-six tons. The wheel centres are of cast steel, the full diameter of wheel 56 inches. The cylinders will have a 22 by 28 inch stroke. The guides will be of steel, two bars. The engine will carry 210 pounds of steam. The cistern in the tender is constructed of steel three-sixteenths of an inch thick, and will have a capacity of 4,500 gallons.

It is expected that the new engine will haul forty-five loaded cars up the mountain from this city. The most powerful freight engines now in use haul but twenty loaded cars up the same elevation. When in service on the Erie and Pittsburg road it will be in connection with 100,000-pound cars. The capacity of the ordinary car is 60,000 to 80,000 pounds, the greater number being 60,000. The new engine, however, will only be in complete working order with 100-ton cars behind her, when twenty miles an hour can be made with ease. These cars will be fully equipped with air brakes and every appliance insuring safety, and will not carry a train crew, the whole duty of managing the train devolving on the engineer. In this respect the train will not differ from a passenger train, which is controlled almost entirely by the engineer, the duties of the conductor and brakemen relating mainly to the passengers.

New Material for Matches.

It is predicted that paper is the coming material for matches. The prospect of the wooden match industry being appreciably affected by a new process for manufacturing matches of paper is held to be extremely probable, particularly as the best wood for this purpose is constantly growing scarcer and more costly. The new matches are considerably cheaper than the wooden product and weigh much less, which counts for much in exportation. The sticks of the matches consist of paper rolled together on the bias. The paper is rather strong and porous, and, when immersed in a solution of wax, stearine and similar substances, sticks well together and burns with a bright, smokeless and odorless flame. Strips one-half inch in width are first drawn through the combustible mass and then turned by machinery into long, thin tubes, pieces of the ordinary length of wood or wax matches being cut off automatically by the machine. When the sticks are cut to size they are dipped into phosphorus, also by machinery, and the dried head easily ignites by friction on any surface.

There is some talk of utilizing the new invention in the manufacture of matches on an extensive scale for export in India. The invention involves no waste whatever, and the paper is delivered in rolls like the telegraph tape, and converted at one operation into match-sticks, and by a second into matches that would dry without stoving for a large part of the year in India. One thing, however, must be made sure of—that a wax is used which will harden at a shade temperature of .140 degrees Fahrenheit at least.—Boston Transcript

RUSKIN,

THE COLONY WHERE LABOR IS KING.

IN THE heart of a Tennessee valley, at the town of Ruskin, the Almighty Dollar has been pulled down from its high plane and an altar has been set up to work by a community of socialists, who are trying to prove that universal justice may be a business success. They started in on the text that "All labor is equal in value," and for three years have faithfully lived up to it. By that standard a diligent president should be paid no more than a diligent hod-carrier, and the sculptor's chisel earns neither more nor less than the barber's razor. An hour of good, hard work, whether of brain or muscle, is the unit of value by which all achievement is measured.

The practical object of the community is to see if the world cannot do without the system of hire, by which men are worked with no direct interest in the result. In Ruskin everything belongs to everybody; the profit of the community is the profit of each man in it, and the honest endeavor of every member helps the other two hundred and thirty just as much as it does himself. Each man owns the wealth he helps to make, and gets the profit of his toil. The plan has been tested by three hard, struggling years, and its founders no longer regard it as an experiment. They have built a city without avarice, and in its future lies the solution of the bitter difficulties that split the world into two angry factions, known as labor and capital.

In Ruskin the government is literally by the people and for the people. It educates the children, pensions the aged, provides for the sick and gives a home and a good living to all, men and women alike, who are willing to work for the common good. The president gets the same recompense as the butcher, and neither talent nor training can alter the value of an hour's labor.

A journalist by the name of Wayland, who ran a labor paper in Greensburg, Ind., was the first starter of this new Utopia. After firing all the socialists in the country with his articles on community property and the equality of labor, he called for volunteers who should build their own city and control their own farms and factories. He looked at various tracts of land, and finally sent an agent to inspect an unbroken wilderness in Tennessee. The advertised "farming land" was covered with huge trees and impenetrable underbrush. The "town" was a dark, sunless ravine, without food or water. The "populous neighborhood" was peopled by a few forlorn, indolent natives and a number of fierce razorbacks. In spite of this report, however, Wayland purchased the property and boomed it magnificently in his paper. Soon the pioneers in the cause of socialism began to set out for this new Eden, which they knew vaguely as "Ruskin, fifty miles west of Nashville."

The first to arrive was E. B. Lonsbury, whose ardent socialism was considerably dampened when he found himself in a mud cabin on a gloomy sidehill, with a dense jungle on all sides and no water within half a mile. He might have gone back forever to capital and inequality, but his wife followed the next day, and a few days later a socialistic shoemaker dawned on the horizon and helped dig a well. A month later that dismal valley contained a carpenter, a machinist, a barber, a shoemaker, a butcher, a cooper, a farmer, a wire nail operative, a farmer, a blacksmith and a man in general, who was put down as a laborer. Not long after the founder of the community dropped in—and was wise enough to leave without ostentation or farewells, after meeting their exasperated questions with a mild suggestion that the best thing to do was to put up manufactories and make themselves into a big city as quickly as possible.

The community, left to itself, decided that its one chance of a future lay in the erecting of a printing establishment, so baker, barber, wire nail operator and all joined the one carpenter and put up the building. That, a little clearing and a few cottages, was all that was accomplished that summer, and the winter brought hunger and cold and utter desolation.

Lonsbury and eighteen others incorporated the colony under the law governing the formation of mining and manufacturing companies, laid out avenues, cut down trees and were very cold, hungry and uncomfortable. After a year of struggle they decided to move to a more passable location.

PRINCIPAL STREET IN RUSKIN.

After some exploring a beautiful, fertile valley was found. Five hundred acres of magnificent soil are now devoted to orchard and vineyard, corn, wheat and oats and to the homes of the colonists.

One thousand acres of beautiful forest land represents the stock farm. A three-story building contains the co-operative dining-room and the theater, and in the library there are more than 1,000 books, chiefly on socialism and economics. The whole place radiates cheerfulness and energy. It would be hard to find in the working classes of any country sixty other families who are as well off as these, who fare so well, have as many comforts and can give as much time to reading and music. There is a newspaper, whose weekly circulation comes to more than 30,000, and so brings up the salary of the Ruskin Postmaster to a figure unusual in so small a town. There is a mortgage of $6,000 on the farm, but 505 acres of fertile land can easily take care of that. The actual worth of the land improvements of Ruskin is estimated at $60,000.

If there were any doubt as to the socialistic sincerity of the Ruskinites, one remarkable fact in their history would remove it forever. The seventy-eight stockholders paid $500 apiece for their shares, which have now risen to a value of $861. The question of a dividend was brought up, but was voted down by the stockholders themselves, who preferred to devote the surplus to the general good, since their object was not personal wealth. When any one wants to join the Ruskin community he must pass a written examination on his principles. He must be able to do any useful labor assigned to him, he must believe in uniform compensation, he must be able to coherently define socialism, communism and competition. A ballot is taken on his answers. If in his favor he pays down $500 and takes possession of his cottage as a regular member of the colony. He is guaranteed work for every well day and pay for every sick one. He has neither taxes nor rent to pay, nor doctor's bills, nor school bills, nor washing. His children are given schooling, music, languages and industrial training for nothing. He is entitled to draw checks for fifty hours' work each week. If he does more it is not paid for, and so is a gratuitous present to the community. There is no taskmaster to watch him, but he is not expected to shirk. Three who attempted it were promptly suspended from the community.

If he has a wife, she is also entitled to earn fifty hour-checks a week, for she is paid for working in her home.

GENERAL VIEW OF RUSKIN.

The children get their living in return for going to school and are allowed to earn twenty hours' worth of labor checks a week out of school hours.

The coin of the realm is in the form of paper checks, which represent so many hours of labor. The schoolmaster, after teaching all the morning, receives a paper check which certifies that he has done three hours' labor for the community and is entitled to an exact equivalent. When outsiders come to the store, as many of the neighbors do, they pay for their purchases in cash, as they would anywhere, but there is a separate price list for the Ruskinite, reading somewhat as follows:

One pound of tea.....11 hours

ONE OF THE HOUSES.

Three sticks of candy.....½ hour
One cut of tobacco.....2 hours
One pair of trousers.....37 hours
One straw hat.....15 hours
One pair best shoes.....70 hours
One quart peanuts.....1 hour
One yard gingham.....2 hours
One gallon gasoline.....6 hours

SAWMILL AND CLIFF.

One lemon.....½ hour
One pair woman's shoes, best..52½ hours
One pound crackers.....2½ hours
One pound of coffee.....7 hours
One gallon coal oil.....6½ hours

The first two years of the community's existence were all struggle and suffering and discouragement, and it needed the courage and heroism of the Pilgrim Fathers to keep the little band together. Socialism lived in a Tennessee wilderness is a very different thing from socialism read in a book or spoken from a platform, and many a time the members would have gladly gone back to theory and left the practice alone. Some dropped out, disheartened, but of the thirty-five original members twenty still remain. The community can now show seventy-four heads of families, and numbers 214 members in all. Music receives as much attention as art and arithmetic and scroll-sawing in the schools, and the department earns its principal's labor checks for eighty hours a week. It already possesses five pianos, seven organs, nine violins, five guitars, one bass viol, one banjo, three cornets, two flutes, one fife, one piccolo and one tuba.

The people of Ruskin are all from the laboring classes and many of them have little education, but the greatest interest is taken in that of the children. For the smaller ones there is a kindergarten held out of doors in a beautiful grove of beech trees. In addition to the regular school there is a class in fine arts, where drawing, painting, sculpture and potterymaking are studied under Professor Isaac Broome, a well-known sculptor, who was one of New York's commissioners to the Paris Exposition. Professor Broome has long been a theoretical socialist, and has played a prominent part in the community, though he comes from a much higher walk of life than most of the members. He takes a leading part in the symposiums, as the weekly meetings for socialistic discussion are called.

The chief claim of the Ruskinites is that as common people they have skillfully managed a great social and business undertaking, and so far have made no serious mistakes. In one year they have increased the value of their holding by $32,055, and contentment and harmony pervade all they do. If they could accomplish so much surely able, trained organizers could do much more, and from that they argue that in time the State, the country, the whole world would be run on a communistic basis. No personal capital, labor the standard of value; from these they deduce a world without covetousness, which is almost a world without sin.

A New "Ad" Scheme.

Advertising threatens to break out in a new place. Many barber shops in this city have recently received from a corporation, officered with men of distinguished surnames, a circular proposing an ingenious enterprise. The company writes to obtain the privilege of posting advertisements on the walls and ceilings of barber shops at such points as shall come within the range of vision of persons that submit themselves to the hands of the barber and his assistants. It is the hope of the company that the barbers will yield up their wall space in return for so many shares of stock per chair in the company, and the glittering hope is held out that when the business is once well established the stock at a par value of $10 will pay dividends of 50 per cent. annually. It is announced that the business is already established in 3,000 barber shops in Philadelphia.—New York Sun.

The New Wizard.

Young Guglielmo Marconi, the Italian electrician, has been attracting attention in the scientific world for several years. Although only 23 years old, it is said that he has accomplished something that Tesla and Edison experimented for without any great success. Marconi claims to be the inventor of the wireless telegraph.

GUGLIELMO MARCONI.

While the idea of "wireless telegraphy" is not new, it was deemed by many to be almost impossible to bring it to such perfection that it might be made of practical utility. The Italian says that the distance to which he has transmitted messages, twelve miles, is only limited by the imperfection of his present appliances.

Nicola Tesla declines to comment at length of Marconi's inventions, on the ground that he himself has devoted a number of years to the study of the great problem of transmitting dispatches without wires.

Electric Light on Battlefields.

Special attention is being given by the French military authorities to the questions of succoring the wounded on battlefields when night comes on after a great battle. Experiments have been made with powerful electric arc lights, but the apparatus has conditions. At length it has been practically determined that the ambulance corps men shall wear little incandescent glow-lamps in their hats, just like ladies of the ballet in a spectacular extravaganza. Each man is to carry a little primary battery in his pocket for the production of the current. The wounded in need of succor will look out for the little moving lights, and if possible drag themselves toward them. —Paris letter.

Everlasting Fence Posts.

Fence posts treated under the following manner will last a lifetime or more. Posts that have been in the ground seven years, when taken out, were as good as when they were first put in the ground. This is the recipe. Take boiled linseed oil and stir it in pulverized charcoal to the consistency of paint. Put a coat of this over the timber.

A Magnetic Hill.

On the island of Canna (situated northwest of the island of Rum) there is a hill so magnetic as to affect the compasses of vessels passing near.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.... September 9. 1897

The Third Term.

Several papers of this district including the Albion Democrat and Angola Herald, have spoken in favor of more than two terms for member of congress from this district. It is well known all over this district that these sentiment are also held by this paper. The COURIER has on several occasion made a struggle to break up the pernicious plan of giving a member but two terms and then kick him out. It would be just as sensible to restrict him to one term, as to two. A new man cannot learn all the business in two terms, and if he could, he is not able at so early a stage, to get into the line of promotion. For even good places on committees depend largely on the length of time the member has been in congress. A few favored ones will be given chairmanships by the Speaker, and all the rest will have to fall into line after them, and be promoted step by step as vacancies occur in the place next ahead of them. Thus, if a man stands in the third place, in his committee, he is not likely to get ahead till the man ahead of him is out of the way. If the man ahead of him is given some other place, or is defeated at the next election, then there is a vacancy and the third man, the man next behind him, may be promoted to his place. But if this man in the third place, is serving his second term, as member from our 12fith Ind., district, and we send a new man in his stead, then this new man must begin again at the foot, and so on. In this way, this important distrct would be kept in the back ground, and never have a prominent place. And this is just what we have been doing for twenty-five years. It is a foolish plan and should be stopped as soon as we find a man suitable to keep in the place. Then we should keep him right along, and keep him in the line of promotion. Should Mr. Robinson prove to be such a man, then by all means we should keep him.

Ryal Pageant.

The Royal Pageant, a parade of beautiful, fanciful and historical floats characters on foot and mounted, will be held Thursday evening at 8 o'clock and Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock during the Carnival days. Shooting Tournamant

The shooting Tournament to be given under the management of A. B. Steele, Wednesday and Thursday of next week, Sept. 22, and 23 promises to be an interesting part of the program, for Carnival week. Premium lists have been put in the hands of sportsmen in twenty-four surrounding towns, and the attendance will no doubt be large. Some very fine prizes have been offered by our business men, as well as some foreign powder and cartridge companies. Of course it is not expected that professional men will take part, as the management has barred all professional and class A. men. Shooting commences at 9:30 a. m. each day. The purses will be divided in 40, 30, 20 and 10 per cent.

How Is It?

The Butler Record lays the present good prices of hay to the new tariff, and goes on to name a big hay dealer in Rhode Island who has stopped buying in Canada, on account of the duty being raised to $4.00 a ton. How would it do for the Record just now to explain to its readers who pays duty the consumer or foreigner. Who gets the duty, the government or the producer. Also whether the effect of a tariff is to lower prices or to raise them. Now is a good time for such an explanation.

3-Scares-3

The three fightened individuals were two men and one horse. But it was not a one horse affair by any means. It was a real danger, while it lasted, so the men thought. And the horse was desperately in earnest. It all came about like this: D. M. Link and John Crimmins wanted to take a buggy ride. J. L. Miller had a new horse, and was willing to lend it to them. They went to the stable to get the rig, and after a thorough study of the situation they came to the conclusion, that the horse must not be started on the trip without a harness. At least they had generally noticed that the livery teams they had hired at various times had a number of leather straps running over their bodies in various directions. So they hunted for similar looking straps and proceeded to lay them over the horse in similar looking angles. But they noticed that the horse fidgeted a good deal and seemed ill at ease. It was a well bred horse, however, having moved a good deal in the best equine society, and so was polite enough not to show the nervousness it really felt. So when the prices of leather began to look all right, the two men proceeded to push the horse out of the stable, backwards, just as they had seen it done at the livery barn. But this horse had been backed out in this stable before and had gone, "bang!" against a box fastened at the rear, and he remembered it. He therefore didn't want to "back," and when the men pushed him back and the bits of the bridle, which had been adjusted near its tail struck the box, there was a kick and a flounder. It trembled and struggled with fright, and finally got so tangled in the straps that it fell kicking and struggling. The two men fled with a yell, or rather tried to flee. But the doorway was guarded by frantic kicks, and they had to seek safety by other means. Link shinned up a standard into the loft and crawled under the hay. Crimmins plunged into a small hole in the side of the building and stuck fast. The agonizing cries and thundering kicking called Lafe Miller and Frank Hoff to the scene. The horse was helped up. But the men were discovered by their protruding legs, and were wildly calling "Take him off!" We have not heard that they own to the truth of all this, but Frank Hoff says "It was a good deal worse than that, by jingo!" And Dan and John now patronize the livery barn. And further, deponent saith not.

Ninety-seven out of every hundred persons use Brant's Cough Balsam. We appeal to the three who don't.

"It cured me after all others failed." Charles Gocha, Gaylord, Mich.

We warrant it—25 cents.

Ald Lang Syne

—Geo. C. Hill and wife of Doylestown, Pa. and Mrs. Elizabeth Delp, Mrs. Hill's mother, have been several days, guests of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Eckhart. Mr. and Mrs. Hill went Saturday to visit a sister at Cullom, Ill., returning this week, after which they go home by way of Niagara Falls, Doylestown was Mr. Eckhart's old home, and in that vicinity was raised his old regiment, the 104th Penna, in which he served through the war. His old regimental commander now Gen. W. H. Davis is editor of the Doylestown Democrat, a paper that dates from 1816. He occupied important commands during the war and was several times wounded, but being a democrat he was never o n oted. This disgraceful course was pursued in numberless cases, yet such men as Stanton, who did it, are shrined in a halo of glory while better men, who shed their blood at the front are allowed to remain in obscurity. It is a burning shame. But we should add that though Gen. Davis was allowed to remain three years a Colonel, we believe his state has since remembered and honored him.

ACTION NEEDED.

Not Stimulated Action, but Sustaining, Nourishing and Fixed Action as Generated by

Dr. WHEELER'S NERVE VITALIZER

To be healthy, strong nervous action must be well supplied to the organs. There is no activity in the body except by and through the nerves. The heart, liver, kidneys and everything are inactive from lack of nerve power. Poisons remain in the body because there is no nerve power to expel them. Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer cures by its action on the nerves; it is at once food and medicine for them. It sustains and nourishes by its soothing effect; produces refreshing sleep, which enables them to recuperate. It regulates so that no waste occurs; it cures the cause, goes to the root and restores health. C. N. Pace, Roseville, Ohio, tells in the following words what it did for him:

"I was prostrated about a year ago and kept growing worse under treatment of my physician until I could not sleep or hold a small object safely. I was reduced to 110 pounds and to a state of absolute hopelessness. I commenced using Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer. Improvement was noticable from first dose, was able to sleep, regained muscular control, nervousness abated; I continued to improve, and from the use of seven bottles I am today in perfect health, weighing 152 pounds, a gain of 42 pounds in a few weeks."

When his nerves were restored to healthy action, his food made good, rich blood; the blood made flesh, strength and health.

Card of Thanks.

Mrs. Libbie Potter and daughter wish to extend in this public way, their hearty thanks to their friends and neighbors for their kindly assistance in the recent sadness of their home.

—Here is a curious experiment: Tie a string about a yard long to a common door key and take the string in the right hand, holding it so the key will clear the floor four or five inches. If you can hold the key steady enough, it will begin to swing back and forth in a straight line. Let another person take your left hand in his and the motion of the key will change from a pendulum-like swing to a circular motion. If a third person will then place his hand on the shoulder of the second person the key will stop. Try this and see if it's a lie.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

Houlton Reunion.

(Butler Record)

The 9th annual reunion of the Houlton family was celebrated Sept. 4th 1897 in the beautiful grove on the old homestead which is now owned by Lewis Houlton where John Houlton Sr. raised the first log cabin in DeKalb county, Sept. 4th, 1833, which was torn down in 1870 and was replaced by a frame house which stands to-day.

A number of the pioneers made canes out of the logs of the cabin, two of which have been kept in the family and together with Mr. and Mrs. Houlton's pictures and the deed of the farm were decorated with flags and hung on the stage.

At about eight o'clock in the morning people began to gather until there were fully 500 people present. Near noon all were invited to surround the two long tables which were loaded with the luxuries of life, one table for the relatives and one for the friends and neighbors. Talma Rummel then returned thanks to our Heavenly Father and those at the tables did justice to their appetites. The Houlton orchestra furnished some excellent music.

After dinner the near relatives united and held a business meeting which was called to order by M. K. Houlton, and the following officers were elected: Pres. M. K. Houlton, Vice Pres., Wm. Fee, Sr., Sec. W. L. Houlton and Treas., Mrs. Irene Smith, of Waterloo. Motion made and carried that the Houlton reunion will be permanently held Sept. 4th of each year.

An interesting experiment in reform work among criminals is to be tried in the Tombs prison in New York City, where a school for the boys is to be started shortly in charge of a teacher from the university settlement. An hour and a half a day will be given to the school duties.

The plans for next year's Baireuth festival are decidedly curious. All the "Parsifal" performances except two (July 28 and Aug. 9) are reserved for those who subscribe for "Der Ring des Nibelungen." Each seat for the cycle of five performances will cost $25.

A debate which has just taken place in the Senate at Paris has disclosed the fact that the island of Madagascar has already cost France $30,000,000, and will probably cost her at least $5,000,000 a year hereafter, without any hope of the slightest return for a long time to come.

Dipsomaniacs in Sweden, when put under restraint, are fed almost entirely on bread steeped in wine. In less than a fortnight they loathe the very look and smell of liquor and when liberated generally become total abstainers. In Russia a similar treatment is followed with good results.

The rabbit, introduced into Australia, has now overrun that continent to such an extent as to demand special legislation for its suppression. Some 2,000 men are employed in New South Wales alone in the destruction of this rodent. Since 1870 Victoria has voted considerably over $500,000 for the destruction of the rabbit.

The whole street railway mileage of the United States is nearly 15,000 miles, and the mileage of the principal cities is as follows: Chicago, including sixty-six miles of elevated, 659 miles; Philadelphia, 400 miles; New York, including 100 miles elevated, 427 miles; Boston, including suburban lines, 550 miles; Brooklyn, including fifty-five miles elevated, 405 miles.

In the towns in the Transvaal the natives are not allowed to walk on the footpath, to carry sticks or to own property. It is stated that after some recent trouble with one of the tribes a large number of prisoners were distributed among the burghers, and that even Mr. Joubert, the commandant general, and until recently the superintendent of the natives also, sent large batches of boys to the mines, drawing a big share of their monthly earnings for himself.

There is a human hair market at Morlaus, in the department of the Lower Pyrenees. The market is held every other Friday. Hundreds of trafficking hairdressers throng to the little place from far and near to buy up the hair of the young peasant girls. The dealers wander up and down the long narrow street of the town, each with a huge pair of bright shears hanging from a black leather strap around his waist, while the young girls who wish to part with their tresses stand about in the doorway, usually in couples.

The Alligator Supply.

It is estimated that 2,500,000 alligators were killed in Florida between 1880 and 1894. In 1889 three firms, located at Kissimmee for the purpose of buying skins taken in the regions between Lake Kissimmee and Lake Okeechobee, handled 30,000 hides. During the same year twelve hunters brought to Fort Pierce 4,000 pelts. Two firms in Jacksonville handled 30,000 skins in 1889. A few years ago an expert hunter could easily secure 600 alligators in three weeks, and one man at Cocoa killed forty-two in one night. The skins are paid for in provisions and ammunition mainly. Dealers get 65 cents apiece for them from tanners in New York.

In 1890 about 250 pounds of alligator teeth were sold, hunters receiving from $1 to $2 a pound for them. They are removed by burying the heads and rotting out the teeth. Of the best teeth about seventy make a pound. The stuffing of alligators and the polishing of the teeth give employment to forty persons. Unfortunately alligators grow very slowly. At 15 years of age they are only two feet long. A twelve-footer may be supposed reasonably to be 75 years old. It is believed that they grow as long as they live, and probably live longer than any other animal.

In Jacksonville, which is the center of the traffic, from 8,000 to 10,000 alligators are sold to tourists annually—nearly all of them baby ones. The latter are collected in considerable numbers by professional hunters, who receive for them from $20 to $25 a hundred. Some of them are disposed of alive at retail, but many are stuffed. An infant alligator stuffed is worth 25 cents more than a live one. Saurians six to twelve feet long fetch from $12 to $15.—Washington Star.

BORN IN THE FAR ARCTIC.

Where the Daughter of a Whaler First Saw the Light.

One thousand miles is not considered a great distance nowadays under any circumstances, so when Captain Sherman of the whaling steamer Beluga announced on his arrival at San Francisco recently that a daughter had been born to him within that distance of the north pole the news caused considerable of a sensation in marine circles there. It would be an item worth mentioning if the baby was born of native parents in such a far-north part of the world. In all likelihood a baby never saw the light of day on Herschel island before. It is a barren spot in the Arctic ocean. The island lies about north of the boundary line between the extreme northern portion of British North America. It is considered a far northern trip for tourists to visit Sitka, but from Sitka vessels must go thousands of miles to reach Herschel island. They go through the passes between the Aleutian islands, on through Behring sea, and then skirt the coast of the northern side of Alaska for hundreds of miles, cutting through the ice of the Arctic ocean most of the way if it be any season other than midsummer.

Captain Sherman and his wife had passed one summer at Herschel island, and Mrs. Sherman was quite used to the midnight sun of the summers and the long darkness of the winter as well. There was great to-do about the birth of the baby. There were four women at Herschel island to idolize the little one. They were the wife of Captain Gren of the Alexander, the wife of Captain W. P. Porter of the J. H. Freeman, the wife of Captain Weeks of the Thrasher, and the wife of Captain John Cook of the steamer Navarch.

The whalers, most of whom had been away from home for more than eighteen months when the baby was born, were greatly interested in the event, and sent many presents to the happy mother. There happened to be a clergyman of the Church of England at the camp. He had been sent to that odd corner of the globe as a missionary, his name being Rev. Mr. Stringer. With all the formality that was possible on the barren island he christened the infant Helen Herschel Sherman.

At first there was some discussion concerning the nativity of the little stranger. Herschel island does not appear to have been claimed very vigorously by any government. It is more nearly north of British territory than American, but it is reported that an American arctic exploration party raised the American flag there some years ago. Of course, since the new woman is carrying everything her own way, it is important to know whether a girl born on Herschel island is an American or not. This was settled, however, by Rev. Mr. Stringer, who held to the belief that a child born of American parents, even though born abroad, was an American just the same.

Voltaire and the Regent.

Voltaire was put in durance vile in his young days, and it was not his fault that he did not go back to the Bastile directly after he came out. The regent, who rightly judged that it would be better to have young Voltaire for a friend than for an enemy, sent the Marquis de Noce to the Bastile with orders to release the young satirist, and bring him straight to the Palais Royal. The order was duly obeyed, and, late in the evening, Voltaire and the Marquis arrived at the Regent's court. While they were waiting n the antechamber a heavy thunderstorm occurred.

There came a vivid flash of lightning, followed by a peal of thunder so deafening that an awed silence reigned among the courtiers for a few moments. It was broken by Voltaire crying out in a loud voice: "Things could not be worse up there if heaven were governed by a regent." The Marquis de Noce repeated this remark to the Duc d'Orleans, and suggested that Voltaire should be sent back to the Bastile, but the Regent only laughed, and promised the young wit a pension.

"I am much obliged to your Highness," said Voltaire, "for giving me the means to procure food, but I beg of you not to trouble yourself in future about my lodgings."—All the Year Round.

Sugar.

The yearly consumption of sugar in the United States is about 2,000,000 tons, or 4,000,000,000 pounds, which is equivalent to about sixty pounds for every man, woman and child in the country. The quantity of salt consumed is about 1,900,000 tons, or 2,000,000 pounds less than the weight of the sugar used.

The Distribution of Women.

Wyoming has the smallest female population, 21,362; New York the largest, 3,020,900.

Politics of the Day

THAT DISCRIMINATING DUTY.

What will be known in our history as "the discriminating duty of 1897" is a clause which seems to have been surreptitiously inserted in the Dingley-Allison tariff bill without the knowledge, as they aver, of either Dingley or Allison, or even of Speaker Reed, the Czar of the House of Representatives, who was resting, in his official dignity and fatness, under the erroneous impression that "he knew it all," and that nothing could go through the House he had gagged and terrorized without his knowledge and express permission. He now insists, like President Grant, when the latter signed in 1873 the bill demonetizing silver, that he didn't know the pesky thing was in the bill. It is the excuse of the small boy makes when he pleads that he "didn't know it was loaded."

The discriminating duty of 10 per cent is to be levied at all Custom Houses, in addition to the regular tariff rates, on all goods brought into the United States from a foreign country, in which those particular goods were not produced. It would naturally interfere with the trade carried on with Japan, through the Canadian transcontinental railroads; and with the goods brought to New York from Buenos Ayres in steamers sailing under the flag of Sweden and Norway.

This blunder of the legislative body has caused much botheration in the Treasury and Law Departments at Washington, and those functionaries who are experienced in construction have all been called upon to construe the new regulation. All agree that it is chiefly aimed at the Canadian railroads, and that "some enemy" has sneaked the provision into the statute. And now it has also been concluded that the clause is invalid as against goods brought by sea in foreign vessels of most of the European countries, with whose governments ours has treaty stipulations which cannot be broken. So that the whole matter would appear to be involved in an inextricable confusion, and it may be, as in the case of the Income Tax, the administration may have to resort to the courts, and ask the judges to tell it what to do.—New York News.

Falling Gold Prices.

Senator Chandler has succeeded in getting himself disliked by the advocates of gold because he is honest enough to tell the truth.

In a recent article given to the press by the Senator he says: "The fall in silver will not lessen the present or prospective woes from monometallism. It only points the moral of demonetization. The gold price of silver falls, and so falls the prices of all the other commodities."

Such sentiments as these will call down upon the Senator's head the choicest invectives of the subsidized press. All men who fail to worship the golden calf are characterized as "fools, lunatics, knaves and repudiators" by the intellectual giants who write editorials to prove that when a man borrows one dollar he must pay back to the lender two dollars in order to prove that he is honest.

Nothing can be plainer to a man of sense than the fact that a two bushel measure will hold twice as much as a one bushel measure, and when the measure which contains two bushels is called a bushel measure the price of the commodity measured is cut in two. When half of the world's money was destroyed the other half was doubled in value, and it now requires twice as much of any product of labor to secure a dollar as was necessary before demonetization took place.

Wheat went down and down, keeping pace with the fall in silver, until the famine in India and the short crop in Argentina and other foreign wheat-raising countries created a demand so great the price was forced up by competition to obtain it. Under normal conditions wheat would show no increase in price. Create a demand for silver by opening the mints to unlimited coinage, and silver will rise just as wheat has risen, but, unlike the cereal, silver would retain its price, because the demand would be continuous and unlimited.

Loss and Gain to Farmers.

Providence has given the farmers of the United States an opportunity to sell their wheat at a profit of some $200,000,000. What has the gold party given them?

Take the wheat crop alone for an example. Under the workings of bimetallism, dollar wheat was the rule, but since the demonetization of silver 50-cent wheat has prevailed. For fifteen years the farmers hae been robbed annually of $200,000,000, making a total loss to the agriculturists of $3,000,000,000. This is what the gold party has done for the farmers so far as wheat is concerned.

It is not at all reasonable to suppose that those who have tilled the soil for the last fifteen years only to find themselves robbed and almost ruined by the clique of gold will be fooled and cajoled by the hypocritical cant of Republican newspapers over the rise in the price of wheat this year. Three thousand million dollars of loss cannot be balanced by two hundred million dollars of gain, especially when the gain comes from an act of Providence and the loss came from an act of the Republican party. Do the Republicans take the farmers for unreasoning men, who cannot trace an effect to its cause?

It is a good thing for the farmers that the price of wheat has gone up; they can reap what benefit the speculators in grain have left them, and they can reflect on what they have lost through the demonetization of silver, and they can ponder on the fact that this loss is permanent and will continue so long as the advocates of gold control the currency.—Chicago Dispatch.

Moved to Mysterious Silence.

One might conclude, for all that he can learn from the editorial columns of our contemporaries, that the war in Cuba ended soon after McKinley's inauguration, and that peace reigns there and prosperity is preparing to alight upon the desolated island. Save for their news columns, which now and then contain some note about Weyler, no one would know that the same cruel war that so stirred their hearts and wagged their pencils a few months ago is still in progress.—St. Paul Globe.

Fooling the Wageworkers.

During the last Presidential campaign the laboring men were told by the gold advocating employers and the Republican spellbinders that a vote for Bryan was a vote to reduce wages and to increase the cost of living.

Under threats of this kind enough of the labor vote was coerced into Republican ranks to put McKinley in the Presidential chair. To-day the laborer is confronted with a demand to submit to a reduction of wages. The President of the Amalgamted Association of Iron and Steel Workers has already signed a scale reducing wages all along the line. These laborers get less money for their work than heretofore, and are compelled to pay more for the necessities of life. When the workman buys flour now he has to pay a dollar for the same quantity that seventy-five cents would buy last month. Soon woolen goods will go up because of the beneficent Dingley tariff, and, in fact, almost every necessity of life is going to cost more money.

But let the wage-worker dare suggest an increase in pay to the gold brick employer, who played a confidence game on the employe to get his vote, and what is the result? Refusal, and, if the demand is persisted in, discharge. What glorious things the Republican party has brought to pass for the masses! How perfectly have the politicians kept their promises! Surely the wageworkers will believe these hypocrites hereafter and always vote for low wages, high prices and protection.

Altgeld's Trenchant Utterances.

Crushing out of "government by injunction," the municipal ownership of gas and water plants and street railways, the Government ownership of coal mines, telegraph service and railroads, and the establishment of postal savings banks—these were the keynotes with which John P. Altgeld sounded a grim warning and pointed a moral in his Labor Day speech at Philadelphia. Some of his bitingly sarcastic sentences on the question of government by injunction follow:

> The corporations discovered years ago that to control the construction of the law was even more important than to control the making of it.
> The corporations do not buy the courts because it is not necessary.
>
> The favor or the opposition of the corporations has come to be almost the sole test of the constitutionality of a law.
>
> The laborers first got hungry and then restive. A whip was needed to restore contentment, and the Federal courts promptly furnished it.
>
> It will be noticed that these injunctions are simply a whip with which to lash the back of labor.
>
> Almost everything a corporation lawyer could think of has been covered by these injunctions.
>
> All of these proceedings in the Federal courts are an attempt to do things that belong exclusively to the police powers of each locality, in the administration of which these courts cannot interfere without being guilty of usurpation.
>
> My friends, let us save our institutions; government by injunction must be crushed out.
>
> If our government is not rescued from corruption and if the snaky form of government by injunction is not crushed, then it would be better for your children if they had never been born.

There's No Escape.

The treasury statement for August shows that for the first two months of the present fiscal year there is deficit of about $25,000,000. At this rate the whole fiscal year should show a deficit of $150,000,000. The only thing which can prevent this enormous minus sum is a policy of strict economy in every department of the government. Pensions, public buildings, rivers and harbors, salaries in all civil departments must be held down to the actual working necessities. But pensions will not be reduced. On the contrary they will be larger than ever. There is an enormous list of public buildings demanded by the Congressmen and which, having been held back so long by the policy of Speaker Reed, will brook no curtailing. Fees which under the Cleveland administration were derived from the consulates will now go to swell the pickings of officeholders. But greater far than all these means of deficit is the new tariff. If it really does what it is intended to as a prohibitor of imports it will throw all other deficit-makers into the shade. There seems, therefore, no escape from a most disastrous year for the government.—Chicago Chronicle.

Senatorial Salaries Big Enough.

It is a mistake to suppose that the salary of a Senator—$5,000 a year—will not support him and his family in a respectable manner in this city. Of course a Senator can spend any amount of money if he has it and wishes to do a good deal of elaborate entertaining. But a man of small fortune coming to the Senate can get along very comfortably on his salary. There are Senators who have saved and invested $1,000 a year and have at the same time lived in a style not discreditable to them or their constituents.—Washington Post.

Calling Too Many Hard Names.

It is high time that a little more discretion was manifested in the application of hard epithets. To call a man an Anarchist may in time make him so, and persistently to call a man a plutocrat may ultimately drive out of his heart much consideration for his fellows that had place in it. The industrial problem cannot be solved by calling names, and men who believe themselves right are not going to be silenced by epithets.—New York Journal.

Prosperous Time for Trusts.

The Sugar Trust is increasing its wealth; the Glucose Trust, though young, is doing well, the Steel Trust is multiplying its resources and all other trusts are enjoying increased revenues under the operation of the new tariff law. But the records of the treasury tell a different tale. The customs receipts for this month will be less than for any month recently and the deficit promises to be upward of $16,000,000, the largest for a long time. But what's the odds so long as the trust magnates are happy?—Kansas City Star.

Beyond the Dreams of Despots.

Overtaxation has been the bane of governments since the earliest history of the world. It has overturned empires and created republics. Yet an examination of the expenditures of the nations shows a wonderful increase in modern times. It shows that when the taxing power is intrusted to the representatives of the people themselves they go beyond the utmost dream of ancient despots.—Milwaukee Journal.

Running Too Much to Militancy.

The increase of militancy is to be studied as a sign of the times to come in connection with other signs. But it is not to be studied as an outgrowth and a guarantee of political or any other kind of freedom. An increase of militancy is certain in the long run to destroy both political and individual freedom. History does not teach any truth more plainly or persistently than this.—Rochester (N. Y.) Herald.

Something Not Yet Explained.

The connection between dollar wheat and the new tariff law is not quite as obvious as it might be to some of us but of course it must exist and it will doubtless be made perfectly plain when the Republican stump speakers get to work this fall.—Providence Journal.

Brief Comment.

If many protected Republican bosses had not cut wages the phantom of dear bread would be welcomed instead of dreaded by thousands on this side of the water.—Kansas City Times.

It is very considerate on the part of Mr. Havemeyer of the Sugar Trust to warn the public that the heavy fruit packing season is likely to cause an advance in the price of sugar.—Milwaukee Journal.

The South has paid about $750,000,000 as a war indemnity in the shape of pension money since 1865, and before the last pensioner dies, if he ever does, she will have doubled that vast sum.—Louisville Post.

Mr. McKinley has settled it. The crops did it in the West and the tariff in the East. As between Providence and William McKinley honors are easy—in the estimation of the latter.—Minneapolis Times.

What has become of that advance in wages that was promised under the Dingley bill? The advance in the necessaries of life is here, but the boom in the wage market for some reason has been delayed.—Peoria Herald.

The latest ruling of the pension department to the effect that a marriage certificate is not necessary to make a valid marriage for pension purposes shows that the pension fund bunghole is still kept wide open.—Boston Herald.

The Crescent tin plate mill, in Cleveland, O., has fenced out its striking hands with barbed wire. Barbed wire is an ideal protection, and how beautifully it typifies the barbed wire tariff which keeps out of the country even the skins of foreign calves!—Philadelphia Record.

The printing and binding scandals that were unearthed during Drake's term are enough to damn the Republican party of Iowa as effectually as the expose of the rottenness in Republican circles in Nebraska has damned that party in this State.—Omaha World-Herald.

John Sherman is to appear on the stump in Ohio this fall. In shoving the old gentleman out of the Senate to let Mark Hanna in and then forcing him to tell the Buckeye voters that the transaction was O. K., the Republican leaders are going to the extreme of imposition.—Manchester (N. H.) Union.

There does not seem to be any sufficient virtue left in the Republican party to enable it to escape unassisted from the tangle of corruption and extravagance in which it has become involved. It is the mere plaything of self helping schemers who use it for their own advantage and advancement.—Philadelphia Record.

A RAILROAD 36 MILES LONG.

Defies the State of Georgia and Railroad Commission.

There is an obdurate little railroad in Georgia which has not only shown a disposition to fight all the rest of the State, but which seems serenely confident that it will win. It is only thirty-six miles long and runs from Dublin to Tennille. Its name is the Wrightsville and Tennille Railroad, and it is especially distinguished for its prosperity and its pugnacious qualities. Last year the cotton growers along the line of this road were compelled to ship their cotton over the Georgia Central because the road refused to issue through bills of lading over any other line. Some of the growers wanted to ship their cotton over the Augusta Southern, but the Wrightsville and Tennille refused to give them through bills over that line, and made no pretense to disguise their preference. The result was that the Georgia Central got nearly all the cotton and the Augusta Southern got left.

The matter was carried before the railroad commission, and that body handed down a decision ordering the Wrightsville and Tennille Railroad to issue through bills of lading over all railroads and not to play any favorites. The commission also ordered the Attorney General of the State to begin proceedings for damages against the recalcitrant railroad and to try the issue involved before the State courts. Attorney General Terrell has prepared his case and will go down to Dublin to try it before Judge Hart. The defense will be represented by former Senator A. F. Daly, of Wrightsville. Not only is the right of the State to manage its railroads involved in the trial of the case, but the Interstate Commerce Commission is interested as well. The line of the Georgia Central runs entirely through the State, while the Augusta Southern line—the destination of both being Savannah—carries the freight north to Hamburg and then south over the Port Royal route through South Carolina. This brings up the Interstate Commerce Commission question, and not only the railroad people of Georgia but the cotton growers as well are deeply interested in the result of the legal contest.—Atlanta Constitution.

Elephant's Shower Bath.

The elephant, in a wild state, is a nocturnal animal, rarely, if ever, stirring in the daylight from his haunts in the shady forest, and, when domesticated and compelled to work or travel in the day time, his enormous size and dark color cause him to be a great sufferer from heat. To relieve himself the animal has contracted the habit of withdrawing from his stomach a quantity of water by means of his trunk, which he then squirts over his back and sides in order, by its evaporation, to cool his skin. As this process is repeated on an average of once in every five minutes, and as the elephant's aim is not good, his efforts to keep cool cause considerable inconvenience to his riders, who are frequently sprinkled by the water, though the fluid is quite clear and has no offensive odor. The habit is acquired in domestication, for it is not known to be practiced by elephants in the wild state, and is altogether one of the most singular in natural history.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

AN OPEN LETTER

From Miss Sachner, of Columbus, O., to Ailing Women.

To all women who are ill:—It affords me great pleasure to tell you of the benefit I have derived from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I can hardly find words to express my gratitude for the boon given to suffering women in that excellent remedy. Before taking the Compound I was thin, sallow, and nervous. I was troubled with leucorrhœa, and my menstrual periods were very irregular. I tried three physicians and gradually grew worse. About a year ago I was advised by a friend to try Mrs. Pinkham's Sanative Wash and Vegetable Compound, which I did. After using three bottles of the Vegetable Compound and one package of Sanative Wash, I am now enjoying better health than I ever did, and attribute the same to your wonderful remedies. I cannot find words to express what a Godsend they have been to me.

Whenever I begin to feel nervous and ill, I know I have a never-failing physician at hand. It would afford me pleasure to know that my words had directed some suffering sister to health and strength through those most excellent remedies.—MISS MAY SACHNER, 348½ E. Rich St., Columbus, O.

A Cat that Dives for Fish.

Most cats are afraid of water, but the tabby mascot that sails the seas on board her Majesty's ship Pallas is an exception. This cat has more of the habits of a muskrat than of the animals of its own kind. From kittenhood it has had a marked fondness for water, and improves nearly every opportunity to swim and dive. Like all cats, it likes the flesh of fish, and does not wait for the cook to serve it. It has contracted the unique habit of diving off the side of the vessel whenever it wishes a fish dinner, and seldom comes to the surface without a good-sized fish in its mouth. It hunts its water game in much the same way that an ordinary cat hunts mice. Crouching on the deck, it peers over the side, ready to spring when its prey swims along, and then dives with unerring accuracy. This distinctively sailor cat is the pet of the officers and crew, and is regarded as the ship's mascot. Its fame has spread throughout her Majesty's realm, and crowds collect to watch its antics wherever the ship goes into port.

David Cain, an 80-year-old Milbridge, Me., hunter, got cold last winter in riding from Beddington to Milbridge on his return from a trip after deer, and had pneumonia. This year he determined to run no risk, so he walked the twenty-five miles. He says he was not very tired when he got home, and thinks this is much better than riding.

In southeast Louisiana, on the Southern Pacific Railroad, a syndicate of Northern men has purchased a large body of land and will engage in farming on a large scale. The land was under water, but has been reclaimed by scientific draining. It will be put in rice and sugar. The land is 100 miles north and south, and twenty-five miles east and west. It contains 1,500,000 acres. The fencing cost $50,000. The plowing is done with steam plows. Thirty acres are plowed in a day with the labor of only three men. Horses are only used by the cowboys who herd the 16,000 cattle on the place.

There are many places in Philadelphia occupied by business firms which furnish a standing puzzle to the community. Take, for instance, an imposing-looking haberdashery on Chestnut street. At all times the window is filled with neat neckties and the finest kind of hosiery and linen. Yet no one, as far as the general community is concerned, ever saw a customer enter the store and make a purchase. The store is itself a fine property and is well located. The same firm has been there for years, and how expenses are met is the puzzle. A certain restaurant in the heart of the city has an apartment set aside for ladies exclusively. The room is quite large and richly carpeted. The furniture is of the best, and the linen and crystal-ware are of the finest. A colored waiter stands with towel across his arm at the end of the room, but no man, so far as can be ascertained, ever saw a customer of either sex eating there. It has been conducted in the same manner for years.

Doctor's Handsome Fee.

Probably no greater doctor's fee is on record than that paid by Empress Catherine to Thomas Dimsdale, ancestor to the present Baron Dimsdale of England. For innoculating the Russian Empress and her son Paul against smallpox in 1768 he received $50,000 as a fee, $10,000 for expenses and an annuity of $2,500, while in addition to all this he was granted the title of baron. This was just thirty years before Jenner's discovery of vaccination, for which Parliament granted him $150,000 altogether.

OUR TOBACCO CROP.

THIS COUNTRY RAISES ANNUALLY 500,000,000 POUNDS.

In 27 Years This Has Yielded in Revenue $1,000,000,000—Leading Tobacco-Producing States—Spread of the Cultivation of the Plant Marvelous.

Romance of the Weed.

If, when Raleigh returned to England in 1565 with a package of tobacco and a pipe, any one should have foretold that in about three centuries the plant whose leaves he brought would have spread round the world, would be cultivated in every zone from the frozen regions of the North to the burning sands of the tropics, would form one of the most important sources of wealth to the farmer and manufacturer, one of the leading solaces of the world's misery and loneliness, that societies would be formed to prevent its use, that governments would derive a large part of their revenue from taxes laid upon it, that poets would sing its praises, and kings write books denouncing its use, that it would be the cause of a schism among the adherents of one of the world's greatest religions, that it would be used alike in the palaces of the rich and the hovels of the poor, that the naked savage in the jungles of

OLD CRONIES.

CULTIVATING THE WEED.

Central Africa would become as fond of it as the fur-clad savages of North America, he would have been deemed a crazy dreamer. Yet all these things have come to pass; the weed that to most animals is a deadly poison is consumed every year by thousands of tons.

As long ago as 1884, an estimate was made that 2,000,000 acres of the world's cultivated land were known to be planted in tobacco, with a yield of nearly 1,000,000 tons, while the annual consumption to each person, made and female, old and young, in the countries where statistics are collected, varied from 23 ounces in Great Britain to 84 in Holland. It is probable that the statistics of the acreage and the amount of product grown are far too small, since no account is taken of the millions of little tobacco patches in every country in the world, planted by farmers who raise only enough for home consumption, nor of the quantities produced in such countries as Turkey, Persia and China, where the collection of statistics is unknown, nor of the enormous quantities grown in the heart of the Dark Continent, where everybody smokes who can get anything to smoke. So if the estimated acreage was doubled, and regarded as 4,000,000 instead of 2,000,000, and the estimated crop were placed at 2,000,000 instead of 1,000,000 tons, the probability is that the figures would more nearly approximate the truth.

That a portion of the earth's surface, equaling one-tenth the area of Missouri, should be wholly given up to the cultivation of a plant that 300 years ago was practically unknown to the civilized world is marvelous enough to satisfy the most extravagant fancy, but that the use of a plant which does not allay hunger, which, of itself, is a rank poison to all the animals, should have spread all over the globe in a comparatively brief time, seems absolutely incredible, and suggests that there must be something in the qualities or medical properties of the herb which makes it not only universally acceptable, but everywhere craved as one would crave a necessity of life. For people may talk as they choose about the taste for tobacco being an unnatural and acquired taste; this may be true, and yet the taste is none the less strong for all that. The taste for alcoholic stimulants is also acquired, and every one knows its power. But whether used in the form of an incense to the goddess of ease or chewed to pulp while engaged at the various vocations of life, or whether enticed into the nostrils in the form of an impalpable powder, tobacco is alike enthralling to its devotees, and in each and every case binds them to its service as with shackles of iron.

In every nation where tobacco is used at all, that is to say, all over the world, smoking is the favorite method of enjoying the seductive influences of the weed, and a pipe the principal medium. It is true that among millions of the human race cigars are in fashion, but however elegant may be the cigar as a means of realizing the benefits of the incense drawn from the leaf, every one, even among the devotees of the havana, must concede that, so far as genuine luxury is concerned, the cigar, in whatever form, is infinitely inferior to the pipe.

Until recent years the United States has had but little reputation as a tobacco growing country. Of late, however, there has been a growing tendency to judge the domestic product fairly on its merits, and the sale has wonderfully increased. The Cuban war has also increased the demand for native tobacco.

The annual production of tobacco in the United States now amounts to 500,000,000 pounds; during the past 27 years $1,000,000,000 has been collected in revenues on this by the government.

The leading tobacco growing State is Pennsylvania, and there are a dozen others in which the weed is raised. The "seed leaf" is grown principally in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Connecticut, Wisconsin and Massachusetts; the "white burley" in Wisconsin, Illinois and Kentucky; the "bright leaf" in Virginia and the Carolinas, and the "shipping leaf" in Kentucky, Tennessee and Florida. Last year in Pennsylvania alone 64,500,000 pounds of tobacco were raised. The "seed leaf" yielded from 1,200 pounds to 2,500 pounds to the acre, and "Havana seed" from 1,000 to 1,500 pounds.

The peculiarity of Pennsylvania's tobacco is that it has a gummy leaf of close texture, which unfits it for wrappers. As a filler it cannot be detected by experts from the best Cuban fillers. A few years ago the acreage in the Keystone State amounted to 16,000 acres, but owing to a series of unfavorable seasons the acreage and the production both have fallen off. The tobacco plant grows four and one-half feet tall, and bears a leaf resembling that of the house rubber plant. Tobacco seeds are almost if not the smallest seeds in the world, and it said that enough to plant ten acres of ground can be held in the palm of the hand.

In Connecticut practically all the farmers raise tobacco. The Connecticut leaf is in great demand for wrappers because it is dry and tough, with just enough moisture in it to keep the cigar in flavor. The flavor of the Connecticut leaf is fine. Many who are competent to judge consider it superior to any foreign leaf. Connecticut was the first State to engage in the growing of tobacco for cigar leaf purposes. The lands along the river valleys are particularly adapted to the production of fine tobacco. For many years the entire market supply for domestic cigars was confined to a few hundred acres scattered through the valley of the Connecticut river. The "Conecticut seed leaf" or "broad leaf," is now used for wrappers almost exclusively, the portions unfit for this being used as fillers in connection with imported tobacco. The "broad leaf" variety is a stocky plant standing about three and one-half feet high. The leaves are from 15 to 18 inches broad and 24 to 30 inches in length. After topping there are about 16 serviceable leaves to the plant. Experiments have been made with "Havana seed," and this grows well in some localities, so that now Connecticut produces two distinct kinds of cigar leaves.

Fifty thousand of the 10,000,000 acres under cultivation in Ohio are devoted to the culture of tobacco. In fact, tobacco is grown in 53 of the 88 counties of Ohio. The greatest tobacco growing counties of the State are Brown, Darke, Montgomery and Noble in the southern part of the State, and Wayne and Medina in the north. The best Ohio tobacco is grown in sandy soil.

The expense of growing and harvesting is about $60 an acre, and other expenses coming in up to the time of marketing make a total cost of $85 an acre. Even at these figures the crop is said to be profitable.

About the first of April the seeds are sown in beds and covered with glass or canvas. The slips are transplanted the first of June into ground which has previously been fertilized. In dry weather the plants will require watering, but if set out after a good rain will take care of themselves. The growing tobacco plant is topped when the buds are developed and 12 or 14 leaves are left. It takes three or four weeks longer for the plant to mature. A warm and moist season is best for tobacco.

After the plants are fully matured they are cut off at the roots with tobacco shears. Then they are sheathed and taken to the drying shed. There the leaves are strung on a lath four feet long, seven or eight plants to a lath. The laths are hung across poles. Sometimes after harvest it takes ten months to get a crop of tobacco ready for market. After curing the bunches of tobacco must be stripped. The doors of the sheds are left open during a damp spell and the moistened leaves are taken down and stored in a cellar or some place where they will not dry out. Afterward they are sorted in the stripping room according to length and quality. They are then tied into "hands" of proper size, 18 or 20 leaves to a hand, and pressed in bulk until they are put in boxes for shipment. The balking room is kept cool to prevent sweating before the leaves are packed in cases. Three hundred and twenty-five to three hundred and fifty pounds is the weight of one of these cases of tobacco. They are often kept by the farmer until the tobacco has undergone the sweating process and then sold to the manufacturer.

AS IT IS IN THE EAST.

The tobacco crop of Illinois grows principally at the extreme ends of the State, the leaf used in making plug tobacco in the south, and the finer "Havana seed" for cigars, in the north.

In Florida the tobacco plant was first cultivated by the Indians, so that its history there goes back for centuries. In 1849 Gadsden County, Florida, produced 776,177 pounds of tobacco, and in 1860 the crop in that county amounted to 1,200,000 pounds. The old "Florida leaf" is much prized and of late years fine grades of Cuban tobacco have been grown.

In Vermont the proper conditions for growing tobacco are found only in a limited area along the Connecticut river. At present only about 80 acres are under cultivation. In New Hampshire tobacco is grown almost identical with that raised in Vermont.

"MY OLD KENTUCKY HOME."

The House Still Standing Where the Famous Song Was Written.

The house is still standing near Bardstown, Ky., where Stephen Collins Foster wrote the world-famous song, "My Old Kentucky Home." It is known as Federal Hill, the residence place of the Rowan family for almost a century.

In the late '50's, only five or six years before his death, Foster, then living in Pennsylvania, was invited by the Rowans to pay an extended visit to Federal Hill. On this visit his sister Eliza accompanied him, and the stay in old Kentucky, as Foster often said, was one of the most pleasant periods of his life. Surrounded by all that was beautiful, it was easy for the man who had given expression to so many soul-stirring Southern melodies—"Old Folks at Home," "Massa's in the Cold Ground," etc.—to compose the tribute to the mansion of the Blue Grass that will endure as long as Kentucky can produce a single voice capable of humming its sweet notes. It is doubtless probable that Foster composed the three verses of "My Old Kentucky Home" in quite as many days, and gave a fitting musical expression to the words employed as rapidly as his pencil dropped the lines. He was inspired alike by the beautiful sunshine of the mornings and the yellow moonlight of the nights that fell upon Federal Hill, by the waving golden grain, the hush of the corn, the negroes performing their duties, the lazy little darkies in the cabins, and finally by the warblings of the mocking bird, the thrush's mellow song and the fife-like notes of the Kentucky cardinal, made world renowned by James Lane Allen; and the writing of the undying verses must have been a labor of love.

"My Old Kentucky Home" is characterized by melancholy. Foster seems to have had a presentiment that the days of slavery were numbered, and although a Northerner by birth regretted in his song the coming of the day when the darkies would "sing no more by the glimmer of the moon, on the bench by the old cabin door." The song complete is as follows:

The sun shines bright on my old Kentucky home;
'Tis summer, the darkies are all gay;
The corn top's ripe and the meadow's in the bloom,
While the birds are making music all the day;
The young folks roll on the little cabin floor,
All merry, all happy, all bright;
By'm by hard times comes a-knocking at the door—
Then, my old Kentucky home, good night.

Chorus—
Weep no more, my lady; oh, weep no more to-day;
We'll sing you one song for the old Kentucky home;
For our old Kentucky home, far away.

They hunt no more for the 'possum and the coon,
On the meadow, the hill and the shore;
They sing no more by the glimmer of the moon,
On the bench by the old cabin door;
The day goes by like a shadow o'er the heart,
With sorrow where all was delight;
The time has come when the darkies have to part,
Then, my old Kentucky home, good night.

The head must bow, and the back will have to bend,
Wherever the darkies may go;
A few more days and the trouble all will end,
In the field where the sugar canes grow.
A few days more to tote the weary load—
No matter, it will never be light;
A few more days till we totter on the road;
Then, my old Kentucky home, good night.

Under Obligation.

The late Ferederick Locker-Lampson relates in his autobiographical "Confidences" that his uncle used to say that "you could not widen the mouth of a Locker without injury to his ears." One day at Malta this frank old gentleman asked a stranger who had just landed to take wine with him, and expressed his obligation for the favor by saying: "Yesterday, sir, I was the ugliest man in all Malta!"

Never go to a lawyer when you want assistance in settling a fuss.

Paul Revere's Weathercock.

You remember, of course, all about Paul Revere and his wonderful ride:

"Listen, my children, and you shall hear
Of the midnight ride of Paul Revere."

Well, some workmen have just been taking down a funny old weather cock from the steeple of an ancient Methodist Church in Watertown, Mass. It was over two feet high, with a pewter body and a copper tail, and tradition says that it was made by Paul Revere when he was a young man. It will be preserved by the historical society of the town, and if you ever make a visit there you may pay your respects to Paul Revere's weather cock.

His Idea of It.

An old Sussex farmer visiting London for the first time was taken into St. Paul's Cathedral. He stared about him in amazement, and his astonishment at the magnitude of the building seemed too great for utterance.

It was only when he stood under the dome and gazed down the vast nave and up to the dim and misty roof that his admiration at last found vent in words:

"My! what a foine barn this 'ud make!"

Not Up to Expectations.

"I'm disappointed in that new grocer who has started up in the brick store around the corner," said Mr. Pneer. "I don't believe he'll succeed in this neighborhood."

"What have you noticed about him?" inquired the man next door.

"Well," rejoined Mr. Pneer, "I went into his store this morning and bought 5 cents' worth of tobacco. I had my little girl along and he didn't give her any stick of candy."

Mere Bundles of Nerves.

Some peevish, querulous people seem mere bundles of nerves. The least sound agitates their sensoriums and ruffles their tempers. No doubt they are born so. But may not their nervousness be ameliorated, if not entirely relieved? Unquestionably, and with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. By cultivating their digestion, and insuring more complete assimilation of the food with this admirable corrective, they will experience a speedy and very perceptible gain in nerve quitude. Dyspepsia, biliousness, constipation and rheumatism yield to the Bitters.

The Murderer's Wish.

A condemned murderer wrote the following letter from jail to his family: "I suppose the boys have all grown to manhood since I have been confined here. If my lawyer is still living please hunt him up and tell him I am curious to know how my new trial comes off before I die. I know that the judge who sentenced me must have long since passed to his reward, but my lawyer, who was a young man at the time, may still be living."

SAPOLIO

IS LIKE A GOOD TEMPER, "IT SHEDS A BRIGHTNESS EVERYWHERE."

I know a lady who was troubled with what her doctors termed intestinal indigestion. Her last doctor had her pursue the Salisbury treatment, which consists of eating only beef and bread dried in the oven and drinking all the hot water she could. I have seen her in the office where she is employed walk along with a glass filled with water steaming hot. The Salisbury treatment did give her some relief and she persisted in it for three months. It was then that she was induced to try Ripans Tabules, and now she finds that there are many eatables (chicken for instance) which she was not allowed to eat at first which she can now eat without distress. She says Ripans Tabules seem to counteract the acidity of her stomach. Their effect upon her has been wonderful and the relief she gets is as much as she ever experienced with the Salisbury treatment, and she can now choose from a more liberal bill of fare.

A new style packet containing ten Ripans Tabules in a paper carton (without glass) is now for sale at some drug stores—for five cents. This low-priced sort is intended for the poor and the economical. One dozen of the five-cent cartons (120 tabules) can be had by mail by sending forty-eight cents to the Ripans Chemical Company, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York—or a single carton (ten tabules) will be sent for five cents.

CHICAGO TO SALEM ORE

A Descriptive Letter From Rev. W. D. Trover

SALEM ORE. Aug 20, 1897.

DEAR WIFE AND DAUGHTER: We left Chicago August 12th, over the Chicago and Rock Island route to Colorado Springs. We chose to change coaches at Hammond August 14. Passing down Big Sandy, along which are several large cattle ranches, passing these we are in the foot hills of the Rocky Mountains. At Colorado Springs we are 35 miles from Cripple Creek where last month a million of gold was mined; from these springs we go to Pueblo, a pretty little city abating something for its peculiarties which are quite interesting to eastern tourists. From Pueblo we enter the Rockies passing through the Grand Gorge and large Canyons, the scenery beggars description. The peaks of mountains to me appeared about two to 5 miles distant, but I was assured they were from 20 to 25 miles. We passed three mountains, named, Harvard, Yale, and Princeton, these are very large and beautiful; on and up we go to Salida, a railroad town in mountain pass. This pass is very fine, our altitude here is 7000 feet above sea level. We pass into Brown's Canyon on to Leadville. Here the graveyard looks larger than the town. Our altitude is now 10,200 feet. On, still climbing toward the clouds, we come to Tennessee Pass, at an altitude of 10,418 feet. All about us are towering mountains reacing above us 8000 to 12000 feet; all along the sides of these mountains we could see snow. We looked into these snow banks under sweating brows. The grades are so steep that it seems the great strength of the two engines hitched to our train are almost inadequate to the task of pulling us along; after each ascent, however, we dashed along at the rate of forty to forty-five miles an hour. We come to what they called the Golden Gate, here is a ledge of rocks about 15 to 20 feet at the base reaching out from the mountains' side 200 or 300 feet, measuring next the railroad 1700 feet in height, this rock tapers from base to top; on its peak overhanging us, is placed a flag staff 20 feet long, to me it did not look over one foot in length. The man who placed it received for his service $600.00.

Here and there in these mountains are small pockets of land containing one or more inhabitants occupying huts of very peculiar architectural form. Remarks about them were various and humorous.

We are now descending to the base of the Rockies where the Blue Mountains start, our engines have all they can do to hold us back. At one point it required 30 minutes to travel 7 miles, so very steep that had the train gained the least advantage, we would have been precipitated, no one could have told where.

We are now in the Blue Hills. Land pockets larger and living chances appear more hopeful, the principal timber in sight is sage brush averaging from one to three feet.

We are in Utah, more tillable land in sight. I see no place where I would like to live. We come to Salt Lake City, it is built down in the lowest part of the valley; as I look at it from the railroad there is nothing attractive or desirable as a place in which to make a home. If it were truly christian, I would have no desire to have a home in it. We saw the great temple and city hall, these were all the buildings we could see in the least imposing or artistic. I am very certain the descriptions we have read of the place are overdrawn.

Out of the Blue Mountains into the sand hills and deserts, here and there some boulders lying on the sand, and rocks projecting from the hills. At last we roll into Ogden where we lay over eight hours and thirty minutes. We have left a distance behind us of 1889 miles. 10:30 o'clock we start for Portland, a distance of eight hundred miles. We travel through much land eligable for farming, but quite sandy with now and then streams of water. On these sandy plains I noticed quite a number of improvements. By irrigation they are enabled to reap harvests of grain and fruit. We strike another range of mountains with their land pockets etc.

We are now rushing on at a speed of 45 miles per hour, we turn the celebrated loop and on we come until the reach the Cascade Mountains, as in all the mountains, here are streams of water. We see various kinds of pine, large and small, some of these pines grow out of seams of rocks.

Along the valley in which we travel are lumber mills, logs are fluked to these mills down the mountains, a distance of 20 or 30 miles.

We have reached the Columbia River. This is a beautiful river and full of fish, the salmon are most numerous.

We are at Portland, Oregon, that is a pretty city with much good country about it in three directions.

At last we reach our destiuation at Salem, Oregon, August 17 at eleven o'clock. Salem is the capital of the state. It is a beautiful city located in the Willamette valley, a valley extensively beautiful and very fertile. The fall sown wheat was reaped some time ago; they are now harvesting spring wheat. The fruit is superior and abundant. Oh! the plums, peaches and pears. The court house is among the best in the states; the statehouse is magnificent, all the state buildings are fine. The weather is delightful, quite warm in the day, nights not so cool and refreshing as I had expected, people say however, this is an exceptional summer in this regard. Salem is a city of churches which indicates a high state of moral and religious culture as was well as refinment. I have not had time and opportunity to personally know much of the city and its habits, but I am very sure my children are well and favorably located. I would not, if I could remove them from this place.

Yours very truly,
W. D. TROVER.

THE BRIDGE FELL.

Saturday morning, M. Werntz began to tear down the old Seventh-st bridge and when but a few of the rods had been taken out, it suddenly gave a lurch and down it went, carrying work men and all with it. They clung to it to save themselves from falling under the timber and iron, and fell headlong into the water, which is pretty deep there. But it sayed them, and except a wetting there was no harm done. Charlie Rugman is making the excavation, and big blocks of stone are beginning to arrive on the ground to be used in the abutments. The piling is partly here, and if good weather holds, the bridge may soon be done.

SCARED HIM.

The Chicago Record is responsible for one of the best stories of Nat Goodwin's weakness for practical joking hat ever struggled into the light of publicity.

When John L. Sullivan was in his prime and was supposed to be the champion terror of the earth, he went to Chicago for a week. Goodwin was playing there at that time. The comedian, like every other man with a drop of sporting blood in his veins, admired Sullivan. He knew him very well, as the great actor and the great pugilist both came from Boston.

Sullivan was standing near a fancy bar at one of the hotels when Goodwin entered. The usual circle of admirers were at a safe distance from the mighty warrior, admiring him in awe-stricken silence. Goodwin pretended not to recognize Sullivan. He strolled over to the bar and asked in a loud voice, "Who is that big duffer?"

"Sh-s-s-h! That's John L. Sullivan," said the bartender.

"Well what do I care?" demanded the actor, and with that he walked over and brushed against the fighter.

Sullivan glared down at Goodwin and roared: "Say, who are you pushing?"

"Oh, keep still, you big bluff," replied Goodwin.

Two or three of the spectators fainted, and others pushed forward to save the actor's life. Before they could interfere Goodwin was driving right and left at the "big fellow," who was backing away, apparently frightened out of his wits. Most of the people who had been looking on ran for their lives, and never came back to find out that it was all a joke.

It is said that Goodwin made it a practice to assault Sullivan whenever he saw him, and the big fighter thought it was the funniest thing the comedian ever did.

LICENSE CASE.

There is a liquor license from Spencerville, that came before the commissioners Saturday, It appears that a young mad named Spitler advertised in one of the Garrett papers, and the people at Spencerville found it out, and now claim that none of the papers were sent to either Spencerville or St. Joe, and that there was therefore, no legal notice. They expect to keep the man from getting a license. It was continued till today.

LIKES THE DINGERS.

An Order From Texas for That Ever Popular Cigar.

Smithville, Texas, Sept. 6, 1897.

Mr. BARNS, Dear Sir and Friend:—I want a favor done for me at Auburn, and also had business with yourself, thought to kill two birds with one stone.

We want to take the weekly COURIER and have been so negligent about sending for it, that I am most ashamed to now.

I also want to get one hundred "Dinger Cigars" for Sam, as he likes them, I want to give him a surprise on the sixteenth, the first anniversary of our quarrelsome life.

I will enclose a P. O. order for the amount. Please give my love to Nellie and the precious baby, and tell Mrs. Barns our address, as I am sure she has forgotten it.

The fall rains have commenced now, and the weather is just splendid, I have passed through the heat of the hottest summer the state of Texas has ever known, and am enjoying perfect health Indeed we are both as well as can be. The R. R. men say of Sam that they can't understand him, as he has lost all of his crankyness and is in a fair way to become a saint.

But I can explain it all, he has such a cross wife he has to be good.

Well I must not take up a busy man's time with such gossipp, so with best regards, from Sam and self, I remain

Respectfully
ROSE B. PEPPLE.

WE ARE DISAPPOINTED.

We had hope that the proprietor of the Columbian Spring Bed factory would make it permanent before leaving us. No enterprise has struck our town with such promising unfoldings. The bedsprings surely have no equal, and when one is once used, no other will ever be sold into that house. They are so naturally restful and easy. No one can realize this till he actually tries one. Any man who has a clear conscience can sleep on these springs. They adapt themselves to the tired body. Who will take hold of this chance and not only keep the plant in Auburn, but give this section the advantage of using these excellent beds?

Free Scholarship.

Hon. C. M. Brown has received a letter from the Board of Trustees of Vincennes Unviversity, at Vincennes, announcing, that they will give a free scholarship to one student in each representative district in the state. It will save a student $20 to $35 a year. This is the oldest university in the state, as it was founded in 1806. Any one desiring to enter the University under this liberal arrangement should call Hon. C. M. Brown, Auburn, or write.

The Best Show

Saturday's Daily.

The Auburn ladies should be proud of the work they did at the entertainment last evening. It was what Barnum used to call "the best show on earth," and those present laughed and cheered till they could laugh no more. And it was all so nice and lady like. It was more entertaining than any theater. But few of the ladies were recognized, as the strange costume and black faces disguised them. As neat a thing as there was, was the song by Aileen and Helen Garwood. When they were call back, they sang an original song their mother had composed for them that day, full of hits and allusions for Auburn people and the Carnival. It was immense. And Laura Rose, Nellie Franks and many others had "solos" that were fine. There was sweet singing by many, but we cannot tell their names, and the speech on Woman's rights, was grand. "Hey Jenny Johnson" by one of the "solos" was a clever little piece of acting and well sung. Mrs. Martin's song has few equals and is alone worth the admission. We hope to recognize more tonight. Come and see the real "sunflower dance," "the cake walk" the minstrels and specialties tonight. It will never be here again. The performers are among the most prominent ladies of Auburn, and they will surprise you by their ability as singers and actors, in costume.

North Manchester Fire

Thursday's Daily.

When we went to press last evening the fire was still burning, but was gotten under control at about 6 o'clock. The fire started in Dunbar & Mathews' butter tub factory and quickly spread to Noftger's foundry. Ulrey's store room, Straus & Roby's factory, the Big Four and Wabash depots and several barns. On account of the low, water pressure the fire could not be controlled with assistance sent from Wabash. Loss $70,000; insurance $30,000. Two hundred men are thrown out of employment.

Ax Found.

It will be remembered that burglars got into the residence of J. W. Baxter last Friday night and on being discovered, made their escape. Recently an ax was found at the rear of the house, and as it does not belong to him, Mr. Baxter is ready to deliver it up to the owner, if one can be found. It was probably stolen from some other place in town to be used in breaking into the house if needed. If our readers have lost an ax, go look at this one.

THE PERRY FAIR CASE.

A lot of witnesses have been summoned to go to Angola next week, to be present at the trial of Perry Fair. Deputy Platter has to go up also, and the chances are that not one of the number will get to see the Carnival a minute. And they feel pretty hot about it, but it can't be helped. Business is business, especially court business. Judge Watkins, who tries the case, says next week is the only time he can spare.

ONE CHURCH FOR BOTH.

(Chicago Chronicle)

The Memorial Baptist church, on Oakwood boulevard, has services not only for Baptists, but, for Jews. Rev. L. A. This arrangement has been in force for a year, and seems satisfactory to all parties concerned.

ELECTRIC BITTERS.

Electric Bitters is a medicine suited for any person, but perhaps more generally needed in the Spring, when the languid exhausted feeling prevails, when the liver is torpid and sluggish and the need of a tonic and alterative is felt. A prompt use of this medicine has often averted long and perhaps fatal bilious fevers. No medicine will act more surely in counteracting and freeing the system from the malarial poison. Headache, Indigestion Constipation, Dizziness yield to Electric Bitters. Only fifty cents per bottle at Robbins & McCord's Drug Store.

ROLLA TEFFT

As a Diamond Salesman,

Married a Society Girl of Greenville and Was Arrested For a Hotel Robbery

(Cincinnati Enquirer.)

Greenville, Ohio, September 15:—William L. Windsor, chief of the detective force of Harrisburg, Penn., this morning left for the latter place with Rolla M. Tifft, alias Miller, alias Evans, alias R. R. Hays, alias Vernon Templeton, alias Ralph M. Tilton, &c. He is wanted at Harrisburg for stealing $325 from the proprietor of the Hoffman House at Harrisburg. The police say he has done time at the Ohio Penitentiary for a job at Dayton.

He has made Darke County his rendezvous. A week after his wife, who was a noted character, died, Miss Bessie Curtis, a well-known society girl, eloped with him to Covington, Ky., where they married August 1. She surprised her friends by telling them she had married Robert R. Miller, a traveling salesman for a Philadelphia diamond house. Miller was not not known here by that name, and she had MET HIM BY CHANCE.

On the evening of their departure to Eastern summer resorts to spend their honeymoon the bride's friends were at the depot in great numbers armed with rice, old shoes, &c, to give the happy couple a jolly farewell. They were disappointed. The bride and groom had driven to Union City and taken a train to Marion, Ohio. They saw, however, Detective John Welker "spotting" the train, and it leaked out that the husband was a fugitive from justice.

Welker had a photo of Miller, his full pedigree, together with a list of crimes for which he had served time, but, having no direct charge against him, he was only present to see the ex-convict and his bride.

The lady's brother in-law followed the couple and overtook them at Marion, Ohio, where they intended spending a few days with the wife's aunt. He pleaded with her, telling all the facts. The husband declared his innocence, and his bride declared she would stand by him.

That night, however, they left for the East. They returned to this city last Tuesday

WITH COLORS FLYING,

Diamonds flashing and smiles galore. He was just beginning to enjoy married life when Marshal Louis Holzapfel and Officer Bascom arrested him.

He was put behind the bars to await the officers from Harrisburg. His young wife accompanied her husband to the prison and insisted upon being locked up with him, declaring that she would share his misery. At 1 a. m. she returned home, but came back the next morning and remained with her husband in prison until he left for Pennsylvania.

THURSDAY'S STORM.

Reports from around Auburn are that no damage was done. But at Ft. Wayne the storm played havoc. The COURIER reporter was in that city after the storm and it resembled much the appearance of Auburn after the cyclone a year ago. Trees were blown down and scattered in every direction. Tin roofs were removed from many buildings, plate glass fronts were caved in, fancy iron decorations were blown from a bridge into river, telegraph and telephone poles and lines were down in many directions from Fort Wayne. Trees were blown across the railroad tracks, and it was only by careful engineering that no wrecks occurred. The Lake Erie passenger was however compelled to move cautiously, and in a cloud of dust a large tree was discovered on the track. The train was stopped so sudden that passengers were shaken up, but no other damage was done. On the Lake Shore tracks we noticed a couple trees down which barely allowed the train pass. At the Olds Wagon Works, one of the brick chimneys fell with a crash and went through the roof. Three men were caught with the falling brick and seriously injured.

A $5 Peanut

The queerest race or bet ever recorded for Auburn was one that was worked up last evening. Two factory men at the south end were in a betting mood, and Wm. Bruns, the new boiler maker at the Auburn Machine Co. works, and Oscar Tincell, who is an employe at the Greenler factory, got up a bet. Bruns bet $5 that Tincell could not roll a peanut on the sidewalk from the Watson House near the Wabash Station, up town to the town pump in front of the court house, in six hours, the distance being over half a mile. The bet was taken, and the money put. At exactly 6:22 p. m. Tincell got down on his knees at the Watson House and started the peanut rolling. The "rules" were that the peanut must be rolled, not flipped along, and rolled by holding a toothpick between the fingers and then pressing the toothpick on the upper surface of the peanut, with a quick, forward pressure cause it to roll. It might not roll more than an inch at each movement, or it might roll several inches. A boy with a broom went in front of him and swept the walk free from dirt or obstructions, and parties with a lantern gave him the needed light, and watched to see that his work was honestly done. But he seemed disposed to hold himself to honest work, and in all the long trip, there was no indication that he wanted to cheat. A crowd soon gathered to see the novel sight and this kept up till the weary race was over. Of course it was hard work. He had leather pads on his knees and whenever there was a grass plat at the side of walk he would guide the peanut over to that edge, so he could kneel on the grass. At 9:35 he had passed the pump, and Mr. Bruns, who was then present, told him to stop. He at once arose, put the peanut and toothpick in his pocket and calmly walked home. The little "goober" had helped him to $5. Time 3 hours and 13 minutes.

COMPLETED THE LIST.

H. H. Hanna Names the Members of the Monetary Commission.

Hugh H. Hanna, Chairman of the Monetary Executive Committee, announces the completion of the commission. The commission completed is as follows: Ex-Senator George F. Edmunds, Vermont; Charles S. Fairchilds, New York, ex-Secretary of the Treasury; C. Stewart Patterson, Philadelphia, President of the Monetary Convention last January; J. W. Fries, Salem, N. C., head of the great cotton industry which bears his name; T. G. Bush, Anniston, Ala., President of the Mobile and Birmingham Railroad, largely interested in iron industries; George E. Leighton, St. Louis, retired manufacturer; W. B. Dean, St. Paul, wholesale hardware merchant; R. S. Taylor, Fort Wayne, lawyer; Louis A. Garnett, San Francisco; Prof. J. L. Laughlin, Chicago; Stuyvesant Fish, New York, President of the Illinois Central Railroad.

While no attention was paid to political leanings, it happens that it contains six Republicans and five Democrats.

FORWARD MOVEMENT

Is Noticeable in All Branches of Trade and Business.

R. G. Dun and Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says:

"The end of the bituminous coal strike and the return of many thousand men to work at advanced wages adds to the purchasing power of the people, and the anthracite strike affects not a fifth as many workers. The starting of many mines and works, enormous exports of wheat and corn, favorable news as to those crops and cotton, fall in sterling exchange, and the reports showing that the gold imports began in August exceeded the exports by $2,390,587, while the merchandise exports exceeded the imports by $40,953,753, all contributed to a forward improvement in business. The replenishment of stocks can not be half finished. The wheat market declined over 5 cents on account of crop reports which promise larger prosperity, and corn and cotton are both a little lower for like reasons."

LEVEL HEADED.

John Harp Knows Whereof He Speaks.

John Harp, of the Imperial Customs Service at San Tien San, has arrived at New York on a fifteen months' furlough. Mr. Harp says that when he left Shanghai some weeks ago it was not seriously thought that there will be any war between the United States and Japan. Should such a war break out, said Mr. Harp, the Japanese could not hope to succeed against a great country like the United States, as the finances of the former would soon give out. The Japanese are brave and they have a good navy. At first they might win a few battles, but they would before long have to yield before the prolonged struggle which the inexhaustible resources of the United States would enable them to maintain.

RETURN TO WORK.

Miners' Long Period of Idleness Is Broken.

After nearly three months idleness, between 15,000 and 18,000 coal miners in the Pittsburgh district have returned to work in accordance with the action taken at their late convention, authorizing the men to resume work in all the mines complying with the provisions of the scale of 68 cents adopted at Columbus. The remainder of the 23,000 miners of this district will be at work before long. It is estimated that the strike, which lasted sixty-five working days, cost the people of the Pittsburgh district from $5,000,000 to $7,000,000. Of this amount the miners lost about $2,250,000 in wages.

Convicts Escape.

Three Columbus, Ohio, Penitentiary prisoners appeared in the guard room and, leveling revolvers at Capt Saxbe, attempted to escape. A fight ensued. Two of the prisoners, Botts and Clark, got away. Lincoln, the third prisoner, was held. Ben James, a substitute guard, was shot twice. Botts is from Lucas and Clark from Cuyahoga County.

Within a very few weeks Capt. Oberlin M. Carter, at present military attache of the United States embassy at London, will be court-martialed on the charge of discrepancies in his accounts as engineer officer while for some time stationed at Savannah, Ga.

America Leads the World.

The total length of the world's telegraph system has now reached 4,908,921 miles, exclusive of 180,440 miles of submarine cables. Of this, Europe has 1,764,790 miles, Asia 310,085 miles, Africa 99,410 miles, Australia 217,479 miles, and America 2,516,548 miles.

GOLD AND DEATH.

Steamer Cleveland, from the Yukon, Brings Gloomy News.

The steamer Cleveland with thirty miners from the Yukon and treasure variously estimated from $200,000 to $400,000, arrived at Seattle Friday night. Gloomier even than the advices of the steamers Portland and National City are the reports that the old Atlantic liner brings down from the north. Dawson and its tributary districts are hungry and demand food. There is a sullen note in the demand and the warning is to the transportation companies that continue to send rum to miners who want bread. The doors of the trading companies' stores at Dawson were closed and barred on July 26, for they had sold all their provisions. Unsheltered Dawson has a mild epidemic of typhoid fever and a few have died for sheer want of necessaries that their money could not buy. There has not been licensed physicians enough to care for the sick. The lack of food will drive hundreds from the country, and it is expected that St. Michael's alone will shelter fully 300 during the long winter. Nearly every miner on the Cleveland believes he has turned his back on starvation and reiterates the oft-told warning. The steamer Eliza Anderson of Seattle is probably a wreck near Kodiak and Puget Sound awaits in gloomy doubt for the confirmation of the disaster. The blockade of Skaguay has come to St. Michael's. There are nearly 500 men there unable to get up the river. The embryo argonauts hold meetings, but their protests and demands fall upon deaf ears. Ninety dollars' premium was paid for passage on the Hamilton. The summer output of gold has veen very light and there may be a falling off in the winter production.

WORK GIVEN MANY IDLE.

Labor Reported as Sharing in the Remarkable Revival of Business.

That labor is sharing in the remarkable business revival is shown by reports of New York trades unions that there is an increase over last year of 34 per cent. in the number of men at work. Granting that this ratio obtains throughout the country among industries similar to those reporting in New York, the increase would exceed 340,000. The rise of 5 cents in wheat during the last week seems not to have been due to a flurry, but in answer to the daily increasing foreign demand. The average advance for the week in sureties has been $1.12 per share for railroads and 79 cents for trusts. Bank clearings for the week increased 45.6 per cent. over the corresponding week in 1896. R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says, there's no halting the advance. Business grows better in all ways, for while its speculative end breaks conspicuous gamblers for a decline, a steady increase in production, in working force, and in the power of the people to purchase is the feature which overshadows all others. The farmers are helped by higher prices for wheat, and while Western receipts do not show that they have marketed a tenth of their crops, assurance of a handsome profit to come prepares them to buy liberally hereafter. Because of this and the increase of hands at work dealers throughout the country have started to replenish stocks, which is the great force at present operating in manufactures and trade, though distribution by retail trade has greatly increased.

No Plea for Mercy to Deputies.

Widespread as is the strike in the Hazleton (Pa.) region, there has been no concerted action by the men at the different mines. All the strikers are working for the same end—an increase of about 10 per cent. in wages—but they go about as separate clans. Some of them are raising a side issue about the company store, where they are subject to its abuses, but others have no complaint of this nature to make. At the Coxe Bros.' mines at Drifton, Stockton and Eckley the men are paid in cash. They had been uneasy, however, for some time and this uneasiness resulted in about three hundred men at Eckley joining the strikers. To a great extent the strikers have been restrained from open acts of violence by the priests, whose influence prevails to a remarkable degree. At several turbulent meetings which threatened to end in bloodshed the prelates have gone among the excited foreigners, commanding silence and forcing them back. They warn the men that to destroy the coal companies property is only to take food from their own mouths by shutting off future employment. The priests, however, have no plea for mercy to the sheriff's deputies who shot the men at Lattimer, and some of them are active members of the committee that is to push the murder charges in court. It is now certain that no attempt will be made to arrest the deputies so long as troops are camped at Hazleton. General Gobin's declaration that he will protect the sheriff's men just as long as he is in command has cooled the ardor of those who were for going about the matter hastily. The strike leaders and their attorneys deny the right of General Gobin to enforce such an order, but they admit that he has the power. District Attorney Fell, it is said, is against an immediate serving of warrants, though he is interested in the prosecutions.

But Seven Cases in the City.

New Orleans caught its second wind Monday morning and the breeze of excitement that prevailed Sunday morning subsided. At first there was a disposition to leave town, but when people summed up matters and found that there were only seven imported cases of yellow fever in the city, and that they had been warned as to six of them, they decided to wait until the condition should become aggravated before making a break for other parts. There was, therefore, no heavy outgoing travel and very little incoming. The natives have, contrary to expectations, not become frightened over the existence of yellow fever, and whatever depression exists is due to the fact that business, which was 30 per cent. above the corresponding month of last year, has received a setback as a result of the general institution of quarantine measures against this city. Up to the present writing the attaches of the board of health announce that there has been no change in the situation. There are still only seven cases. None has yet proved fatal, and the bulletins from infected quarter were of a favorable nature. It is daily becoming evident that the first case of yellow fever originated in Ocean Springs and that all other points have caught the infection from that place. Dr. J. H. Purnell, the Vicksburg yellow-fever expert, who found two cases of dengue fever existing there, proceeded to Palahatchie, and reports that all the sickness in Palahatchie was malarial fever, and that there is no danger from that point. At Biloxi, Miss., the condition of affairs as regards the fever is not materially changed from the former reports. Most of those sick are improving rapidly. The conditions of all are favorable.

Denial from Dwiggins.

Zimri Dwiggins says he has not now and never had any connection whatever with the firm of J. R. Willard & Co., and that the only business connection he ever had with his nephews is that they were at one time in his employ. He is now president of the Storm Lake (Iowa) Investment Company.

New Wrinkle in Roads.

In accordance with the desire of the Secretary of Agriculture to promote more extended experiments in the use of steel trackways on wagon roads, the office of road inquiry has made arrangements with the Cambria Iron Works of Johnstown, Pa., for rolling special rails for this purpose, these arrangements to go into effect as soon as definite orders from responsible parties amounting to one mile of track are received. The director of road inquiry and the engineers of the iron company, after much discussion, have agreed upon a plan of track which promises to meet all requirements. It uses no wood in construction and no cross ties for support, but consists of a simple inverted trough or channel of steel for each wheel, with a slightly raised edge on the inside to guide the wheels, each channel resting in a bed of gravel and the two tied together occasionally to prevent spreading. Special devices for remounting are provided at each joint. The tread for wheels is eight inches wide, the thickness about seven-sixteenths of an inch. The weight of the structure is about one hundred tons per mile of single track road, and it will be furnished in small sections at the rate of $3,500 per mile. The first order for track has been given by the New York State agricultural experiment station.

NOT FOOD BUT SHELTER.

Lack of Proper Housing Will Cause Suffering in Klondike.

Hope for those who have friends in the Klondike is held out by Frank Cryder, who came down on the steamer Humboldt, after having spent five years in the Yukon. He does not believe there will be any deaths from starvation, though he admits that food will be scarce. Cryder says that lack of shelter is a more serious condition confronting the miners in the gold belt than starvation. "An outfit that would last one man a year can be made to hold out eighteen months by judicious trading. Do not understand that I am advising any one to go there this winter. I am simply stating these facts to encourage those who have friends in the North. Lack of shelter will, in my opinion, be responsible for more suffering in the Klondike than will famine. It costs $1,000 for a fair log cabin already built and the time and labor in constructing a new one would amount to about the same. Where the newcomers with light outfits and empty pockets will lay their heads is an unsolved problem." As to the mining outlook Cryder declared that $25,000,000 will be taken this winter from the claims on Bonanza and Eldorado creeks, while from the Birch, Miller and Munook districts will be washed about $200,000.

APPROVES OF POSTAL BANKS.

Postmaster General Gary Studying the Subject Carefully.

Postmaster General Gary is devoting considerable attention these days to an investigation of the wisdom of establishing postal savings banks. When in the last Congress a bill was sent to him providing for such institutions he declined to indorse it because, as he said, he had not had an opportunity to investigate the subject. He has since taken up the matter, reading all the literature bearing upon it he could procure and seeking opportunity to discuss its merits with those familiar with it. The result is that he has become convinced of both the wisdom and utility of postal savings institutions and has decided to have a bill prepared providing for their establishment and to recommend its passage by Congress.

Weyler Asked to Explain.

News received at Madrid of the capture of the fortified town of Victoria de Las Tunas by the Cuban rebels has caused intense excitement. This victory gives the insurgents control of the province of Santiago de Cuba. It is believed they will make Victoria de Las Tunas their seat of government, and upon it found their claim to the United States for recognition of belligerency. The minister of war has cabled Captain General Weyler, asking for an explanation regarding the capture of the town, which is defended by seven forts, having two Krupp guns among their armament. The Madrid newspapers commenting upon the capture of Victoria de las Tunas, condemn Captain General Weyler. The Imparcial says General Joovoller was removed from his command for a similar disaster in 1876. It is pointed out that the strategical position of Victoria de las Tunas is important. The government has decided to act vigorously and to immediately dispatch further reenforcements to Cuba if necessary.

Green Stamps Coming.

The Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General, after a consultation with the President, have decided to change the color of the current 2-cent postage stamp from carmine to green of the shade now used on government notes. The 10-cent postage stamp, which is now printed in green, will be changed to some other color, possibly carmine. It is thought that green is a more desirable color than carmine, besides saving the government about $10,000 in the difference in cost between the two inks.

Meet in a Fog.

As a result of an attempt to send two electric trains over a single track at top speed in a dense fog, twelve persons were seriously and two in all probability fatally injured in a collision on the Suburban Electric road near Chicago. The accident occurred on Harlem avenue, not far from the race track, at a time when the trains of the Suburban road were crowded with passengers.

INDIANA LYNCH LAW.

DETAILS OF THE RIPLEY COUNTY AFFAIR.

Summary Punishment Visited Upon a Gang of Evil Characters—People Tire of an Extended Series of Criminal Acts—Gov. Mount Indignant.

Deed of Infuriated Mob.

The lynching of the five Osgood men at Versailles, the county seat of Ripley County, has, perhaps, no parallel in the history of Indiana. The prisoners were confined in the county jail on the charge of burglary. They all resided in the town of Osgood, and were supposed to belong to an organized band of thieves and highwaymen which has been robbing and terrorizing the citizens of Ripley County for a number of years. They were awaiting trial for having attempted to break into the general store of Wooley Bros. at Correct Saturday night. Gordon and Andrews were captured at the time after a running fight, and after each had been severely wounded. The other prisoners were detained on the charge of having assisted in the attempted burglary, and whose guilt seemed evident. Public feeling had been aroused against the prisoners because they had so often escaped the penalties of the law.

Sheriff Henry Bushing and wife were away from home. He had been badly wounded while trying to capture the men Saturday night, and the jail was in charge of his brother-in-law, W. T. Kennen, turnkey, and William Black. At 12:45 o'clock they were aroused by the ringing of the door bell. Kennen and Black went down and opened the door. Three masked men with a revolver in each hand confronted them. The leader said: "Hold up your hands! We demand the keys of the jail." Kennen looked into the muzzles of six revolvers, and after some resistance was taken to the kitchen and found the keys. Kennen and Black were locked in a cell and three men with revolvers made their way through the grating and others went to find the prisoners, who had all retired.

In the lower cellrooms were confined Levi, Shuler and Jenkins, and there the visitors proceeded first. Levi was first awakened, and, refusing to throw up his hands at the command of the leader, two pistol shots were heard, and he fell to the floor pierced to the heart. Shuler, lying on his cot, refused to get up, but begged for his life. A stroke upon the head from a heavy stick silenced him, and he rolled to the floor. Jenkins' fate was similar, and the three bodies were carried to the main corridor, and the lynchers made their way upstairs, where Gordon and Andrews were found. They, being wounded, submitted without much effort. Their hands were tied behind them, ropes were placed around their necks and they were dragged down the stairway where their companions lay. Ropes being placed around the necks of all the order was given, "Pull on the ropes, boys, and hurry up."

Hanged to an Elm Tree.

Two squares north of the jail on the bluff near the famous "Gordon's Leap" was found an old elm tree, and to its toughened limbs were hanged the maimed and bruised bodies of the five prisoners, naked and ghastly. The scene was appalling, and the bodies were soon cut down and covered under the shade of the tree. Hundreds visited the scene the following day, and hardly a twig of the old elm remains, having been carried away by the curious throng.

A man named Hostetter a couple of weeks ago had given a tip to the county officials, and through him the men were caught. He said they met and planned at Jenkins' house, and he (Jenkins) said he would help them out at any time, but how much, if any, they were implicated will never be known, as they were given no chance to deny or defend themselves.

Osgood had grown notorious the last two years on account of the many highway robberies and hold-ups committed there. Last winter an aged couple—Mr. and Mrs. Rineking—living north of town were tortured and robbed while alone at their home. The night of April 1 Mr. and Mrs. Baulkman, living six miles from Osgood, were tortured by three masked men, who demanded their money. They made the old lady, who was quite infirm, walk over red-hot coals to tell where her money was. They got nothing but a gun and a few trifles. The latter part of the same month Mr. and Mrs. Kammon of Milan were treated in a similar manner by masked men. The two Dr. Josephs of Osgood place were arrested, charged with the robbery, but proved an alibi and were acquitted without trouble. Men have been held up on the streets and houses without number broken into the last two years, but it seemed as though the guilty ones could never be caught. How much or how little these men were implicated in these robberies may never be known.

Largest Number Ever Lynched.

The hanging is a blot on the name of Ripley County. It is the largest number ever hanged at a lynching in the State and only the second rope execution ever in the county. Twenty years ago Tim Boyd of Moore's Hill, who was in jail for committing an assault, was visited by a mob and seventeen bullets shot into him, but nothing has ever aroused the people like this tragedy. People drove into Versailles from all over the county and groups stood around discussing it. Schools were dismissed and business is at a standstill. The families of the men are almost insane from the shock. The bodies were taken to Osgood and delivered to their several homes.

The sheriff received a message from the Governor to use all means in his power to apprehend the men composing the mob. However, it seems that the sheriff is powerless, as no means of identification of a single man has been obtained. The Governor, realizing this and also that the sympathies of the community seemed with the lynchers, sent Merrill Moores, deputy attorney general, to the scene of the lynching, with instructions to make a full investigation and spare no expense in bringing the lynchers to justice. The Governor condemned the lynching in the strongest terms. He further said in his dispatch to the sheriff: "Such lawlessness is intolerable, and all the power of the State will, if necessary, be vigorously employed for the arrest and punishment of all parties implicated."

AN HISTORIC BATTLE

ON THE FIELD OF STIRLING BRIDGE.

Anniversary of a Battle which was Led by Gen. Wallace and Fought by Scottish Patriots Six Hundred Years Ago.

September 11th was the 600th anniversary of the battle on the field of Stirling Bridge, Scotland, when the Scotch mountaineers, led by Wallace, retrieved the national honor. The event is prized in memory of the Scotch patriots because it was a conflict borne by the common people, the nobles having deserted to the enemy. Ex-Congressman J. B. White, of Fort Wayne, Ind., has received a poem commemorating the day, from his friend, Charles Waddie, of Edinboro, which is as follows:

ON THE FIELD OF STIRLING BRIDGE.

Six hundred years ago
Brave Wallace trod this field
What time the haughty English foe
Had summoned him to yield—
"Yield," said the priestly messengers,
"And let your warfare cease;
With all the rights the boon confers,
Lord Surrey sends you peace."

But Wallace answered clear,
"Go back and tell your friends,
Intent on peace we came not here,
But for far other ends,—
Not peace, not ought which there belongs;
But, gathered as you see,
Determined to avenge our wrongs,
And set our country free.
Your masters may come on,
We'll meet them beard to beard;
And we shall know ere set of sun
Which most has to be feared."

Poor Scotland! All her nobles then
Had lately her forsaken;
And Wallace and these broken men
Had to the mountains taken.
The love of country them sustains
Whatever ills forbode:
They were yet few—but in their veins
The life of Scotland flowed.

The English sometimes saw with scorn
The distant mountaineers,
And fancied them of hope forlorn—
Distracted by their fears.
But yet at times their spears afar
Gleamed on the mountain ridge.
These were the men that made the war
And fought at Stirling Bridge.

The English crossed the bridge in force
All clad in complete mail;
And gallantly they spurred their horse
The hillside to assail,
Where stood the Scotts—where Wallace stands
And views the field at large,
Beholds the bridge in Scottish hands,
And gives the word to charge.

With levelled spears the Scots descend
Like torrents from the hills;
The English, on their part defend,
And pride their bosom fills.
Their leaders gallop to and fro,
With banners raised on high,
Encouraging each fatal blow,
And shout their battle cry.

The battle closes, swords are crossed,
Loud clangs the flashing steel;
And soon before the Scottish host
The English horsemen reel;
They see their army cleft in twain,
The bridge possessed by foes,
Their ranks unmarshalled on the plain,
And fear within them rose.

Woe, woe to England! On that day
Unnumbered are her dead;
Yet stubbornly they stood at bay
Before they turned and fled.
Before them raged the river wide
The Scottish spears behind;
And many sought to stem the tide
A watery grave to find.

The battle fought for freedom's sake
Shall ever be renowned;
The deeds done here forever make
The landscape classic ground.
Heroic memories haunt each spot
Where'er our eyes we turn;
'Twas here that glorious Wallace fought—
There, Bruce at Bannockburn.

To Clean Lenses.

A very soft chamois skin is best for cleaning lenses, etc. If greasy, wipe with a little tissue paper wet with weak alkali. Lenses should be cleaned as rarely as possible; when cleaning, use old linen, not silk. A lens sometimes acquires a brown rusty stain on the surface, which no amount of rubbing or cleaning will remove. By applying a paste composed of putty-powder or very fine rouge and water to the stains, and then rubbing briskly with either the point of the finger or the side of the hand, every spot of rust or stain will be removed in a few moments. This applies to photographic or other lenses, except the object-glass of a telescope, which would be irreparably damaged by such treatment.

It Was Useless to Wait.

There were two passengers who sat facing each other as the train rolled into the station.

The aisle was full of suburbanites crowding toward the open doors, but these two kept their seats.

They were not in a hurry.

Finally one of them spoke.

"It won't do any good to wait, mister," she said. "I'm not goin' to forget this umbrell and walk out and leave it. I'm a little lame. That's why I don't crowd out with the rest of 'em.

With the look of an injured man the other passenger got up and made his way as rapidly as possible to the rear door.

Have You a Headache.

A noted physician has met with great success in his treatment of persistent cases of "nervous" headaches, and he has finally disclosed the secret. In each case, he says, after the patient had lain bare a long tale of woe—of sleepless nights and miserable days—he prescribed, briefly, a simple haircut. The curative property of the treatment is based on the fact that the tube which passes through the entire length of each single hair is severed in the process, and the hair "bleeds," as the barbers say, thereby opening a safety valve for the congested cranium.

A Queen's X-Ray Studies.

Queen Amalie of Portugal, who took up the study of medicine in order to diet her portly husband down to presentable proportions, has taken up the X-ray, and is putting it to a novel use. She has been taking pictures of the bodies of the various court ladies, and giving them lectures on the deformities corsets produce, illustrating with the pictures, which show the bones in their crushed state. This is hardly pleasant for the helpless court ladies.

CAMPING OUT.

Now that midsummer days are here,
And hours are long and skies are clear,
'Tis time to leave the crowded street
For distant woodlands cool and sweet;
There pitch the tent near by a brook
Where trout swim hungry for the hook,
There loaf and hunt and read, and live
In manner plain and primative,
Enjoying Nature as a bird
Enjoys her—every sign and word
Interpreting, until the heart,
Of Nature's own becomes a part.

Of rugged rocks an oven rude—
The hearthstone of your solitude—
Suffices well to cook your fish
And lend a flavor to the dish;
Or yet to send the fragrance up
Of spicy coffee from the cup.

What joy to waken with the sun
And find the fresh grass overspun
With webs of gossamer, and see
The sunbeams steal from tree to tree,
Dropping their gold along the way,
To guide the shining feet of Day!

Then when the breakfast hour is o'er,
To loiter down along the shore
With rod and line, and tempt the trout
From his retreat to venture out!

Perchance a book would best beguile—
Then lie down where the sun can smile
Upon you reading, prose or rhyme,
The wood-stream singing all the time,
Above you birds, around you flowers—
Heedless be now the flying hours!

Or distant mountain heights may urge
Your feet to find the dizzy verge
Whence, looking forth, the world you know
Liet outstretched in God's hand below,
And you, the master of it all,
A speck infinitesimal!

Ah, it is good just once to see
The finite with Infinity—
To see and feel and comprehend
A little the All-loving Friend!

Now back again, the fires are lit
And round the blaze the comrades sit
Exchanging stories, weaving tales,
Until Invention flags and fails.
Then Slumber calls them to recline
On fragrant pillows of the pine—
To sleep and dream and wake to be Grateful to God who made them free!

THE MOONSHINER.

Two horsemen were trotting slowly adown a narrow path that wound along the Kentucky ridge of the Cumberland mountains. Their horses were ridden out, and the men had but little to say. One of them hailed from New York. His face bespoke energy and a strong will, but the rugged features inspired little confidence. His companion, as could be seen at a glance, was an Englishman. The fair, ruddy complexion, the quaintly-shaped traveling cap, the long yellow gol-shes were not long from old England. The men had met by accident at a crossing of country roads, and being both bound for Glace City, in Virginia, they agreed to make the journey together. The conversation, anything but lively at any time, had ceased altogether. The New Yorker answered his companion's questions curtly, and lapsed into silence before they had traveled a mile together.

"GENTLEMEN, LET ME INTRODUCE YOU TO MY WINCHESTER."

"There is a house at last! It's as far as we can go to-day," suddenly exclaimed the American. "An old negro shanty, no doubt," pointing at a little ramshackle house, the roof of which peeped out of a cornfield. "Hardly decent enough to give shelter to a horse, but there's nothing else to be done!"

The two riders turned their horses into the narrow lane that led toward the house. When they were within 20 feet of it the door was suddenly thrown open and on the porch in front of it appeared the tall, gaunt form of an old man, with flowing beard and snow-white hair. His right hand clutched the stock of a Winchester rifle.

"Gentlemen," he cried—and there was a threat in his voice—"let me introduce you to my Winchester! The first who makes a motion toward his hip pocket will find himself with a hole in his ribs large enough to give passage to a yoke of oxen!"

The Englishman laughed heartily at this reception. "What queer people you Americans are!" he cried. "We've no desire to enter into an unfriendly argument with you!"

"Aha, you're a Britisher!"

"Yes, my good old friend, just over from old England."

"Your mate there looks like a tax collector in disguise."

The Englishman shrugged his shoulders, while the New Yorker introduced himself to the owner of the Winchester. "My name is George Deadmore," he said. "I'm a land agent from New York. Other people's business doesn't concern me in the least. I wouldn't know a moonshiner still if you held it under my very nose."

The old man made an angry motion and was about to send the intruders away, when Kentucky hospitality prevailed.

"Well, gentlemen, what can I do for you?"

"Show us the way to Glace City, that's all we want."

"Glace City is 50 miles from here. I wouldn't dare to travel over that deceptive path at the dead of night. You'll have to stay here till morning."

The guests dismounted and the hosts caught the reins of the horses and led them to the little shed in the rear of the house. There he unsaddled and fed them. When he came back he conducted his guests into the house, and invited them to a frugal meal, consisting of corn bread, bacon and a glass of whisky.

Next morning the Englishman awoke to find himself alone. His companion had departed before daylight.

"I didn't like to keep him," said the old man, "for I don't trust him; but I hope you will remain with me for awhile. My name is Walker, Col. Walker, and I haven't always lived in poverty. A beautiful country home stood on the site of this old tumble-down cabin, and hundreds of negroes worked in my fields. But the war swept away my house, my lands and my slaves, and weeds are growing where tobacco and cotton flourished. I was luckier than many, for I held onto the land, and I have good reason for living in this wilderness. That Yankee yesterday was not far out of the way. If it's unlawful what I am doing, the Yankees are to blame for it. They made me a beggar! But you, stay with me just a little while, you've no idea how lonely it is for an old man to be cut off from everybody."

The invitation was given so heartily that the young Englishman decided to accept it. He had come over to this country to study the land and its people, and here was a good chance to see a phase of life and a kind of people of whom he had read in books.

The days stretched into weeks, the weeks into months, and still the Englishman tarried. His days were spent in riding about the country, hunting, fishing and exploring the beauties of the Cumberland hills. On one of these exploring tours he came upon a little distillery built close to the edge of a mountain brook. It was here the old man brewed his "moonshine" whisky. The arrangements were primitive and quaint, but the Englishman never discussed his discovery with his old friend. At night he and his friend ate their frugal meal, smoked their pipes and reveled in the loveliness of the southern night. The old warrior told of the days before the war when the country teemed with prosperity, and the Englishman listened in sympathetic silence.

Suddenly their peaceful seclusion was rudely disturbed. While the stranger strolled through the forest on the hills a fusillade of rifle shots rent the air. They came from the direction of the little cabin. He hastened down and soon reached the clearing in front of the house. In his absence the old man had been surprised by tax collectors. Three of them lay dead in their blood at the edge of the corn field. Leaning against a tree stump the Englishman recognized his former traveling companion from New York. Col. Walker's rifle had done effective work. The riderless horses feasted on the tender ears of the corn in the fields. Nothing was to be seen of the old man.

The stranger, sick with fear over the terrible tragedy, stumbled into the cabin. There, ghastly white and with disheveled hair, lay his old friend. Blood trickled from several wounds, and formed little puddles along the floor. The blue jeans shirt rose and fell with the labored breathing of the dying man. He was unconscious. The Englishman knelt besides him, moistening his lips with drops of the burning liquid which was responsible for the tragedy. One bullet has grazed the left temple, another had shattered the elbow, and the third had penetrated the abdomen. The wound was deadly, there was no recovery from it. The wounded man regained consciousness and immediately recognized his young friend.

"These scoundrels have poured more lead into me than is good for my health. The New York chap gave me away. He sent the tax collectors after me. Well, he is dead, and I'll soon follow, but before I go I want to exact a promise from you. All my old friends are dead. They were either killed in the war or died soon afterwards, and I am sorely troubled about my little girl.'

"Your daughter?"

"Yes, my daughter. I have never spoken about her to any one. I sent her away to a convent in Paris. This rough, inhospitable life would not suit her at all. I intended to have her come home when the place was built up again. For her I stinted and saved and made 'moonshine' whisky. I never liked the business. It isn't fit for a gentleman. Now my daughter has finished her education and is coming here to see her old father again. She will not find me alive; but she will come into her own. There is $50,000 in the bank. And now, for the favor I'll ask of you. It's a dying man's request, will you fulfill it?"

"Yes, as far as is in my power."

"Then go to my daughter—and make her your wife."

The Englishman was dumfounded. He—to marry the daughter of a murderer. Had he forgotten that yonder in the grass lay three men whom he had killed?

"You are going to deny my request," cried the colonel. "I know what you are thinking. Have pity. In a few moments I'll be dead. Come, make haste. She is beautiful," he moaned, when the Englishman still hesitated. "Pure as the snow and highly accomplished. You need not be ashamed to call her your wife."

"Stop," cried the Englishman, torn with contending emotions. "Do not make my answer more difficult than it is. I am no longer free to give love. On my way over from Havre I gave my heart to a young girl. She gave me hers. I cannot break my word, for I love her passionately.

The dying man clutched the Englishman's sleeve. "Then take my orphan girl and let her live with you and your wife. Shield her from harm, and some day find a good husband for her."

"That I will with all my heart," promised the Englishman. "But tell me, where can I find her?"

"She does not bear her father's name. The stigma of the 'moonshine still' attaches to mine. She was called Josefa after her mother."

"And what was her other name?" questioned vehemently the young man.

"Turner—Josefa Turner."

"Josefa Turner, the girl who promised to be my wife. * * * your daughter!"

Like a drunken man he staggered toward a chair and threw himself upon it, burying his face in his hands.

The moments sped by and with them the life of the wounded man. When the young Englishman shook off the lethargy into which he had fallen he rose and went over to the spot where the old man lay.

He was dead, but over his rugged, wrinkled face lay the sweet light of peace.

New Economy.

A Tennessee community, apparently founded on institutes drawn from the precepts of Ruskin, has just established a college, to which they gave the name of that rhapsodist, at New-Economy, the town they have built up in the last three years. The community now numbers 213 and possesses property valued at $80,000. When it started each head of a family put in $500, and the increment represents what they have earned in the interval beyond their living expenses.

The settlement lives as a single family; its standard of value is an hour's labor; in its home commerce it has no money and needs none—a certificate that labor has been performed takes its place. A pound of tea costs eleven hours' work; seventy hours pay for a pair of shoes; two and a half for a pound of crackers, and so on. Everybody works and all—men and women alike—receive the same wages. They have heretofore worked ten hours a day, but expect soon to reduce it to eight. They have a kindergarten and adequate education machinery, music, languages and a limited technology being taught in addition to the regular branches.

The majority of the communists are agnostics. There is no church, but those who like can go to church outside. Of the great number of similar communities first and last founded in this country few survive. The most do not outlast a decade, and it would not be safe to predict a longer term for this one, though its institution of a college shows that it has so far no misgivings on that score.—New York Tribune.

A Racing Stable a Luxury.

A veteran turfman, in speaking of the expense of conducting a racing stable, gives some rather startling figures. One would want at least twelve horses, and these, if they are to be honest, fair racers, with some chance of success, would cost at least $75,000. This is a very low estimate, as is seen by the following figures. It cost August Belmont $92,500 for four horses—Henry of Navarre, $27,000; Hastings, $37,500; Keenan, $18,000; and Dorian, $10,000. In the same year W. P. Thompson paid $26,000 for Requital. After the purchase of the horses the next big item of expense will be a trainer, who will want at least $5,000 a year, besides his living, which will amount to fully $2,500. The trainer will also expect a percentage of winnings. No jockey worth the name can be secured for less that $7,500 per year, besides valuable presents and tips. In 1896 August Belmont paid Griffin a salary of $17,500. This year Fred Taral receives from Marcus Daly $18,000; while "Tod" Sloane, who is riding for Pittsburg Phil, gets $15,000. Fred Littlefield gets $10,000 from the Morrises, while Thorpe draws $8,000 for piloting the Bromley string.

India Rubber.

Caoutchouc is a milky juice, white as it flows from the plant, but darkening with exposure to the weather. It is commonly called India rubber, and is so useful and convenient an article that civilized people could hardly get along comfortably without it. It forms an important article of commerce. Mexico, Central and South America, and the East Indies are the principal places from which India rubber comes. The East India rubber is the juice of a species of fig tree. The South American product is taken from the syringe tree, which is sometimes as high as an eight-story house. To erase pencil marks is one of the uses of India rubber which will occur to you first, and then you will think of water-proof cloaks and shoes, without which you could not go out comfortably in stormy weather. But these only begin to be the list of articles which this obliging gum aids in constructing. Tubes, fire hose, elastic bands, mats, belts for machinery, door springs, etc., are made of it. Combined with sulphur it forms combs, canes, buttons, picture frames, brush backs and surgical instruments, and combined with sulphur and coal tar and polished like jet it is used to make beautiful ornamental jewelry.

The Champion in Frugality.

Guy, the founder of Guy's hospital in London, was as parsimonious in private life as he was munificent in public. A good story illustrative of this is told of him in connection with John Hopkins, one of his contemporaries, who was nicknamed Vulture Hopkins on account of his rapacious mode of acquiring his immense wealth. On one occasion he paid a visit to Guy, who, on Hopkins entering the room, lighted a farthing candle. Hopkins, on being asked the object of his visit, said: "I have been told that you, sir, are better versed in the prudent and necessary art of saving than any man living, and I therefore wait on you for a lesson in frugality. I have always regarded myself as an adept in this matter, but I am told you excel me," "Oh," replied Guy, "if that is all you came to talk about, we can discuss the matter in the dark," and thereupon he blew out the candle. Struck with this example of economy, Hopkins acknowledged that he had met his superior in thrift.—Medical Record.

The Fighting Bells.

One of the family of the "fighting Bells" of Augusta County, Va., has died at the homestead at Long Glade at the age of 80. He was Alexander R. Bell, one of five brothers who together had nineteen sons that fought in Capt. Cushing's company of the Fifth Virginia Regiment, Stonewall Brigade, and were nearly all killed in battle or died of wounds.

OUR BIG WHEATCROP.

HOW IT IS TRANSPORTED FOR EXPORT TO EUROPE.

Methods Employed on the Railroads, in the Elevators and at the Harbors—America May Export 200,000,000 Bushels During This Grain Year.

Handling a Wheat Crop.

The world's eye is upon the United States, looking for its wheat supply, and there is every indication that we will have wheat enough to sell to make us all feel rich and happy. Late in August and in September the heavy movement begins, and thereafter the grain goes to Europe in a constant stream, amounting in ordinary years to about 85,000,000 bushels, and it has run up to 122,859,336 bushels during this period. It would not surprise any of the more experienced wheat operators if the United States were called upon this year to supply the world something like 200,000,000 bushels of wheat. At 80 cents a bushel this would bring into the country $160,0000,000 in gold or its equivalent. Such enormous sums, however, are not earned without an enormous amount of labor. Part of this is that of the farmer, but another part, and one that forms a large share of the total cost to the consumer, is that of transportation.

The wheat fields of Europe fall so far short of feeding the people about them that hundreds of millions of bushels are drawn from sources thousands of miles distant. The three great wheat fields for this supply are our own, those of southern Russia, and the newly developed ones of the Argentine Republic. The total exports from these three countries last year were 270,000,000 bushels. In our great export years of 1892 and 1893 we had crops to draw upon of 685,000,000 bushels grown in 1891 and 580,000,000 bushels grown in 1892. Last year our crop was 470,000,000 bushels, and this year it is believed to amount to 575,000,000 bushels.

From the moment this crop leaves the hands of the farmers it is the subject of the operations of a set of clever men, whose calculations are made upon such an accurate basis that the manner in which it shall reach the seaboard and the ports from which it shall be shipped would be determined by a difference of 1-16 of a cent a bushel. As a result the method of gathering and forwarding the grain has been reduced to a science, and the cost has been brought to the lowest possible figure. Preparations for buying the grain are begun months before it is cut. Every buyer knows not only the exact acreage planted in the section of country where he operates, but also the entire acreage it would be possible to plant there. From week to week, as the crop matures, he gets telegraphic reports of its condition, and when it is ready to sell he is informed to the hour.

Formerly the operators were often hampered for cars in which to receive the grain, and this is so in some localities yet, but within a few years there have sprung up thousands of small elevators thickly dotting every feeder, as well as the main railroad lines in the grain regions. Some of these are mere roadside bins, where the farmer may drive up upon an incline and shovel his load out, but many of them have a capacity of 30,000 to 40,000 bushels and have an endless belt elevator, bins for different qualities of grain, and big hopper scales for weighing it. It is chiefly from these wayside storehouses that the grain finds its way into the enormous elevators at Chicago, Duluth, Superior, St. Paul, Buffalo and other railroad centers on the way to the seaboard, east or south.

The biggest elevators are those at Chicago and Buffalo, and the greatest of all grain routes is that over the great lakes to Buffalo. From Buffalo half a dozen trunk line railoads carry the crop to the sea. In adition to New York wheat is shipped from Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Newport News, Norfolk, New Orleans and Galveston. At each port are elevators in which the grain is received, graded, stored, and finally passed out to the ships which take it across the ocean.

Wheat is shipped in only one kind of car—the box car—for it must not be exposed to the weather. The standard size holds 1,000 bushels or 60,000 pounds. A few cars are made which hold 80,000 pounds. Regular grain cars have an inside door of light planking, which is hung on hinges that slide down rods set in the car, one on each side of the doorway. When this door is not in use it is raised to the ceiling, where it lies flat and is hooked fast. When the car is to be loaded it is run alongside a grain bin and a telescopic chute is lowered into one doorway. The grain doors are closed, a valve is opened and the grain pours into the car until it is two-thirds full, the regular load. The railroad contracts to bring the grain from Chicago and deliver it alongside a vessel anywhere in New York harbor for 20 cents a bushel. The car is run into the elevator structure there on the ground floor. A man with a crowbar pries up the grain door and the wheat comes rushing out and falls into a pit beside the car. There are iron gratings over the pit to keep out coarse objects and for the workmen to walk upon. Down at the bottom of the pit is the open end of an iron shaft, inside of which works an endless belt faced with steel cups set a foot apart. When the belt starts the grain is caught up in the cups and delivered in an almost unbroken stream at the top of the building, where the cups tip over as they start to return. In half an hour a car is unloaded and the last vestiges of grain are swept out and another car takes its place. All over the elevator floor are other cars unloading.

No wheat is loaded directly from the elevators into ships at harbor, but goes to them in barges. Beside the elevator lie tiers of vessels, built like canal boats. From the scales the grain comes pouring down 100 feet or more through chutes which end with steel telescopic pipes a foot in diameter. There are two or three of the chutes, and two pipes to a chute, and the pipes are pouring the grain into the hold of the barge at every hatchway. If a man were to hold his arm under one of those streams of grain it would be cut off as with a saw. In each hatchway of the barges is a man with his mouth and nose protected by muslin to keep the dust out. He is armed with a big wooden butter bowl, mounted on a handle. You think at first that he is going to shovel the wheat with this, but he knows a better trick. He places the butter bowl under the stream of wheat, and this stream, turned by the smooth rounded inside of the bowl, shoots off to one side just as a stream of water would, and the trimmer, by turning the bowl from time to time, sends the wheat wherever he wants it. A barge holds about 8,000 bushels. In an hour or less this is loaded, and then a tug takes her off to the ship.

A floating elevator lies alongside the latter. The barge ties up beside the floating elevator, a leg of an endless belt is thrust down into her hatchway and a dozen men shovel the grain up to the elevator to keep it supplied. In about an hour and a half the barge is emptied. The elevator does not deliver the wheat direct to the ship. Midway is another set of weighing hoppers, and it passes through these and is weighed before a second elevator carries it to a chute which sends it into the ship's hold. If there is a discrepancy between the railroad weights and the floating elevator weights, the railroad pays in cash for what is short or collects in cash for what is over. A loss of more than two bushels to a thousand would, however, require an explanation.

Woman and the Camera.

Miss Frances Benjamin Johnston, the photographic artist, writes, in the Ladies' Home Journal, on "What a Woman Can Do With a Camera," telling the requisites for artistic and financial success in the pusuits of photography as a profession. "It is a profession," she strongly contends, "that should appeal particularly to women, and in it there are great opportunities for a good-paying business—but only under very well-defined conditions. The prime requisites—as summed up in my mind after long experience and thought—are these: The woman who makes photography profitable must have, as to personal qualities, good common sense, unlimited patience to carry her through endless failures, equally unlimited tact, good taste, a quick eye, a talent for detail, and a genius for hard work. In addition, she needs training, experience, some capital, and a field to exploit. This may seem, at first glance, an appalling list, but it is incomplete rather than exaggerated; although to an energetic, ambitious woman, with even ordinary opportunities, success is always possible, and hard, intelligent and conscientious work seldom fails to develop small beginnings into large results.

"Good work should command good prices, and the wise woman will place a paying value upon her best efforts. It is a mistaken business policy to try and build up trade by doing something badly cheaper than somebody else. As to your personal attitude, be business-like in all your methods; cultivate tact, an affable manner, and an unfailing courtesy. It costs nothing but a little self-control and determination to be patient and good-natured under most circumstances. A pleasant, obliging and business-like bearing will often prove the most important part of a clever woman's capital."

Redeeming Multilated Money.

According to the present rule of the redemption division of the United States Treasury nothing less than fragments representing two-fifths of a bank note or greenback will be redeemed by Uncle Sam. "If that much of a note is presented the United States," writes Clifford Howard, on "Destroying a Million Dollars a Day," in the Ladies' Home Journal, "will allow the holder one-half the face value of it, while three-fifths of a note will be redeemed for full value. Of course, there are occasional exceptions to this rule.

"Some time since a man from New England forwarded a bunch of discolored paper money that he had found buried in a field. It had laid in the ground so long a time, and had been so generously feasted upon by worms, that it fell to pieces as soon as it was touched. It would have been utterly impossible for any one unacquainted with the secret marks that the government places on its bills to gather these decayed pieces of money together in their proper order; but some of the clerks in the redemption division of the treasury are particularly expert in sorting and deciphering bits of mutilated money, and through long years of experience are able to tell in an instant to what particular note or kind of note a certain scrap belongs. When the pieces contained in this bunch of old money were finally sorted and mounted it was found that while there was not one complete note remaining (not more than two or three scraps in some instances) the rightful owner was entitled to a redemption of four hundred dollars. Unfortunately for the man who found the money, he could not prove his ownership, nor could he make affidavit as to what had become of the missing portions of the notes. Consequently, the United States was the gainer in this case. Accidents of this nature are by no means rare, as is attested by the number of boxes of charred remnants of money which are kept among the curious records of the redemption division."

Speed in Walking.

"There's no end of persons," said a man who walks a great deal himself, "who think they could walk four miles an hour, and very likely they could, but they would have to move along very briskly to do it. As a matter of fact, very few indeed do walk four miles an hour; three miles is a very fair gait, and when one exceeds that he is beginning to walk fast. If my recollection serves the old common time in the army carried a man two and five-eighths miles an hour. The distances which the soldier covers in an hour have now increased somewhat by slightly increasing the length of his steps, but my impression is that the common time remains under three miles an hour. Certainly three miles would be good, fair walking, and fully up to man's average speed."—New York Evening Sun.

A HARVEST OF HUMAN HAIR.

Millions of Pounds Every Year Get Tangled Up in Commerce.

Perhaps there is no staple article about which less is known by the average person than human hair as an article of commerce. It will doubtless surprise many when it is stated that the dealers in human hair goods do not depend on chance clippings here and there, but that there is a regular hair harvest that can always be relied upon. It is estimated that over 12,000,000 pounds of human hair are used annually in the civilized world or adorning the heads of women. In New York city alone over four tons of this class of goods are imported yearly.

"Not a little of the hair used in this country," said a New York dealer to the writer, "comes from the heads of American women and is fully as fine in shade and texture as the imported article. We had a big harvest during the craze that the fair sex had not long ago for having their hair cut short. Many thousands of women who then had their locks sheared have since bitterly regretted it, as in many instances their hair has grown so slowly that they have been compelled to wear a wig or a switch since the fashion changed. After the majority of women reach the age of thirty the hair seems to partially lose its vigor, and if cut it will not grow long again.

"Two-thirds of the ladies nowadays use false hair more or less. The decree of fashion, or the charm, is the reason, of course. One woman, for instance, has a high forehead and wishes to reduce it in appearance. Another has worn off the front hair by continued frizzing, and would like to conceal the fact. Both make use of a front or top piece, with a choice of many styles.

"Ladies' wigs cost from $20 to $200. Half wigs, top pieces and switches, from $10 to $50, according to quality.

"The largest supply of hair comes from Switzerland, Germany, and the French provinces. There is a human hair market in Merlans, in the department of the lower Pyrenees, held every Friday. Hundreds of hair traders walk up and down the one street of the village, their shears dangling from their belts, and inspect the braids which the peasant girls, standing on the steps of the houses, let down for inspection. If a bargain is struck the hair is cut, and the money paid on the spot, the price varying from 60 cents to $5 in our money.

"A woman's hair may grow to the length of six feet. And I know a lady who has been offered and refused $500 for her crown of glory, which is over six feet long. A single female hair will bear up a weight of four ounces without breaking, but the hair thus heavily weighted must be dark brown, for blonde hair breaks under a strain of two and one-half ounces. There are some 2,000 importers, manufacturers and dealers in human hair in the United States.

also well known and highly esteemed in Washington, where he filled the post of German minister from March, 1892, to September, 1893. The mission was then raised to an embassy, and Dr. von Holleben was replaced by Ambassador Saurma-Jelisch. The new ambassador is highly educated and a most suave man. He speaks English with as much fluency as a born American or Englishman, and during his stay in Washington five years ago he won many friends in Washington society, where he was known as one of the few bachelors of the diplomatic corps. Dr. vol Holleben has had a wide and varied experience as a diplomat. He has represented Germany at Santiago de Chile and at Tokio. That was before his appontment to the American mission. He is about 55 years old and has an inclination toward the pleasures of literature. He will replace Baron von Thielman, who is to be secretary of the German treasury. Dr. von Holleben is now minister at Stuttgart.

Indian Vengeance.

In the course of his investigations a scientist has discovered the nature of a mortal poison which some of the natives of India employ to kill the cattle of their enemies. The poison is applied to little pointed rods inserted in the end of a short stick which can be concealed in the hand. Approaching the cattle, the poisoner slightly scratches them with the venom-charged points. The ends of the little rods break off and remain in the wounds which are barely visible. This poison is extracted from a kind of bean, growing on a leguminous plant known botanically as abrus precatorius. This poison is called abrin, and is almost as fatal in its effects as the most violent serpent venom.

Uncle Sam Behind.

It is strange that while this country is so far advanced in electric railways it should be behind Europe in the pneumatic tube system of transmitting messages and small packages. Some of the large cities in Europe, such as London, Birmingham, Paris and Berlin, have been provided with pneumatic tubes for messages for forty years, and they carry an immense business.

MORE HYPOCRISY.

The Dispatch is making itself ridiculous in talking about what it has saved the taxpayers in the way of printing. It never saved them a cent more than do all the county papers. The Burford Combine was on its last legs before the Dispatch had waked up or found out how much it had been stealing. The other papers had been fighting the combine for years. As to its remarks about "attacks made by the COURIER," that is all a piece of buncombe. The COURIER made no attack and has hardly noticed the truck the Dispatch has been regaling its readers with. True, when it began to offer to do legal printing at half price, we finally noticed that, and showed by the county and town records that it always had charged full legal rates and was still doing so, just as all the other papers are doing. The Dispatch is simply a hypocrite, and don't know enough to see the situation into which it has got itself. If the Dispatch really wants to be honest in this matter let it bid lower on the work it can and does do, like sheriff's sales and not bid down on work it knows it cannot get and on which it is therefore safe in making cut rates. We can show the Dispatch where it has charged fees in excess of the amount allowed by law. Before posing further as a pious reformer, working solely for the good of the taxpayers, let it show cause why this is thus. A "reformer" who is always shouting his own virtues from the housetops, will bear watching. As to the other work besides legal advertising, the Dispath is only doing what all other papers of all parties have for many years been offering to do, and been doing when they get a chance, namely to get work done less than Burford has been charging. If the Dispatch will snivel less and think more, it will be easier on the eyes and no harder on the brain.

AN OLD ENGINEER.

Run an Engine on the New York Central Forty-Three Years Ago—Cured by

Dr. WHEELER'S NERVE VITALIZER

GREENVILLE, MICH.—E. A. Smith, engineer for F. N. Wright & Co., this city, ran a locomotive on the N. Y. C. & H. R. Ry., 43 years ago. He can tell many amusing incidents of the rail in the early days; but prefers to speak of his recent experience with rheumatism, and relief secured from use of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer. Mr. Smith is well advanced in years and his trouble had been so serious and of long standing that it became constitutional. He doctored and took all the different kinds of medicine suggested for the trouble, without any benefit. Recently he was advised to take Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer; a nerve preparation which has been received with much favor in Montcalm County, and which has performed many remarkable cures. The effect of its use was highly satisfactory, not only in relieving his rheumatic pains, but also in correcting symptoms of kidney trouble which existed. It certainly is to be hoped that a knowledge of Mr. Smith's experience may lead other sufferers to use this valuable preparation.

Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer has many virtues not possessed by any other form of treatment. It is entirely free from morphine, opium, cocaine, and the stimulating drug, kola, which is so persistently advertised. Such drugs are ruinous and should be avoided as pernicious.

AFTER MANY DAYS.

November 26 of last year the farm residence of Leonard Hartman two miles west of Fairfield Center, was entered by burglars, and about $130 in cash taken. No clue was left by the robbers, but there has always been a suspicion that some one familiar with things in that neighborhood had a hand in it. And since then, Marshal Berhalter of Kendallville has been doing some pretty careful detective work. Gradually he has unfolded clue after clue, till he made up his mind he had the right man. Last Friday he managed to take into custody, Geo. Reed, whose home is in the section alluded to, and brought him to Auburn. Reed after some hesitation, confessed that he knew about the burglary, and said that five men had a hand in it. Three of the men he did not know, but he believed they were professional burglars whose homes are in Toledo, and thinks they work at their thieving, back and forth along the Lake Shore road. The fourth man, he said was Harry Martim who is also a Fairfield man. Martin, it will be remembered was not many years ago, owner of Myers' livery stable. After he sold out he went first to Kendallville. He is the man who had so many law suits with Geo. Baltz about the ownership of a farm he had traded to Baltz for the livery stable. After Reed had given the thing away, Berhalter got Sheriff Stroh to go with him Friday afternoon and arrested Martin and brought him here. On Saturday, Reed, who had been allowed to go home was arrested on a warrant and brought to Auburn. Bail not being found, Martin had been locked up, and now Reed also went to jail. It is said he has given the details of how the Hartman residence was entered. Both men will be called up next month and tried for burglary. The other three men are not caught and may not ever be secured.

PACKED HOUSE.

Well it's the same old story. The Holden Bros. always does it at the Auburn opera house and why not, our people know a good thing and always push it along. The Hunchback's Love was one of the best ever given in the opera house by a repertoire company last evening and everybody left the house feeling that they had gotten their money's worth. Such companies as the Holden Comedy company will always be received with open hands in Auburn. Tonight they will appear in the latest melodramatic success entitled "Roxie, The Waif," a play in which the whole company will have an opportunity to display its full strength. The melo-drama borders on to farce comedy with quick action and a splendid plot in which Miss Kittie DeLorme the little bright soubrette has made herself famous as well as the play. An entire change of specialties will be introduced tonight, and the child artist Ollie Opil will introduce the "Yellow Kid of Hogan's Alley."

LITERARY NOTES.

The interiors of one thousand of the most attractive homes in the United States have been photographed by The Ladies Home Journal. One hundred of the best of these pictures will be reproduced in that magazine. The first article of the series—"Inside of a Hundred Homes"—will appear in the October Journal. Bed-chambers, reception and dining room, bathrooms, halls and apartments of every kind will be pictured just as they are in daily use. Each picture contains dozens of suggestions. Every woman is interested in taking a peep into the most attractive homes in the land, to see how they are furnished and arranged. She wants to get practical hints and new ideas for furnishing her own. The houses photographed by the Journal are those occupied by persons of moderate income. Their interior arrangement shows what perfect taste can accomplish with a little money and the touch of a woman's deft fingers. Homes in every State in the Union—from Maine to California—were photographed for the Journal's unique and useful series.

WINTER'S WORK BEGUN.

Mr. Coe started Thursday of this week on his first trip visiting schools. He went down to the Sugar Grove school southwest of the Junction, Dist. No. 3 in Jackson. Next week he begins in earnest, and expects to go through the schools in Troy township. As the township has but five schools, he hopes to be back by Thursday, to see a little of the Carnival.

He has just concluded making all his reports to the state, including the accounts of text books for the schools of the county. Recent laws have piled up a vast amount of work for the County Superintendent to do. Now comes the visiting of about 115 schools located in every part of the county. This will take him about 60 days. In the meantime he must hold fourteen township institutes that is, one in each of the fourteen townships. He will also in the meantime have to hold two or three monthly examinations for teachers, look over the papers and grade them for licenses. And there is a plenty of still other work of various kinds to be sandwiched in with what we have named. His life will be a busy one, but we hope it may be pleasant as some of those years were for us. We know the people will be kind to him as they were to ourself and Mr. Merica and Mr. McIntosh. The people of this county are never weary in smoothing the way for all who assist in advancing the interests of the schools. We hope all things will combine to make Mr. Coe's work pleasant to him and beneficial to the schools.

CLOTHES MAKE THEM SICK.

Natives of Africa Who Die When They Take to Wearing Garments.

The bulk of the later authority is to the effect that civilization at present harms the negro by exposing him to diseases he never knew before, says Harper's Magazine. In his savage state the black man goes naked and becomes strong by constant contact with the fresh air. The first thing done for the happy black heathen is to make him wear uncomfortable clothing, in which he sweats and breeds poisonous microbes with horrible fluency. He never changes his clothing and when he gets wet he knows no better than to dry them by sitting close to the fire. In this way he contracts fever and undermines an otherwise robust constitution. For this reason many magistrates hold that, from the adoption of civilized customs by the natives and the consequent increase of disease, there will result a check to the present rate of increase among the blacks.

The death rate among the so-called Christian natives is larger than among those in the savage state, owing to the reason above given; but here again we have to remember that the savage state referred to is one protected by the English laws, and the Christians referred to are such as have not learned how to preserve their health under changed conditions of life. With increased pressure of population in South Africa, and increased difficulty in wandering away to new territory, the blacks will be forced into pretty much the same social state as they are today in the southern part of North America. The frightful rinderpest which has ravaged their country during the last year, combined with the locust plague, has compelled an industrial movement among the blacks undreamed of before.

In former years the tribes afflicted by want of food would have gone upon the war path and sought to plunder some of their neighbors; today they send out their young men to earn wages in the fields or in the mines of the white man, and thus silently this great revolution is going on, making from day to day more real the rule of the white man in Africa.

A Belligerent Parson.

In a recent little book by Mr. F. S. Child, on "The Colonial Parson of New England," some lively anecdotes are recalled of the patriotic ministers of the Revolutionary period, many of whom exhorted their flocks to war, while there were a few—a very few—whose ardor was such that they did not stop at exhortation. One of these was Dr. Daggett of New Haven, who, when the city was burned by the enemy, was observed standing solitary in a little clump of bushes with his gun, blazing away at the British with all his might. An officer and a few soldiers were detailed to capture the lone warrior. When they came close upon him, their leader exclaimed, disrespectfully:

"What are you doing there, you old fool, firing on his majesty's troops?"

"Exercising the rights of war, promptly replied the ministerial sharpshooter.

"If I let you go this time, you rascal," cried the officer, amused, "will you ever fire again upon the troops of his majesty?"

"Nothing more likely!" was the grim reply.

He was taken prisoner and marched to another part of the town, but was finally allowed to go free. Perhaps his markmanship had not been equal to his belligerency, and they thought it quite safe to be magnanimous.

The Further the Better.

The Boston Herald tells a story of Lincoln and Senator Simon Cameron which is new to us. It relates that Mr. Cameron called at the white house and asked the president to appoint to a foreign consulate an applicant to whom he was in some way bound, but who was particularly disliked for his persistence in demanding favors.

"Well," said the president, "where do you want him sent?"

In the room stood a large globe. Cameron went to it, put one arm around as far as he could reach, and said:

"I don't know what my finger is on, but send him there!"

And it so happened that there he was sent.

In Active Training.

Senator M. from one of the western states is known as the "wit of the senate." One of his humorous remarks is recorded by a Washington correspondent. The senator is somewhat corpulent, but not so stout as he used to be. He was asked what he had done to "train down" in weight.

"I don't do anything," he replied, "except to take bicycle exercise."

"What! Do you ride a wheel?"

"Oh, no," answered the senator, "but everybody else does, and I am kept busy dodging 'em!"

Extraordinary Inducements.

A Kansas farmer who simply could not get harvest hands put this sign upon his fence: "Harvest hands wanted. Hired girl blonde and genial. Cabinet organ music in the evening. Pie three times a day. Three spoons of sugar with every cup of coffee. Hammocks, feather beds or leather divans at your option for sleeping. Rising hour 8 o'clock in the morning. Three hours' rest at noon. Come one, come all."

MILES AND KNOTS.

Some Information That Is Well Worth Remembering.

Distances at sea are measured in miles, just as they are on land, but the speed of a ship at sea—that is, the number of miles she makes through the water in one hour of time—is measured in knots. There is therefore a difference in the meaning of the word "mile" and "knot;" they are no more synonymous than are the words "distance" and "speed," to which they the correlated. It is well to bear in mind, in speaking or writing of nautical matters, this distinction, that a mile is a unit of distance, but a knot is a unit of speed. There are two kinds of a mile—a statute or land mile and a nautical or sea mile. A statute mile is 5,280 feet. It is our standard of itinerary measure adopted from the English, who in turn adopted it from the Romans. A Roman military pace, by which distances were measured, was the length of the step taken by the Roman soldiers, and was approximately five feet long; a thousand of these paces were called in Latin a mile. The English mile is therefore a purely arbitrary measure, enacted into a legal measure by a statute passed during the reign of Queen Elizabeth; it has no connection with any scale in nature. A nautical mile, on the other hand, is equal in length to one-sixtieth part of the length of a degree of a great circle of the earth. But the circumference of the earth is nowhere a true circle; its radius of curvature is variable; hence the nautical mile, as a matter of fact, depends for its length upon the shape as well as the size of the globe sailed over; and hence, strictly speaking, the length of the nautical mile should vary with the latitude, from 6,046 feet at the equator to 6,109 feet at the pole. Such extreme accuracy is not necessary in navigating, and can not be well attained without undue labor. The English Admiralty, therefore, have adopted 6,080 feet as the length of a nautical mile, which corresponds with the length of one-sixtieth of a degree—of one minute of arc—of a great circle in latitude 48 degrees. The United States coast survey has adopted the value of the nautical mile "as equal to one-sixtieth part of the length of a degree on the great circle of a sphere whose surface is equal to the surface of the earth." This gives the length of one nautical mile as equal to 6,080.27 feet, which is very nearly the value of the Admiralty mile adopted in the English navy. Practically the nautical mile is 800 feet longer than the statute mile. In other words, one nautical mile is equal to 1.1515 statute miles or one statute mile is equal to 0.869 nautical mile. Multiply nautical miles by 1.1515 and the product will be statute miles; or, multiply statute miles by 0.869, and the product will be nautical miles. A knot is in length a nautical mile—that is, 6,080 feet. But it never, correctly speaking, means anything more or less than a nautical mile an hour. When saying that a ship has a speed of twenty knots, it means that in one hour of time she can go twenty nautical miles, precisely in the way that a 2:40 horse means that a horse in two minutes and forty seconds of time can trot one mile. Remember, then, that it is erroneous to use knot as synonymous with mile; so, too, it is an error to say so many knots an hour—for the word knots alone signifies the time as well as the rate of progress of the ship during the time. Another point to bear in mind is that though the measure at sea is called, like the measure of distance on land, a mile, like distances at sea are always measured in nautical miles, never in statute miles; and in both cases the single word mile is significant enough to convey the intended meaning. To say that the distance from New York to Southampton is 3,000 sea or nautical miles is tautological, but it would be worse still to say, as many often do, that the distance is 3,000 knots.—Harper's Round Table.

Heredity.

It has been said that the training of a boy should begin with his grandmother. Where this precaution has been neglected, there should be some charity for the boy if he does not turn out well, and the generous parent will not refuse to bear at least a portion of the responsibility. "Your son Robert, Mr. Waxworth," remarked a teacher to the father of one of his pupils, "is not lacking in capacity to learn, and has many good points, but he is apt to think that what he does is always right. He is very self-conceited." "I know it," replied the father, with a deep sigh. "He gets that characteristic from his mother's folks. In other respects he takes after our side of the family."

Much Impressed.

Some persons never can make an investment in any article of apparel without finding an excuse for calling everybody's attention to it. Occasionally this proceeding meets with a merited rebuke. "What do you think of that pair of shoes for three dollars and a half?" asked a man of this sort, exhibiting his latest purchase to a friend. "I think it's a good deal of leather for the money," replied his friend, walking around him in a wide circle and looking at the shoes with profound astonishment.

Fish That Clothe Themselves.

The ocean contains several fish which clothe and adorn themselves, the most conspicuous of them being the antennarius, a small fish frequenting the Sargasso sea, which literally clothes itself with seaweed, fastening the pieces together with sticky, gelatinous strings, and then, as it were, holding the garment on with its fore fins.

GHOST SAVES A WOMAN'S LIFE

Presence of the Phantom Reveals a Cobra in the Bathroom.

The following story, says an exchange, comes from the house of the narrator's sister at Meerut, northwestern India: Two sisters are connected with families of undoubted repute, both in India and England. The narrator's sister was seated at a table reading one evening when, happening to lift her eyes from her book, she was astonished to see seated in a chair before her, and between herself and the door of the bath room, a man, a stranger to her, who calmly regarded her. It was too great a surprise for her to speak and demand who was thus intruding unbidden upon her privacy, and what was wanted. She remained for a moment in silent astonishment. Then it gradually dawned upon her that the figure was probably not that of a person of real flesh and blood, but a visitor from the unseen world. She remembered having once, as a child, seen a similar figure, under circumstances which seemed to preclude the idea that it was any person still in body, and, in later years, in revolving those circumstances, she had remembered how the apparition had after a little while faded away into invisibility. Concluding that this visitor also was not a person of flesh and blood, she sat silently gazing at the subject, while the intruder, whoever or whatever he was, sat also in silence, steadily regarding her. How long this state of things lasted the lady did not accurately know, but it was probably not very long, when the mysterious stranger began to vanish into a thinner and thinner personal presence, until in a moment or two he had vanished. She had been vaguely conscious that in a minute or so after she had first seen the strange visitor her two pet dogs had begun to bark furiously in another room. It had been her invariable custom to take a bath at this time in the evening, after which she liberated the dogs. As the animals on this evening were making such a tremendous and unwonted ado she opened the door of the adjoining room to see what was exciting them. They at once darted to the door of the bath room. This their mistress opened in time to see a huge cobra on the floor—the snake whose bite is certain death. The reptile raised its head angrily, but, apparently, became afraid of the dogs and wriggled through a hole in the floor and escaped. But for the appearance of the supernatural visitor she would, undoubtedly, have gone directly to her bath from the reading table and would, with equal certainty, have been bitten by the snake.

Meat and Bread for Invalids.

In connection with a meat diet, one of the most noted physicians has achieved immense success. His treatment consists, first, in prescribing the drinking of hot water an hour before meals; second, in restricting the patient to lean beef. This is scraped or minced, and then either broiled or fried in a very hot pan until the red color has disappeared. It is eaten with a modicum of salt and butter, and is almost always followed by great improvement, if not convalescence. Obviously this easily digested and nutritious dish, unmixed with any other, yields the greatest amount of nourishment with the least expenditure of vital force. To this end the destruction of tough connective tissue greatly tends. The invalid should be wary of bread. To eat it rapidly, so that every cell is not submitted to the proper chemical action of saliva, is one of the causes of indigestion. The same may be said concerning all preparations that are not pre-digested—of buckwheat, oats, white flour, corn and rye. In other words, all starch digestion begins in the mouth. Toast is recommended, because in it starch is partially changed into one form of sugar. And when toast is said, toast is meant, not bread brown on the outside while damp and sticky within. Otherwise, it is better to eat the bread cold. To have a conception of the action of new bread, one has only to roll a bit of a fresh loaf between the fingers. The result is a soft, doughy ball, about as impervious to the digestive juices as a piece of india-rubber.

Oiling the Hull of the Ship.

By a new invention a fine spray of oil is thrown against the outside of a ship's hull, thus lessening the friction and making the progress of the vessel much easier. It has been known that oil scattered over the surface of the water will quiet the action of the waves and now the proposition to oil the vessel's hull is received with great favor. There is an absorbent composition saturated with the oil by means of the spray, and the drip and spread of the oil is assured by the composition, which is a preparation of tallow, carbon and a number of other articles which the inventors do not mention. It is claimed that this invention will increase the speed of vessels about 25 per cent.

Out for a Trade.

He had the manners of a Chesterfield and the long white beard of a patriarch, and those who saw him accost a youth who stood at the corner of Thirteenth and Walnut streets last evening, noting the cut of his black Prince Albert coat, thought that he must be a minister of the gospel. "Pardon me, young friend," he said, with a benevolent smile; "pardon me for venturing to address you, but I wish to ask what may seem to be an impertinent question. Do you smoke?"

"No, sir, I do not," replied the young man addressed.

"Oh, indeed!" exclaimed the old gentleman, his face lighting up with a pleased expression. "Now, you would be surprised," he continued, "to know how many of our young men of whom I have asked that same question during the past few weeks have made the same reply." The listener elevated his eyebrows, but said nothing. "However," resumed the speaker, "I have in my pocket a good cigar, and it was my intention, in case you smoked, to give it to you in exchange for——" Here he hesitated, then continued in apparent confusion: "For a car fare." Another pause followed, but as the youth made no move to produce the desired "car fare" the benevolent party moved on, adding: "Never mind, may be the conductor will be lenient enough to accept the cigar." A moment later he was seen in conversation with another pedestrian whom he had accosted half a block away.—Philadelphia Record.

Every attraction except the horse racing will be in properly heated buildings, so that cool weather will be no hindrance to the Exposition.

Carnival Poetry.

Come to the Auburn Carnival,
And bring some one along;
Don't stop to think there's nothing there,
For then you are quite wrong.

There's more than you or I can see,
How much so e'er we try;
There'll be so many things, I know
You'll have to pass some by.

There'll be big kites, some ten feet high,
A great menagerie,
Balloons and all the things that make
The great fairs that you see.

And every thing is free to all;
It will not cost a cent,
To come and see, as others will,
The Carnival I've meant.

IN JAIL 13.

Thirteen prisoners are now confined in the county bastile. There were fourteen, but last Monday, Charlie Bowers, the third one of the Ft. Wayne thieves was let out, his sentence having expired. Fifteen days later, the last of the four, Steadly will go free. They were the ones who held up Harry Greenberg on the Waterloo road. Then there are the six hoboes captured last Saturday at Garrett.

SEDAN.

Dr. A. S. Farrington and wife, of Waterloo spent Sunday in Sedan the guests of S. W. Guthrie and wife.

McIntyre and Snyder, of Auburn, were in this place looking after the interest of the Carnival.

The correspondent to the Waterloo Press is making a great howl about prosperity being here and wheat bringing $1 00 per bushel, he does not seem to know that with the great foreign demand for wheat that we would get $1.50, if it were not that money was to scarce and too high.

A. B. Raub died at his home three-fourths of a mile west of Sedan last Thursday. He was taken sick about three weeks ago with typhoid fever. He was faithfully cared for by the Corunna lodge K. of P. of which order he was a member, and loving hands did all possibly could be done to restore him to health. But all to no avail, and as the end drew near he gave the evidence to his family and friends that he was ready and willing to go. He was an honest, earnest christian and died in the triumph of a living faith. He leaves a loving wife, one daughter, and a sorrowing father, to mourn his departure, besides a host of friends. The funeral services were held in the U. B. church at Corunna Saturday, Sept 18. Rev. S. O. Fink officiating, assisted by Rev Frank Minnick. Interment at Sedan.

Unnecessary Generosity.

Jose Maria, a Spanish brigand who had received pardon of the government on condition that he renounced his exciting and unlawful profession, used to tell most entertaining stories of his past. On one occasion he said he had robbed an English gentleman and his servant of their horses and everything they possessed, save their clothes. The Englishman was a pleasant, attractive youth, and submitted to the robbery with great good humor. This appealed to Jose Maria, and as they were forty miles from Seville, whither the traveler was going, he determined that he should not walk that distance, and gave him back his servant's horse and a doubloon—sixteen dollars—out of the two hundred he had taken. The youth thanked the robber warmly, and added that he had still a great favor to ask.

"Will you not return me my watch?" he said. "It was the parting gift from my dear father."

"Is your father alive," asked Jose Maria, "and does he love you very much?"

"Oh, yes," said the youth, "he lives and loves me."

"Then," said Jose Maria, "I shall keep the watch, for if your father loves you so dearly, he is sure to give you another."

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen. Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

There are many theories given to account for the name Rotten Row of the thoroughfare in Hyde Park, London. Probably the correct is that it originally came from the name Route du Roi—the Road of the King or the King's Way—for only the carriages of the sovereign were permitted on this road.

A Sound Mind.

A sound mind cannot exist except in a sound body; all the delicacies of mind are not worth as much to a race as health, vigor and fertility. Even geniuses cannot be born except of a strong race; the intellectual faculties cannot be kept up long and advance except among a vigorous people, and selection cannot be efficient and produce the best by nature—a necessary condition of all progress except in a fruitful and numerous, and consequently a strong race. Whenever, therefore, we overwork the mind at the expense of the body, we lower the physiological, and therefore the intellectual, level of the race; for generations physiologically weakened will sooner or later suffer the weakening, with their cerebral power, of their mental capacity. The laws of heredity are fatal, to bequeath impoverished organs to children is to prepare for what Pascal would call the stultification of the race at a more or less distant epoch. In the struggle and selection of peoples as recorded in history, when young and perhaps barbarian blood has not been infused with the aged body of a nation, it has fallen steadily, become sterilized and disappeared or declined, while other peoples were ascending. Instruction may, we think, lead to two kinds of results; either in dynamic effects—that is, augmentation of cerebral force—or in purely mechanical effects, like scientific and literary routine. In the former case it acts upon heredity and can produce a hereditary force; in the second case it does not act, or it acts mischievously to the exhaustion of the nervous system. It is intellecual force, not acquired knowledge, that is transmitted by heredity from one generation to another. Hence the criterion which we propose for estimating methods of education and teaching; if there is an augmentation of mental, moral and aesthetic force, the method is good; if a simple storing up in the memory, the method is bad, for the brain is not a storehouse to be filled, but an organ to be trained and fitted to do its work easily and well.—New York Ledger.

Stopping and Starting Electric Cars.

It takes just as much electric power to start a car as it would animal power, and it requires less current to keep the car moving than to start it, so that a great number of starts and stops means a large consumption of energy. In the American Electrician there appears an article in which the actual figures for these two cases are given. It is shown that the cost of one stop on each trip of a car during a year on a fifteen-car line may amount to $70, or to $467 for a 100-car road; so that if these figures are multiplied by two stops at each crossing on a road operating long lines the large cost is evident. Careful handling of the controller will save over $1,000 a year on a fifteen-car road, and $7,000 per year on a 100-car road. The difference between a careful motorman, who has been well instructed, and a careless one may amount to from 3 to 8 per cent of the total energy consumed. It is perfectly safe, according to this authority, to say that 10 per cent of the energy can be saved by more careful handling of the controller, while on most roads at least 15 per cent could be saved without doubt. The maxim of every motorman should be: "Use the brake as little as posible and drift as much as possible." The employment of skilled motormen capable of understanding the mechanism they handle would result in a saving to the trolley companies, even though a higher salary were paid the men, and at the same time add much comfort to the passengers.

Peanut Oil.

The first peanut oil factory in the United States will be established in Norfolk, Va., at an early date. The oil is highly valued in Europe, as it is stated that fully $5,000,000 worth of peanuts are brought into Marseilles annually for the manufacture of oil, which is used in toilet soaps and for other purposes. The peanut flour is quite extensively used in Europe and made into bread, cakes, biscuits, etc. It is one of the favorite articles of food, according to consular reports, in hospitals in Germany. The capital stock of the peanut company is $60,000, and it is operating under the patents of Mr. Weatherley, which cover the machinery and methods of decorticating the kernel of the inner skin. According to the estimates made, says the Atlanta Constitution, the cost of a plant for treating five tons of peanuts daily is as follows: Machinery, $9,000; building, $6,000, while the expenditures, including labor, insurance and taxes amount to $337 per day. In a prospectus issued by the company it is calculated that the receipts from five tons of peanuts will amount to 235 gallons of refined oil at $1 per gallon, 175 gallons of crude oil at 50 cents, 3,680 pounds of flour and meal at 2 cents and 3,680 pounds of stock feed at 60 cents per 100 pounds, making the total gross receipts $415.90 per day, which, it is estimated, would give a yearly profit on a five-ton factory of $19,725.—San Francisco Examiner.

Fruit as Medicine.

Why for ages have people eaten apple sauce with their roast goose and sucking pig? Simply because the acids and peptones in the fruits assist in digesting the fats so abundant in this kinds of food. For the same reason at the end of a heavy dinner we eat our cooked fruits, and when we want their digestive action even more developed we take them after dinner in their natural uncooked state at dessert. In the past ages instinct has taught men to do this; to-day science tells them why they did it, and this same science tell us that fruit should be eaten as an aid to digestion of other foods much more than it is now. Cultivated fruits, such as apples, pears, cherries, strawberries, grapes, etc., contain on analysis very similar proportions of the same ingredients, which are about 1 per cent of malic and other acids, and 1 per cent of flesh-forming albuminoids, with over 80 per cent of water. Digestion depends upon the action of pepsin in the stomach. Only lately even royalty has been taking lemon juice in tea instead of sugar, and lemon juice has been prescribed largely by physicians to help weak digestion, simply because these acids exist very abundantly in the lemon.—Popular Science Monthly.

Women and Men.

In the processes of chemistry the various elements appear and disappear and undergo the greatest changes. None of these are so strange, however, as the chemical change undergone by money after it has passed from the lender's pocket to the borrower's. Before its transfer the borrower reverenced it from afar; he sighed for it, perhaps begged for it. He was at first so sure that it would be punctually returned that this really seemed to take away half the merit of the lending. When it was once transferred to his own pocket, however, it began to seem a very trifling thing to have lent it or borrowed it—for are we not all brethren?—and in a little while it seemed to nestle into its new home like an adopted kitten, and to wish to be disturbed no more. It really seems to require a very strong and clear mind, after twenty-four hours, to regard a borrowed dollar as still belonging rightfully to the man who lent it. If it be not properly the borrower's, how is it that his fingers and his purse close over it so peacefully and happily? May it not be, after all, that he has misremembered, and that he did not actually borrow the money, but that it came by some august decree of fate into the hands of the very person who needed it most? It would be wrong, he feels inwardly, to interfere with any such proper and useful decree of Providence by any petty refunding of the debt.—Harper's Bazar.

Politics of the Day

ONE FALSE ISSUE REMOVED.

Many silver Republicans voted for McKinley because of the pledge in the platform in favor of international bimetallism. These voters now see that this pledge was simply a dodge to fool the people.

None of the Republican leaders is desirous of establishing bimetallism, either through national or international action. All of these leaders knew that, so long as the settlement of international bimetallism rested in the hands of England, the policy of gold monometallism was safe, and for this reason they inserted the plank referred to, believing that it would catch votes and thus in reality make the gold monetary system all the more secure.

The Republican press realizes that the international bimetallism dodge has been played for the last time. It has served its purpose for a quarter of a century and is now completely worn out and discredited. No longer will this bait be used to catch gudgeons, not because there is any change in the ethics of the gold clique, but because the leaders recognize that the trick has lost its attraction. Now the fight is to be made squarely on the issue of gold, and the people should hail this change of front as an omen of victory.

The sentiment in favor of bimetallism is growing stronger every day in the United States. But for bribery, intimidation and false promises on the part of Republicans the people would have won in the last presidential campaign. Now that the issue has been made plain; that falsehoods have been exposed; that international bimetallism has been shown in its true light, the people will flock to the support of that party which has their interests at heart, and will, by their united votes in 1898 and 1900, establish national bimetallism and thus restore the prosperity that was destroyed by the demonetization of silver.

Concerning Pensions.

Men who went forth to battle for the Union and who received wounds in the cause of liberty are deserving of recognition and compensation from this government. There is none who desire to detract from the glory of the veteran, nor are there any who wish to deprive him of such governmental assistance as his deeds deserve, but the matter of pensions has attained such dimensions that it demands investigation.

On June 30 of the present year the number of pensioners was 983,528. Thus the United States is shown to have one of the largest of the standing armies of the world. The million mark will soon be reached. In order to learn how this item of expenditure has grown it is only necessary to glance at the following table:

1865-1868	$76,672,110
1869-1872	119,794,122
1873-1876	116,111,454
1877-1880	143,999,327
1881-1884	234,846,276
1885-1888	274,824,741
1889-1892	453,560,338
1893-1896	581,364,073
Total	$2,004,172,841

In 1872 James A. Garfield said in the House of Representatives: "I am the last man to say a word against voting pensions to all persons who deserve them. But I wish to say to the House that more frauds are being perpetrated on the government by claim agents in different parts of the country than from almost any other single source."

The government has already expended in pensions nearly as much as the entire national debt. Five times as much money is paid out for this purpose to-day as was required in 1872. If James A. Garfield recognized the existence of fraud in the matter of pensions twenty-five years ago, when the cost for the period 1869 to 1872 to the United States was only $119,794,122, what must the condition of affairs be to-day, when the cost for the period 1893 to 1896 has mounted up to $581,364,073?—Chicago Dispatch.

A Debt-Creating Tariff.

The first fruits of the new tariff law are decidedly discouraging, for the revenue collected under it during August fell behind the amount collected during the corresponding month last year by about 25 per cent. This, if continued, will force the country to face a deficit by the time congress meets in December of something like $30,000,000 for the four months, or at the rate of nearly $100,000,000 a year.

Ostensibly this Dingley measure was framed to provide first of all more revenue for the government. It was to do much better in this respect than the Wilson tariff, and the result is that those who predicted that it would produce from $75,000,000 to $100,000,000 a year less are going to be proven absolutely reliable prophets if this first month's experience is any criterion of what is to follow.

Of course, the expenses of the government are going on as before, or are increasing. While the total receipts by the treasury last month were only a little over $19,000,000, the outlay was close on to $34,000,000, so that there is an actual deficit of nearly $15,000,000 for this one month for the taxpayers to ponder over.—New York News.

Partial Relief for Farmers.

It is nonsense to talk about this year's crops relieving the farmers from all their debts. Much of the money obtained will have to be used in meeting current expenses and in repairing the outworn agricultural implements which are the result of the last few years of hard times. But no doubt a great many long-standing mortgages will be passed through the thrashing machines, as it were, this fall.—Boston Herald.

Seeing a Disagreeable Truth.

Republican papers are commencing to admit that the Dingley tariff will be inadequate as a revenue measure. It is difficult to escape this conclusion with the fact staring in the face that customs receipts were much smaller and the treasury deficiency much larger for the first month of the Dingley tariff than for any month of the Wilson tariff or the Cleveland administration. Some of these Republican papers are already proposing that should the deficiency prove as large as indicated the Dingley tariff will be amended. So the probabilities are strong for another season of tariff tinkering.—Pittsburg Post.

Slaves in the Coal Fields.

According to the story of Mayor Altmiller of Hazelton, who is presumably a patriot and a friend to law and order, since he is an ex-union soldier, the savagery of the corporation-hired deputies at Lattimer was a fit complement to the greed of their employers.

Heads of families among the striking miners have been receiving 70 cents a day for their labor when they were so fortunate as to get work. Steady employment then meant $4.20 a week. With this $4.20 the men must provide food, fuel, clothing, and shelter for wives, children, and other dependents.

All purchases of supplies must be made at company stores. This is not mandatory, under the statutes of Pennsylvania, but it is an unwritten law of the companies that no miner dare disobey. It is a law that confirms the servitude of low wages. From the fact that meat sells at 4 cents a pound above the market price in the stores, the prices of other articles may be judged. There are no cheap coats to make cheap men in that locality.

No, the coats and everything else but the men are protected there. There is a new and high tariff on coal, on household goods, on everything that the miners buy, but there is no tariff on the miner, nor is he to have any benefit from the tariff on coal. With his pitiable wage he must go on getting into debt at the stores and sinking himself deeper in slavery. That is the moral of recent American legislation.

The Coming Era of Thrift.

It is true that the farmer seldom is a miser and that he spends freely when he has the money. But he is not going to be such a free spender this year as he has been in the past. Adversity has taught him the valuable lesson of frugality. He is going to buy sparingly this year. While this new spirit of economy and frugality on the part of the farmers may disappoint the more sanguine merchants for awhile, in the end the effect will be a betterment of all the business interests of the country. It will lead to an era of thrift and accumulation of which we have stood in sore need ever since the industrial changes wrought by the civil war rendered a readjustment of conditions and relations necessary.—St. Louis Republic.

Putting Handcuffs on the Pulpit.

A minister of the gospel has been enjoined by the mine-owners' Federal court from in any way encouraging the strikers. His offense consisted, it is said, in preaching sympathetic sermons. We are not far from despotism when religion is handcuffed for denouncing the robbery and starvation of free workingmen.—Kansas City Times.

Enough Revenue, Too Much Expense.

From 1884 to 1890 the average July disbursement, the heaviest monthly payments in the year, was $34,700,000; in 1891-2, $37,000,000; in 1893-5 it was $38,000,000; in 1896, $42,000,000; in 1897, $50,000,000. This shows the real basis of the deficit. It is the one which ought to receive the greatest share of attention. Expense is the trouble, not revenue.—Milwaukee Journal.

What Has Restored Confidence.

Two of the cabinet officers who have returned to Washington agree that confidence is restored. No doubt, but it is not confidence in Dingleyism that has undergone restoration, but confidence in the natural resources of the country. Famine abroad and fertility at home have opened the mills.—Philadelphia Record.

Brief Comment.

If you are an employer, have you taken any steps to pass along the prosperity that is coming to you now? In other words, have you raised wages? And, if not, when will you go about it?—St. Louis Star.

Oddly enough the man of unsavory reputation whom the President has appointed naval officer of the customs at New Orleans turns out to have been one of McKinley's supporters in the St. Louis convention—Detroit Free Press.

Our best foreign policy is to have no foreign policy. We want no colonies, can have no colonies without giving the lie to the doctrines of our declaration of independence. Inalienable rights inhere in others as well as in ourselves.—Terre Haute Gazette.

Senator Thurston of Nebraska says that the Senate is no place for a poor man. The Senator must have been avoided during the formulation of the new tariff by the sugar trust. For some kind of Senators the Senate is a richer field than the Klondike.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

The farmer is getting a good price for his wheat, but he is not getting what he would have got had it not been for the Dingley law, for the reason that the dollar which he is getting for his wheat now will not buy so much of what he is compelled to purchase as it would had we freer trade.—Peoria Herald.

The Republican party is the party now organized which takes the paternalistic side of all questions. It is the party which favors the centralization of power in the national government. It is the party which in all ways would extend the power of Congress, recognizing no limit but its will. It legislates on everything going.—Milwaukee Journal.

It is now asserted in Wall street that the sugar trust is known to have a surplus of $35,000,000 which will be distributed shortly. This is given as the cause of the recent investments of the Rockefellers in sugar stock. Possibly it may also help the Rockefellers to unload at advanced figures the sugar stock they have accumulated.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

THE LIGHT OF OTHER DAYS.

It Was a Very Important Factor in the Household.

The light of other days formed a very important household industry. The first New England settlers on Long Island did not possess sufficient tallow to make candles, but used small iron lamps.

Betty lamps were the earliest form. They were a shallow receptacle, usually of pewter, brass or iron, circular or oval in shape, and occasionally triangular, and about two or three inches in diameter, with a projecting nose an inch or two long. When in use they were filled with grease made from odds and ends of fat in household use, and sometimes a little tallow. A wick, or more often a piece of twisted rag, was placed so the lighted end could hang over the nose. A handled hook was sometimes attached, with which to clean out the grease. These lamps were called "Brown Bettys." "Kials" or

AN OLD-FASHIONED KITCHEN FIREPLACE
[Long-Handled Frying Pan, Waffle Irons, Betty Lamp, Porringers.]

"Crimseys." A Phebe lamp resembled a Betty lamp, but had a shallow cup underneath to catch the drifting grease.

The earliest known candle was the rush light; the soaking, peeling, and dipping of the rushes into grease was the first method of the candle-making industry. The next invention was the dipping of the wicks, made of loosely twisted cotton yarn, into pots of hot tallow.

The yarn was cut into the desired length and suspended by the upper loop on sticks. These sticks were arranged gridiron fashion across two beams, whose ends rested on carpenters' horses; each stick containing several candle wicks, was dipped into great pots of melted tallow, the temperature being at a certain heat, warm enough to make the tallow adhere, but not so hot as to melt the tallow already adhering to the wick from former dipping. After each dipping the stick was placed on a rack for the candles to cool. The dipping was repeated many times, until the candles were the requisite thickness.

When candles of better shape were desired for the parlor and ceremonious entertainments the tallow was run into molds of tin, which held six, eight, and twelve candles, and the colonial housewife must dip her candles for kitchen and ordinary use, and mold them for her parlor and toilet table, and with so much labor for so little light it was expedient that the save-all, or candle-wedge, was invented, to preserve every vestige of the precious illumination. The save-all was a little frame of pewter or brass rings or cups with iron pins, by which our careful grandmothers held up the last dying bit of burning candle. They were sometimes of pewter with iron pins, sometimes wholly of brass or iron.

These candles were placed in "candle beams," the first rude chandeliers of our ancestors. They were crossed sticks of wood with strips of metal in sockets on sliding stands, holding a candle at each end. They had a hook for the snuffer to hang on. Sometimes a "candle beam" held a score of candles and the illumination was brilliant compared to the one "tallow dip." Sconces were much used and called

PHEBE LAMP AND COLONIAL CANDLESTICK.

"prongs," or "candle arms," and an endless variety of candle sticks of the most primitive and rudest make, to shapes of classic elegance.

Candle sticks and snuffers were found in every colonial house. The latter were called by various names, the word suit being the most curious. It is from the old English word snyten, to blow out, and was originally a verb—to snite the candle, or put it out. Snuffer-boats or slices, snuffer trays, and snuffer stands were also used. Colonial lanterns or "lanthornes" held one "tallow dip," giving a dim, uncertain light behind the oiled paper—which was used as window glass in the houses, and for lanthornes—and yet as the colonial farmer passed to and fro with his lanthorne, the house mother with her candlestick on the window sill, the wayfarer saw the distant light and was cheered by its illumination, thinking with grateful acknowledgment of the radiance.

Dickens' Descendants.

Dickens left $500,000 to his children, but all his descendants are said to be poor. Not a writer of first-class ability has appeared among them. These facts interfere with some of the theories of heredity.

Poetical Ideas of the Africans.

Africans, writes a missionary, have some very striking expressions, showing that they are full of poetical ideas. An African who came to America was shown some ice, which he had not seen before, and he called it "water fast asleep."

Won by the Rabbi.

Jones was on his last legs. In fact, it was a matter of but a few days for him, so he sent for three ministers—a Presbyterian, a Methodist, and a Jewish rabbi—and told them that if they each put $100 in his coffin he would leave them $5,000 each in his will. He died shortly after, and the day after he was buried the Methodist minister met the Presbyterian and asked him if he puts his $100 in the casket.

"I did," said the Presbyterian minister.

"In what form did you put it in?" asked the Methodist minister.

"In five twenty-dollar gold pieces."

"Well, you'll get your $5,000."

"How did you put yours in?"

"I put in a crisp new $100 bill."

"Well, you'll get your $5,000 too."

Just then they saw the rabbi across the street, and they called him over and asked him in what form he had put his $100 in the casket.

"I put in my check for $300 and took out the change."—New Haven Palladium.

FIBROID TUMOR

Expelled by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Interview With Mrs. B. A. Lombard.

I have reason to think that I would not be here now if it had not been for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It cured me of a fibroid tumor in my womb.

Doctors could do nothing for me, and they could not cure me at the hospital. I will tell you about it:

I had been in my usual health, but had worked quite hard. When my monthly period came on, I flowed very badly. The doctor gave me medicine, but it did me no good. He said the flow must be stopped if possible, and he must find the cause of my trouble

Upon examination, he found there was a Fibroid Tumor in my womb, and gave me treatment without any benefit whatever. About that time a lady called on me, and recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, said she owed her life to it. I said I would try it, and did. Soon after the flow became more natural and regular. I still continued taking the Compound for some time. Then the doctor made an examination again, and found everything all right. The tumor had passed away and that dull ache was gone.—MRS. B. A. LOMBARD, Box 71, Westdale, Mass.

AN OLD SOLDIER'S HOT FIGHT FOR LIFE AND HEALTH.

While in a Hospital a Physician Hands Him Some Pills, and After a Few Doses He Feels His Health Returning—The Patient a Widely Known Man.

From the News, Indianapolis, Ind.

Sol. Yewell, of 90 Hill avenue, Indianapolis, Ind., who is well known to the dramatic profession, when a boy of 17 years old enlisted in Company H, 13th Indiana Volunteer Infantry, the first three years regiment that marched to the front from the Hoosier State. In the fall of 1862 he was honorably discharged, because of disabilities contracted in the service. After a short time spent at home he went to New York and entered college. He was a bright young fellow, a diligent student and a great future seemed opening before him. But he again heard the bugles and the fires of patriotism were again aglow in his bosom. He enlisted as a recruit in Company M of the 2d Harris Light Cavalry, Kilpatrick's famous old regiment, and was soon again at the front. There was a great demand for cavalry in Virginia, and the active young trooper found plenty of fighting up and down the Shenandoah Valley and in the various campaigns on the Potomac. In 1864 he attracted the notice of the dashing and dauntless Custer, and was selected as one of his famous body guard, in which he served until the close of the war.

After the war Mr. Yewell began to be known as a skilled newspaper writer, and correspondent, and he was later in demand as a theatrical writer and press agent, a profession in which he achieved signal sucess. He was a hero in private life as he had been on the field and in the camp, and few of those who knew the genial and versatile Sol. Yewell had any idea that he was a great sufferer from diseases and disabilities, contracted during the war. Such, however, was the fact. He suffered from rheumatism, hemorrhoids and chronic tonsilitis for years. "As if these were not enough," said Mr. Yewell, the other day, at the Marion Home, relating his experience to the reporter, "I was doomed to fall a victim to the grip in 1890. This last fell monster accentuated all my previous troubles and added, seemingly, half a dozen new ones. It was in November of that year that I was compelled to give up work and came to the Marion Home. Creeping paralysis or locomotor ataxia developed, and in 1892 I went to the hospital, where I remained for several months. My condition became so alarming that the surgeons here, who are my very good friends, were compelled to admit they could do nothing for me. My locomotor ataxia was attended with vertigo and I was liable to fall at any unexpected moment. The surgeons having nothing else in mind recommended that last resource—a change of climate. So in May, 1894, I went to Boston, Mass. I had secured employment at the Columbia Theater there as press writer, as I was determined to do something. I remained there two seasons.

"My vertigo and paralysis continued to distress me greatly. I consulted a number of eminent physicians in Boston and became a patient at the Harvard College clinic on Bennett street. The surgeons there appeared to desire to make much of me as a patient and I was willing. One day a doctor there gave me a box of pills.

"I had scarcely used the box before, much to my surprise, I found that the locomotor ataxia was leaving me. On the second box the vertigo entirely disappeared, my paralysis or locomotor ataxia was gone and I began to have my old-time confidence in myself. Yes, all these ailments under which I had suffered were leaving me. I used about four boxes of these pills before I knew what they were. At the close of the dramatic season of 1895 I took a vacation, going up into the White Mountains and into Northern Vermont. I asked my doctor and insisted upon knowing the name of the wonderful pills that he had been giving me. He laughed and said, 'I have been giving you a remedy called Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.'

"I said, 'I think they are the best medicine I ever took, and I can directly trace to them all the benefit that I have received.' I should have said that along with my other afflictions I was at times seriously troubled with a valvular affection of the heart, but the pills have proven to be a splendid remedy for that also. I certainly believe they strengthen and correct the action of that organ."

Mr. Yewell has a clear, fresh complexion, the hue of health, weighs 220 pounds, has a first-class appetite, and, to use his own words: "I sleep like a top." He is 52 years old, and while Williams' Pink Pills have not made a young man out of him, they have certainly restored him so that he bids fair to see many years of usefulness.

"I will leave here soon," were his parting words to the reporter, "as I have an offer to go to Boston and take up my old theatrical work."

Mr. Yewell's many friends in the newspaper and theatrical professions will be glad to know that he is again in good health and restored to the pursuit which he so long adorned.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are for sale by all druggists, or may be had by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y., for 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50.

THE GARROTE.

Description of the Machine Which Ended Goill's Life.

San Sebastian.—Michel Angiollo, or Goill, who shot and killed Canovas Del Castillo, the prime minister of Spain, at the baths of Santa Agueda, on Sunday, Aug. 8, was executed, according to the sentence of the court-martial imposed upon him, after his trial, which sentence was confimed by the supreme council of war recently.

THE GARROTE.

Angiollo heard calmly the news that he was to be executed, but he appeared to be surprised at and bitterly complained of the frequent visits of the priests, declaring they would obtain nothing from him. He declined to enter the chapel, saying he was comfortable enough in his cell.

An executioner from Bourges performed the garroting, just prior to which a priest exhorted the anarchist to repent ,to which Angiollo responded: "Since you cannot get me out of prison, leave me in peace. I myself will settle with God."

The garrote, on which Goill died, is named after its inventor, a Spanish ironworker, who witnessed a bungling execution of a relative on the gallows, which was the method employed in Spain up to about thirty years ago for carrying out the sentence of death.

THE FORTRESS OF MONTJUICH OVERLOOKING BARCELONA, Where many Anarchists have been executed recently.

Garrote wondered that a more expeditious and, therefore, merciful method had not been discovered. He little thought then that he would be the one to furnish his country with a substitute for the gallows, but the thought haunted him so long that he at length found it assuming ordered form in his mind, and in time the ponderous death-dealing machine that has immortalized him in his country came to be a fact.

The two points of excellence claimed for the garrote are these: That it can be made with reasonable care to kill instantly and that it sheds not one drop of blood. Force that is measured by horse power is the agency it employs and its aim is the breaking of the victim's neck.

The unfortunate is first made to sit in a chair directly under two heavy iron bars, one of which is adjusted on the back of his neck and the other—vulgarly known as the corbatin, or necktie—under his chin. Then the executioner grasps the handle, gives a vigorous twist and death is instaneous. The entire machine is made of iron and ordinarily weighs several hundred pounds. They are ordinarily of very rough construction, thus adding to the horrifying impression which the circumstances connected with them cannot but leave in the mind of any observer.

Persons who have witnessed all sorts of capital punishment are unanimous in the opinion that garroting is the most revolting and appalling of all. It is not always as expeditious as its inventor made it possible to be. A vicious executioner can prolong it practically at will, and herein is the system's great drawback as it is now constituted. Cases are citable in which the process was prolonged twenty, thirty minutes, even three-quarters of an hour. The executioner merely gave twist enough to the handle, or lever, to choke his victim. Then he turned it back and twisted again, this time a little more than at first, and so on until, his spite having been satisfied or his instructions perhaps obeyed, he gave one final turn and ended the tortured life. Such was the execution of Maloja in Mantanzas, Cuba, in 1888.

JAP COUNT DEAD.

Former Minister of His Country to the United States.

Count Munimitsu Mutsu, former Japanese minister to the United States, is dead. The count was one of the foremost statesmen of modern Japan. He leaves behind him much political and historical literature, of which he was the author, and which will be of inestimable value to the future Japanese historian. Mutsu was in the forefront of the constitutional movement and he and the Marquis Ito were the leaders in molding the empire into its present firm and modern form. His services were of incalculable good during the late Chinese war. At the end of that conflict he was a member of the peace convention that framed the treaty which left Japan with many great political and commercial advantages that it did not formerly possess. Early in life Mutsu did much traveling. He spent a year in Germany during the Franco-Prussian war. After the fall of the Shogunnite regime Mutsu lost much of his honors and estate, and in 1883 came to America and Europe to study educational methods. He was especially fond of America and did much to introduce American methods in the government and educational systems of Japan. In 1888 he was appointed minister to the United States, and was very popular during his stay in the capital, which he was forced to leave because of ill health. His son was recently recalled to Japan and left his position as secretary of legation to attend upon the count. Count Mutsu was 54 years old.

MEASURES WIND PRESSURE.

Prof. Francis E. Nipher Who Is Conducting Interesting Experiments.

Professor Francis E. Nipher, of the chair of physics in the Washington University at St. Louis, is busy with a series of experiments by which he hopes to determine wind pressure and to establish a means of measuring the force of the wind at a high velocity. Scientific men have so far been unable to discover an accurate method of determining the force of high winds. The professor has enlisted the interest of the Illinois Central railroad in his experiments, and that company has placed at his disposal a train wth a fast engine, a special car for experiments, and a section of its tracks at Centralia. The apparatus used by the professor and his assistants is a somewhat complicated one. It consists of a pressure board, two steel disks and a vane fitted upon a freight car. These are supplemented with a speed recorder, and with this machinery Professor Nipher can gauge the velocity and the pressure in pounds of the wind current created by a train which rushes past the experiment car, which stands still. Professor Nipher, who is conducting the experiments, is one of the foremost physicists in this country. For many years he has been head professor of physics in the Washington institution, and is the local authority on subjects falling within the range of his specialty.

PROFESSOR NIPHER.

JOHN M'CULLAGH.

Recently Appointed Chief of the New York Police Force.

John McCullagh, New York's new chief of police, is a solid citizen of comfortable fortune, who has been upon the force since 1870. In 18[illegible] he was promoted roundsman. He was advanced to sergeant in 1876 and to captain in 1883. McCullagh became a conspicuous member of the department as captain of the Sixth Precinct, where he fought the evils of Chinatown and the remnants of the notorious Whyo gang. He gave the coup de grace to that noted band of law-breakers. He routed opium dens and fanntan games, and often disguised himself as a tramp and associated with the fiercest of the criminal elements to further his work. When the reform board came into power McCullagh was brought to headquarters, and in 1895 he was made inspector. Since then he has done inspector's work on captain's pay. He was favored by Theodore Roosevelt for promotion, but Chief Conlin would not recommend him. Commissioner Parker opposed him, and it has taken two years to break the deadlock.

Fortunes in Laces.

Large sums of money are represented by fine old laces. It is said that the Astors own lace worth $3,000,000, and that the Vanderbilts value theirs at $4,000,000. The pope is content with only $75,000 represented in lace, and the Princess of Wales boasts a collection worth $250,000.

Life.—Life is a succession of choices, and our eternal destiny depends on the use we make of them.—Rev. H. S. Noon, Methodist, Philadelphia, Pa.

Success.—If one but opens up his heart to the incoming of Christ he may have some possibility of success and quick returns.—Rev. W. B. Packard, Congregationalist, Cleveland, Ohio.

Woman.—Women should stand by women, instead of trampling upon them. They should demand the same purity of man that man demands of woman.—Rev. B. de Costa, Episcopalian, New York City.

Politics.—I am in favor of more politics and more politicians if we can govern ourselves, and if we will make the business of government our business.—Rabbi M. J. Gries, Hebrew, Cleveland, Ohio.

The Sabbath.—It is the duty of the Christian Church all over the world to use its greatest efforts in furthering a better observance of the Sabbath day.—Rev. J. Van Nass, Presbyterian, Washington, D. C.

The Curse of the Age.—The great curse of the age is the everlasting reaching out after something for nothing, which is true in the mercantile world, the political world, and the Christian world.—Rev. H. N. Couden, Methodist, Washington, D. C.

A Workingman's Church.—The church must keep the social, physical and material wants of the workingman, as well as the spiritual. I plead for a million dollar palace of religion in the interest of the toiling masses.—Rev. G. W. Mead, Presbyterian, New York City.

Youth.—The world in all its departments is mainly what young men have made it. Manhood and age have often taught, but it is youth that makes the disciple and spreads the doctrine.—Rev. W. C. Webb, Methodist, Philadelphia, Pa.

Do Unto Others.—We expect our friends to slave and crawl and grind and drudge for us, and we do nothing for them. The best way to keep your friends true to you is for you to be true to them.—Rev. Frank DeW. Talmage, Presbyterian, Pittsburg, Pa.

Philanthropy.—We need wealth to endow our colleges, build our churches and carry on our foreign and domestic mission work; but if the giving of it is to stifle free expression of thought on economic and industrial questions, then better a thousand times that it be withheld.—Rev. W. H. Carwardine, Methodist, Chicago, Ill.

Political Bosses.—Political bossism is crime; it is selfishness flowered out into tyranny; ecclesiastical despotism is blasphemy; it is an attempt to subordinate consciences to the empire of one conscience; it is religious despotism; it destroys individuality, which is the glory of man and woman.—Rev. F. R. Morse, Baptist, New York City.

The Life Eternal.—This mortal life is but a beginning of the greater existence; it is but the dawn, the preparation for the eternity into which we must pass when the fetters of flesh have loosened their bonds and the immortal soul realizes that stupendous freedom known only in the eternal life.—Rev. J. H. Merchant, Methodist, Akron, Ohio.

The Open Book.—Common education has so brought people to a common level that they are no longer willing to accept the doctrines laid down by the preacher, as in the times when the clergy alone were the learned. The Bible is no longer a sealed book from which precepts are to be picked by the preacher.—Rev. Alfred Kellogg, Presbyterian, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Voice of Conscience.—If the voice of conscience still speaks to you, listen and heed it; for though you may smother conscience here, though you may gag your moral sense, though you may drown all serious thought until you are indifferent to all these things, there will come a time when they will wake to new life again.—Rev. C. S. Hearn, Evangelist, New York City.

Possibilities.—The possibilities of every young man's life are almost infinite. At least, there is no young man, whatever his condition, who may not be noble and true, who may not wear the image of Christ upon his soul, and grow into a manly man, even though he does not rise to any lofty height among his fellows.—Rev. J. R. Miller, Presbyterian, Philadelphia, Pa.

Demonstration.—The religion of Jesus Christ is not all worship and sentiment, but is in practical demonstration. Principles of love and sympathy are beneficent only when they rise above theory. A desire to be useful is the best part of a truly noble character, and quiet purpose in the heart is the essential beginning.—Rev. A. S. Yantes, Episcopalian, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Strikes.—I hope the time will come when some legislative machinery will do away with strikes or settle them at once, and prevent the distress which ensues. The truest friend the workingman ever had was he who was himself a workingman, Jesus Christ, the carpenter of Nazareth. The rich as a whole need Gospel truth to-day more than the poor.—Rev. John Stephens, Methodist, San Francisco, Cal.

Methodism.—The Methodist denomination, from being the smallest and poorest, has now become the richest and largest in the land. It controls 200 colleges and 40,000 schools, in which there are 2,250,000 pupils. When the missionary society was organized in 1819 it secured a gift of $800. Its last year's collection amounted to more than $1,500,000.—Rev. S. E. Howe, Methodist, Boston, Mass.

Church Degeneration.—The world is full of costly church edifices, fine choirs, learned preachers and regenerated, cultivated members. Yet many of these churches and members seem as helpless to reach the lost as is an infant's hand to shatter Gibraltar. They are powerless. Many of these churches look like lighthouses out of which all the light has gone.—Rev. W. H. Pickard, Baptist, Louisville, Ky.

I know a lady who was troubled with what her doctors termed intestinal indigestion. Her last doctor had her pursue the Salisbury treatment, which consists of eating only beef and bread dried in the oven and drinking all the hot water she could. I have seen her in the office where she is employed walk along with a glass filled with water steaming hot. The Salisbury treatment did give her some relief and she persisted in it for three months. It was then that she was induced to try Ripans Tabules, and now she finds that there are many eatables (chicken for instance) which she was not allowed to eat at first which she can now eat without distress. She says Ripans Tabules seem to counteract the acidity of her stomach. Their effect upon her has been wonderful and the relief she gets is as much as she ever experienced with the Salisbury treatment, and she can now choose from a more liberal bill of fare.

A new style packet containing ten Ripans Tabules in a paper carton (without glass) is now for sale at some drug stores—for five cents. This low-priced sort is intended for the poor and the economical. One dozen of the five-cent cartons (120 tabules) can be had by mail by sending forty-eight cents to the Ripans Chemical Company, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York—or a single carton (ten tabules) will be sent for five cents.

BUTLER.

Mrs. Mary A. Young and daughter of Van Wert, O., visited Butler friends and the fair last week.

Our schools opened last Monday under the superintendence of Prof. Kimmel. The Professor comes to us a stranger but we all hope his efforts may prove a great success.

Last Sunday was decidedly cool, about 40 degrees below its predecessor and made us think of our woolens and a visit from Jack Frost.

Our visitors to the fair last week from a distance were so numerous that bare mention would fill a page.

Charles Campbell is visiting in Chicago.

J. A. Campbell and Benjamin Kelsey of Indianapolis adjusted the John W. Dills barn loss at St. Joe, last Wednesday, paying the full sum insured $1055.

C. S. Stoy our former townsman and postmaster under Cleveland now private clerk to Pension Commissioner Leighty, of Indianapolis visited with Butler friends last week. He has become a full fledged gold republican.

The fair has come and gone and has been voted a great success by its 6000 visitors. Many of the dealers and residents whose places of business and homes have been crowded for a week with but a small amount of trade are not so jubilant about it. It proved a great success to the saloons, restaurants and fakir shows that were here in sensible numbers. One, the turtle boy is said to have carried away $300. The magic lantern feature of the fair proved a drawing card, and filled the streets every night to witness the scenes displayed. The races were rather tame, but only a part of the people came for them.

BENTON HARBOR MEETING.

The Most Successful ever held by the Dentists of the Two States.

Dr. S. B. Johnston and wife returned on the B. & O. noon train Thursday, from their trip to Chicago and Benton Harbor. After seeing the parks and other sights in Chicago, including the now famous sausage factory of Luntgert, the supposed wife murderer, and having an interesting visit with the family of Dr. Johnston's daughter, they took the Monday boat for St. Joe. The great meeting of the Dental Associations of Northern Indiana and Southwestern Michigan began at Benton Harbor Tuesday. Dr. Johnston, was the presiding officer for the joint meeting, but gave the chair to the president of the Michigan Association till all the opening speeches were done, as he had the main ones to make. After the work had fairly begun, he again assumed the chair and presided till the close. The two cities of Benton Harbor and St. Joe, united to entertain the visitors, and nothing was overlooked to make the meeting a grand success. We quote the following remarks from the Benton Harbor Palladium, to show the high opinion held of the visitors.

"The president of the Indiana society, Dr. S. B. Johnston, of Auburn, said the object of the meeting is the acquisition of information that better service may be given to patients and the profession may be elevated. He referred to the great loss the society had sustained in the death of Dr. S. A. Brown, of Fort Wayne. He said progress in the dental art is being made so rapidly that any dentist will very likely become an old fogy unless he studiously reads the best dental literature and meets with his brother practioners in discussion of matters pertaining to the profession. He spoke very finely of the kindness of the reception tendered the visitors here."

At the conclusion of the addresses the joint convention took a recess for dinner. Among other graceful acts of hospitality, the visitors were treated to a moonlight ride up the river to the Taber summer resort about eight miles. Of this, the Palladium says:

THE MOONLIGHT EXCURSION.

Hospitality in quantity as measureless as the waters of the sea was shown to the visiting dentists by the home dentists of the Benton Harbor and St. Joseph.

For the delectation of the visitors a moonlight excursion up the beautiful St. Joseph river was given Tuesday night on the May Graham. About one hundred were on the boat and no more delighted party ever navigated the placid waters of the Hudson of the West than this. Home grown fruits in profusion were served and the quantity and quality of the fruit fresh from the tree and vine were a revelation to the visitors from out of the fruit belt.

The excursionists went over to St. Joseph on the steamer City of Milwaukee and took the May Graham which lay in waiting.

Some of the musical dentists had guitars and mendolins and they all had their voices. The banks of the silent river which under the rays of the beautiful harvest moon looked as if its glassy surface was gilded, re-echoed the melody of the party in many an old familiar song.

Dr. Johnston, president of the Indiana society, was called upon for a speech and although he used the most extravagant language in expressing his liking for Benton Harbor and St. Joe and the dentists and their hospitality, he concluded by saying language utterly failed him in his endeavor to express the appreciation of himself and his brother dentists for the kindness of the gentlemen whose guests they were.

Dr. Rix, of Dowagiac made one of his characteristic happy speeches and Rockwell for the home dentists said he was glad the visitors were so well satisfied with the home dentists' attempt at entertainment.

Coming up the canal, cheers were given for Benton Harbor, St. Joseph, Dr. Johnston, Dr. Rix, Dr. White, Dr. Rockwell, Capt. James Fikes and home grown fruit.

It was nearly midnight when the May Graham landed her passengers at the city dock.

Altogether, the meeting was a splendid success.

NO PAY—NO CURE

That is the way all druggists sell Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic for Chills and Malaria. It is simply Iron and Quinine in a tasteless form. Children love it. Adults prefer it to bitter, nauseating Tonics. Price 50c. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

Fifty Years Ago.

This is the cradle in which there grew
That thought of a philanthropic brain;
A remedy that would make life new
For the multitudes that were racked with pain.
'Twas sarsaparilla, as made, you know
By Ayer, some 50 years ago.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

was in its infancy half a century ago. To-day it doth "bestride the narrow world like a colossus." What is the secret of its power? Its cures! The number of them! The wonder of them! Imitators have followed it from the beginning of its success. They are still behind it. Wearing the only medal granted to sarsaparilla in the World's Fair of 1893, it points proudly to its record. Others imitate the remedy; they can't imitate the record:

50 Years of Cures.

Commissioners' Work.

The Board has had a hard nine days' work, and now, are obliged to hold an extra day or so to check up the work. We like to see this painstaking way of doing business. And the auditor's office never was carefully managed as now. Yeserday, closed up most of the work. Today, Friday, they expect to let the hauling of the dirt for the bridge approaches.

LIQUOR LICENSES.

Clyde Dean at Newville and Orange Spitler at Spencerville were refused licenses. The former can't get one in two years, of Cod-liver Oil with Hypophosphites, can be taken as easily in summer as in winter. Unlike the plain oil it is palatable, and the hypophosphites that are in it aid in digestion and at the same time tone up the system.

Scott's Emulsion

For sickly, delicate children, and for those whose lungs are affected, it is a mistake to leave it off in the summer months. The dose may be reduced if necessary.

We recommend the small size especially for summer use, and for children, where a smaller dose is required. It should be kept in a cool place after it is once opened.

For sale by all druggists at 50c. and $1.00.

LOOK AFTER THE PENNIES.

One Cent's Difference in an Account equires Seven Years' Work.

Washington, Sept. 14.—Two cases of a single cent bothering the whole treasury department came to light today. When Grover Cleveland went out of the white house on March 4 the accounting officers of the treasury found they owed him one penny, the accumulation of fractions of a cent shaved off the forty-eight monthly vouchers paid him during his presidential term It took three months for the warrant to go through the circuitous channels of the red tape system,

But a more remarkable case of marvelous treasury bookkeeping was developed today by the settlement of a balance involving a single copper cent which had puzzled the bookkeeping experts for seven years. As long ago as 1890 a controversy arose between the treasury department and the auditor of the postoffice over a shortage of 1 cent.

An investigating committee took up his accounts minutely, and at last discovered that many years ago the disbursing officer had credited himself with one odd cent, and the shortage was his. Prompt payment was made today.

Occupations of Americans.

Much interesting data about the occupations of the American people is given in the bulletin of the Eleventh Census recently made public. It shows that the total number of people engaged in occupations of all kinds in 1890 was 22,735,661. Of the whole number working people the females form 17.22 per cent. Divided by classes the working people of the country are as follows: Agriculture, fisheries and mining, 9,013,330; professional, 944,333; domestic and personal service, 4,360,577; trade and transportation, 3,326,122; manufacturing and mechanical industries, 5,091,293, Considerable more than four-fifths of the illiterate female population are working. Over 59 per cent of the workingmen are married, over 37 per cent single, over 3 per cent widowed, and one-fourth of 1 per cent divorced. In manufactures and mechanics the carpenters and joiners, numbering 611,382, make up the greatest element, with dressmakers and milliners following, with 499,690. There are a little over 1,000,000 bookkeepers, clerks and salesmen, 690,658 merchants and dealers, 5, 281,557 farmers, planters, and overseers. and 3,004,061 agricultural laborers, 349,592 miners and only a little over 60,000 fishermen and oystermen. Professors and teachers, aggregating 347,344, form the most numerous of the professional classes. Physicians and surgeons, 104,805, come next; then lawyers, 89,630; clergymen, 88,203; government officials, 79,664; musicians, etc., 62,155; engineers and surveyors, 43,239; artists and art teachers, 62,496; journalists, 21,849; and actors, 9,728.

THE AUBURN COURIER.

Volume XXVII | Auburn, DeKalb County, Indiana, Thursday, September 30, 1897. | Number 39.

THE CARNIVAL

Pronounced by All the Grandest Celebration

EVER HELD IN THE STATE OF INDIANA.

Words Cannot Describe the Beauty of Such a Magnificent Parade.

The DAILY COURIER did not try to say much during the three days. No one cared to read, no one wanted to work and even now it gives the old pencil a spring fever to think of all the beautiful things, of the noise and hubbub, the flags and bunting, the lanterns and electric lights, the search lights, electric fountains and living statuary. But we ought to say something for the benefit of distant Auburn people who read the COURIER, and the ladies and gentlemen who did so much hard work and study should be noticed.

All up and down Main street and Seventh, and in others, the city was bright with bunting, the yellow and blue adopted colors of the Carnival. Nearly 14,000 yards were used, besides the flags and other bunting used for other occasions. At night long lines of Japanese lanterns about 7,000 in all made the streets glow and at many electric lights in colors added to the brilliancy. Beautiful porticos or awning, lovely window decorations, and in many cases, like the Schaab Brothers there were elaborately draped displays inside. The loveliness of the floats in the parade, cannot be told. Many who have seen the Mardi Gras at New Orleans and the Veiled Prophet at St. Louis say this was fully as beautiful, though less expensive. All wondered and admired. Even our own citizens had not expected a quarter of what the result showed.

Of course there were many fakirs, and booths for selling things, and a few of our own people had stands for selling lunch, cigars, etc.

The free vaudeville show was given each afternoon, as advertised, and all was brought on just when it was advertised to be. Nothing failed except big kites and they were ready and willing, but there was no wind. But the beauty of the balloon ascensions made up for this, for no one ever saw such successful and enjoyable balloon ascensions before. It was better than could have been anticipated.

The attendance was good and on Thursday, was estimated at from 15,000 to 25,000. Friday the attendance was but fair till night when there was a regular jam. Now we will speak briefly of the parades, making one do for all.

THE LAST EVENING PARADE.

This was a combination of all the other parades, and of course it was the finest. We are only sorry the big crowd of Thursday was not here to see it. But there was a good crowd after all. At the other parades, the printed order was followed but in the combined one, it was changed. But we will mention them briefly without order. In this Royal Pageant, the first were heralds, and guards, and the Auburn Rifles led by Miss Nellie Franks as "daughter of the regiment" who made a fine impression.

Mrs. B. B Harrison was "Queen of the Carnival" and looked magnificent, on her royal float with her ladies in waiting, May Hamilton and Mary Baxter, and her pages, Ruth Borst and Bertha Lanning and a royal guard. There was the big ship, "City of Auburn," which was very realistic; continental soldiers, Knights in armory, many lovely bicycle floats, Helen Vann drove a lovely bicycle float, and another was by Harry McIntyre, Ward Yesbera and Charlie McClellan. The float of the Nautch girls was fine, they being Ona McBride, Georgie Zimmerman, Ruth Baker and Leah Little. The troop of mounted K. P. Knights was grand the float of the Rebekahs was beautiful with Miss Alda Larimore as Rebekah, and Joe Stafford as Elizur. Thier colors were pink and green.

The Reading Club hada very tasty float on which were Mrs. McCord, Mrs. Buchtel, Mrs. Zent, Mrs Lanning, Mrs. W. H. McIntyre, Mrs. Morris Eckhart Mrs. John Aber and Mrs. H. Weaver. It was decorated in the club colors white and purple, and they had white parasols with purple flowers.

The Queen of Egypt, was on a gorgeous float. She was Miss Della Weaver, with Maud Link, Clara Somers, Sadie Weamer and Effie Hines as attendants.

The G. A. R. float was fine, with its cannon, campfire etc. The old flag was loudly cheered. The men were A. P. Green, Tom May, Hi Cupp, John Haines, Tom Hallam, Henry Wolf, J. R. Nichols, Alf Keesler, Capt Otto The four-mule team was driven by Charlie Jones the colored driver.

The float of the L. L. C. was a lovely showing with its wreaths of golden rod, for their colors are green and yellow. They showed the goddess Minerva and four sciences; Mrs. Baltz was music; Mary Teeters, art; Nellie Buckley drama; Mrs. W. C. Harman in one parade and Mrs. Will Echart in another, represented literature, Mrs. Nusbaum was Minerva.

There were Cromwell's soldiers and Valentine soldiers, mounted.

The Rathbone Sisters' float was presided over by Mrs. Pomeroy.

The S. H. G. had the most perfect showing of their club, a beautiful "Hall in the Grove," a real classic building in a real grove. The girls were: Mabel Baker, Pearl Sprott, Alma Trentman, Miss Roby, and Maude and Jeanette Muhler, of Fort Wayne.

There was a big troop of Brownies, who enjoyed their march and amused the crowd. Little Stutz and Van Auken turned summersaults to the delight to all.

The Maccabees had a grand showing, with Mrs. I. N. Turner, Mrs. Brownell, and Mrs. Clara McClellan to represent it. They carried a large bee hive.

The Degree of Honor float was a dainty one in pink and white. The figures were, Mrs. Bolton, Mrs. Jolliff, Mrs. Jerry Bolinger, Mrs. Wise and Mrs. Cochran.

The Jolite Club, was a great attraction. They had the king and queen of hearts and four banners showed the diamonds, hearts, clubs and spades. They were Mrs. Will Schaab and Mrs. John Robbins.

Ora Snyder and others had a fine bicycle float, as did Ed. Little and many others we could not distinguish.

The Veiled Prophetess was a lovely figure on a float, Miss Jessie West, with Ethel Snyder and Katie Wolf as attendants.

The W. R. C. had an emblematic group on their float, representing peace, with the blue and the gray clasping hands. They were: Mrs. Sam Campbell, Mrs. Frank Trobridge and Mrs. Ed Metcalf with John Olinger and Wm Elson as guards. It was loudly cheered.

Cleopatra's float was magnificent. She was Mrs. Geo. Henderson, and her attendants were. Pearl Kelley, Gertie Caruth, Elsie Caruth, Vina Cool and Floride Lackey. They made a lovely group.

To be continued on Monday. Those who have been overlooked should call before noon of that day.

CARNIVAL NOTES

The clerk of the weather and "Him who reigns over him," should not be forgotten while we are expressing our gratitude for three days of the finest weather ever seen. Now let it rain.

The best business done by any of our regular business men at their regular business places, as far as we have heard was that of Joe Rainier. He started in with 1000 pounds of wienerwurst and twenty-five of the Armour boneless boiled hams. He sold all but a small amount of each.

Auburn, shake hands with yourself.

One man, on Wednesday, asked anxiously for "that Vau-devil Show." He saw it three days.

Many thought the living statuary was marble. They were converted to the truth when the baby looked around.

We shall miss the crowd some, and the young man who walked with his arm around his girl. But the girl will miss him more.

We shall miss the fakirs for several days. The big headed child and the turtle boy: "Ah, that is George now."

We should have mentioned Geo. Quince in connection with the float of the Maccabees. He was the central figure.

There were many bicycle parade displays we could not get. We could not recognize them. The same is true of the animals. We would have gladly spoken of each, for it was no small matter to do what they had to do.

THE ASSOCIATION OFFICERS.

The officers of the Carnival Association have covered themselves with the glory that comes of complete success earned by hard work and close study carried out on business principles. Two men have been chief in this, W. H. McIntyre, the president, and W. C. Hartman, secretary. They had a herculean task, but were equal to it. Anyone can realize the multitude of vexatious little troubles and big troubles that beset the men who have charge of a work like this. We are glad to see they succeeded, and on their behalf thank the people who gave them their confidence and a patient obedience. These things all help to make a success. The people of Auburn too, including the business men, should have a full share of credit. They deserve the splendid success that has come. No one held back as far as we know, and they now all feel the gladness that comes of good works carried to complete success. Auburn is the queen of the small cities of Indiana and her people are the most enterprising.

MR. MARTINEZ.

As decorative artist and a skillful manager of work of this kind, he has few equals. He was very useful all through the work and our people appreciate it. He was especially valuable in putting on the "living statuary" as it was largely his ideas that showed up the different emblematic figures and his skill and good taste that arranged the drapery. He goes from here to Toronto, Canada where he has an engagement in managing their large industrial celebration.

THE LIVING STATUARY.

These were life-like, lovely and artistic. As said before, much of the arrangement of pose and drapery was due to Mr. Martinez, but the ladies themselves should have credit for their devotion to the difficult task and the determination which enabled them to retain difficult positions so that at first many thought them real marble instead of real persons. We wish to notice especially, Mrs. Kittie Hodge and her baby, who made such a lovely showing. The little one was as cute as if it could understand the important part it was playing. The other ladies were Miss Lucy Markley, Miss Carrie Turner and Miss Ethel Hodge. People were never weary admiring the lovely groups they formed. They kept saying, "That wasn't half long enough," forgetting what hard work it is to be "marble" even for forty seconds.

DECORATIONS.

It was beauty everywhere. No one expects us to describe it. As already said, nearly 15,000 yards of bunting were sold by our merchants and about 7,000 Japanese lanterns. And this was not all, for many had lanterns and other bunting used at other celebrations. This makes us remember the sweet little display at Henry McIntyre's. Along each side of the walk to the street in front of his handsomely decorated residence was a row of the cute little glass "fairy lamps" that were used on the "Wooded Island." They glittered and twinkled and took the eye of everyone who passed. W. H McIntosh had a lovely showing of lights. His house is very large and showed three lines of lanterns for three stories. There were many others along the same street. North Main was resplendent, for there are so many fine residences grouped along there that all was bright and dazzling. Long lines of lanterns characterized West Seventh and lighted the street from end to end. In the business portion, the most beautiful, costly and elaborate, was the arcade in front of the stores of G. H. Yesbera and Brown Culbertson & Boland. It was a lovely ornamental portico, glittering with colored electric lights and all in a style of artistic beauty that made everybody stop and admire. Wilson, the shoeman, had one nearly equal in the form of an illuminated booth. The other two shoe stores, Raut's and Shull's, were attractively decorated, while Bishop & Lackey, Schaab Bros., Jones & Son, were very beautiful and very expensive. Schaab Bros. used up about 500 yards of bunting. Their interior decorations are costly and fine, and we believe will be kept up a month or two. And the Trentman Rooms were beautiful. There were the Fruit House, Sheffer & Chaney's, Rainier's, Cook Ford's. Yellow Front markets Rollins', Bates'. Fischler's Davenport's Robbins & McCord's, D. A. Hodge, F. J. Yesbera, Cowan Sisters, Chri, Bauer's, Ed Baker's, Hebel's, Willis' Sheffer's harness shop, in fact every place, such as saloon, barber shops, and even the fakir stands, lunch stands, etc. etc. It will be impossible to give further details, though there were many lovely ones.

BALLOONIST LOVE.

No one ever saw such perfect ascensions before. There was no hitch, no delay and the vast throngs saw this daring man go up into the sky while enclosed in his "globe" or his "cannon" with no means of knowing whether all was right above him or not. Then at a dizzy height he broke out of his globe or was fired from his cannon, while the thousands held their breath. It was sublime. Of all the aernouts now seeking to steer their frail ships heavenward, we know of none who can compare with Prof. W. Z. Love.

THE BANDS.

Both bands, the Auburn Military Band and Trumpet Note Band had been re-enforced by a few good men from outside, and both played at their best. They were not lazy about it either but played all day and evening They got many compliments. When the military band was playing one evening, a stranger, evidently a traveling man, said he had never heard its equal.

OTHER NOTES.

There was little or no drunkenness though saloons seem to have been well patronized. We think they did well in this regard and appeared to realize that they had the interest of the carnival and the town at stake, as well as other business men. The most drinking to excess appears to have come Friday evening and Saturday morning. It was an orderly crowd. There was no quarreling or trouble, although we had less than half a dozen officers. Marshal Potter and his men deserve credit for keeping things in shape without having to make an arrest.

From everywhere, we hear nothing but praise of Auburn's Carnival, its managers and the citizens generally.

We do not think our business men made so very much, especially at their stands, and some, we know, lost. But they have the satisfaction of entertaining and making happy, the biggest crowd of people ever gathered in one town in northern Indiana.

Of course we have missed some in this writeup. It could not be otherwise. No one should feel slighted, your display was as fine as the others or finer. We have done our best to get all.

THE NEWS RECORD.

SUMMARY OF A WEEK'S HAPPENINGS.

The Latest News as Flashed Over the Wires from All Parts of the World—Regarding Politics, Religion, Casualties, Commerce, and Industry.

LYNCHERS NOT INDICTED.

Gov. Mount Dissatisfied with the Result at Versailles, Ind.

Indianapolis special: Information has reached this city from Versailles that the grand jury, which has been investigating the recent lynching of five men at that point, had adjourned without returning any indictments and that the adjournment was final, the jury reporting that there was nothing further for it to do.

When the report reached Gov. Mount he at once telegraphed to the Prosecuting Attorney asking for information. A few moments after sending the dispatch he sent for the Attorney General and the two were in conference over the matter for nearly three hours. The Governor requested the State's legal adviser to go to Versailles, in the event of the jury's failure to indict, and take charge of the investigation in person. He said that he would confer with Judge New and have another grand jury convened at once and the inquiry could proceed without delay.

SOMETHING WILL HAPPEN,

Judging by the Activity at the War Department.

A special from Washington says: An interesting activity is noticeable in certain orders issued recently by the War Department. They relate to the enlistment of soldiers. The powers of the recruiting officers have been diminished in some respects, but in the more important regards they have been enlarged. The restrictions heretofore governing enlistments of white recruits at city stations are withdrawn.

The orders are interesting in view of the recent announcement of the orders for the manufacture of an unlimited number of shells. The other activities in the Navy Department give the general impression that something is going to happen in which gun powder will be the explosive factor.

Orders have been received at the Navy Yards at Vallejo, Cal., to put the cruiser Baltimore into commission by Oct. 1. She will proceed to Honolulu.

Plan to Found a Model Town.

Thomas McCosh of Burlington, Iowa, contemplates founding a town similar to Pullman. The site he has chosen is Lomax, a small town in Illinois across the Mississippi River, near Burlington. Mr. McCosh has secured an option on 1,200 acres of land and wants to make it 2,000. He will build homes and sell them outright to his employes. His object is to remove to his model town the McCosh iron, steel and wire mills and other industries of Burlington. Lomax is in Henderson County and is the junction of the Santa Fe, Wabash and Burlington Railroads.

Went to His Death as a Hero.

The Berlin correspondent of the London Daily Mail says the disaster that befell the torpedo boat No. 26, which capsized and sunk near the first lightship of Cuxhaven, with her commander, Duke Frederick William of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, and eight of her crew, was due to her being swamped by a heavy sea. As she was sinking the Duke called out to his men, telling them to save themselves. The survivors praise his great courage and coolness. He was a popular and promising officer.

Big Brewery Burns.

Fire was discovered in the roof of the brew house of the John Gund Brewing Company's plant at La Crosse, Wis. The night watchman turned in the alarm, and although every fire company in the city responded, nothing but the bare walls of one of the most extensive malting and brewing establishments in the Northwest remain. The loss will exceed $300,000.

California's Great Wine Crop.

The California vintage is later than usual, but will be superior to any since 1892, while the dry wine crop will be the largest the State has produced since the bonanza year of 1893. The total vintage is estimated at from 15,000,000 to 20,000,000 gallons. The price, however, will probably be low, owing to competition among the big corporations handling the product.

Gas Explosion.

During services in Allen Chapel, a colored church at Indianapolis, a natural gas explosion dangerously burned Benjamin Mitchell. The congregation stampeded and a score of people were trampled under foot. Lillie Warfield, Robert Alexander and William Brown were dangerously injured.

Masonic Temple, Fort Wayne.

The following are the attractions at the Masonic Temple, Fort Wayne, Ind.:
Oct. 12.—"Capt. Impudence."
Oct. 14.—Rentz Santley Co.
Oct. 18.—"The Broadway Girl."

A Fly Wheel Burst.

By the bursting of a fly wheel weighing over five tons at the factory of the Providence Rubber Shoe Company, Providence, R. I., two men were killed and several persons injured. The killed are W. J. Benner, engineer, and James M. Brown, 73 years of age.

Frost in Michigan.

There was a very severe frost in Huron, Sanilac and St. Clair Counties, Mich., and the corn and tomato crops were badly nipped. Tomatoes rose from 20c to $1 a bushel. They are very scarce.

A Duel with Knives.

A duel with knives took place near Keith, Noble County, Ohio, between two young men, named Smith and Martin. They had been threatening each other for some time. They selected seconds, and proceeded to make settlement. Both are cut up terribly, but how seriously is not known. The community is all wrought up over the disgraceful affair.

Presidential Appointments.

The President has appointed Archibald J. Sampson of Arizona, Minister to Equador, and E. G. Kennedy of South Dakota, United States Marshal for South Dakota.

TREATY IS RATIFIED.

Hawaiian Senate Certifies Its Willingness to Join the Union.

The steamer City of Peking, which has arrived at San Francisco, brought advices from the Hawaiian islands up to and including the 14th. The Senate convened Sept. 8, but, owing to the death of ex-Senator G. Rhodes, President of the Legislature, adjourned until the following day. The session of the 9th lasted less than two hours, but in that time the annexation treaty was presented and ratified without a dissenting vote. The session was closed on the 10th, to be convened again next March in regular session.

Despite the action of the Senate the opponents of annexation are continuing their fight and the leaders of the movement express the utmost confidence in their ability to defeat annexation.

Before the Peking left a call had been issued for an immense mass-meeting to be held on the 18th. Some of the annexationists hoped to be able to have Senator Morgan address the meeting, with the object of changing the sentiment of the natives, but there was little likelihood of their plan meeting with success.

FIRE KILLED TWO.

Bainbridge, Ohio, Suffers Heavily from Flames Started by Boys with Matches.

Fire destroyed P. E. Brown's stable and W. E. Beardsley's drug store at Bainbridge, Ohio. An explosion in the drug store caused the death of Beardsley, who was inside trying to save his property. After the explosion Thomas Higgins rushed in to rescue Beardsley, who was his brother-in-law, and also perished in the attempt. Several others were injured from falling buildings, but none seriously except Albert Frey and Homer Huling. The fire was started by boys playing with matches in Brown's barn. Every house on the square, except two, was destroyed. The Methodist Church, seven business houses with their contents, three dwellings and several unoccupied business houses are in ashes. Loss, $65,000; insurance slight. The Chillicothe and Waverly fire departments sent aid, but they arrived after the fire was over.

Russian Grain Crop.

More detailed information than has heretofore been obtainable concerning the condition of the Russian grain crop is contained in a report on the subject to the State Department from United States Consul Heenan, at Odessa. He says the crops over an extensive area have failed. The beginning of the trouble was the dry winter causing the failure of half the wheat sown. With a favorable spring and resowing the prospects were good, however, almost up to cutting time. Then came the wettest season known in years, and hail destroyed both ripe and unripe grain.

Played with Father's Gun.

While some children were playing at the residence of John Greetham of Sandusky, Ohio, Willie Greetham, aged 7 years, picked up a gun which his father, who had just returned from hunting, had left in the room, and aiming it at Johnnie Wiedman, aged 3, pulled the trigger. An explosion ensued, and young Wiedman fell to the floor, fatally wounded. The entire charge struck him in the abdomen.

Boat Sunk.

Hamburg special: Torpedo boat No. 26 capsized and sunk near the first lightship off Cuxhaven. Eight of her crew, including her commander, Duke Frederick William of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, were drowned. The Duke was born in 1871, held the rank of Lieutenant in the Germany Navy, and was a brother of the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin.

Eighty Reindeer Held for Use.

Secretary Bliss, of the Department of the Interior, has instructed the Commissioners of Education to have eighty reindeer now at a northern station in Alaska, which have been broken to work, forwarded to St. Michaels, to be held there for use in forwarding supplies in the Klondike country in case of emergency.

Peace Is Announced.

Constantinople special: It has been officially announced that peace between Greece and Turkey has been signed and the Ministers of War and Marine have so notified all the Turkish military and naval commanders. Most of the European sovereigns have congratulated the Sultan upon the conclusion of peace.

Caught in the Belting.

John Burt, aged 20 years, a machinist's apprentice, employed in the Morgan Engineering Works at Alliance, Ohio, was caught in the belting of an emery wheel and killed. He was whirled around the wheel and thrown heavily to the floor, crushing his face and splitting his forehead.

General Miles and Party.

General Nelson A. Miles, United States army, Mrs. Miles and the General's aide-de-camp have arrived at London. They will make a tour of Scotland and Ireland before embarking for home.

New Spanish Loan.

London special: A special dispatch from Madrid says that the Spanish Government is negotiating a loan, guaranteed by the port dues, for the purposes of new naval works.

Dr. Hunter Exonerated.

At Frankfort, Ky., the jury returned a verdict of not guilty in all of the Hunter senatorial alleged bribery cases.

FEVER IN THE SOUTH.

PESTILENCE SEEMS TO BE WELL IN HAND.

Cool Weather Favorable to the Infected Districts—One Tariff Bill Section Is Dead—Statement by Ratchford on the Strike—Hawaii for Annexation

Is of a Mild Type.

The yellow fever scourge cannot be said to be spreading, but it clings tenaciously when it once gets a foothold. Eighteen new cases were reported at New Orleans, but all are of a mild type. The cases at New Orleans now number 52, which is very few among a population of 280,000. The deaths continue to show an extraordinary small percentage, only five deaths having occurred among 52 patients. Of course there is enough fever in New Orleans to arouse apprehension there and to continue the dismay in other portions of the South. At Mobile the disease is quite ugly, 11 new cases being reported on Saturday, 11 on Sunday, but only 2 on Monday because the weather has taken a favorable turn. The cold wave in the Northwest seems to have spread its disinfecting wings over that city. There are no new cases at Ocean Springs, but the distress of the inhabitants in that little burg is sore. The town is so strictly quarantined that both food and medicine are very scarce.

Cairo is recovering from its alarm. All the local physicians stoutly declare that the two cases at the marine hospital are not yellow fever, but a type of sharp malarial fever so common in the autumn among those who live upon the southwestern rivers. This opinion, if confirmed by subsequent events, will knock out Dr. Guiteras of Pennsylvania, whom the government had employed at heavy expense as the greatest yellow fever expert in the United States. Dr. Guiteras is not the first expert who has found himself minus by subsequent developments. Nevertheless Cairo will omit no precautions against the yellow fever, and therefore it has quarantined against Louisiana, Alabama, and Mississippi.

The South expects to wait for the first frost before the yellow fever is thoroughly stamped out, but it is hardly probable that a sharp frost will be felt below the Tennessee line before the last of November. The postoffice department is in a quandary. Many of the towns in the Gulf States have quarantined against all mail matter, even after it has been fumigated. This shows the condition of alarm which prevails in many sections of the South. Now and then an incident is published which tends to show that the yellow fever can be communicated through the mail. It is related that a person in Mobile received a letter from a friend in Ocean Springs. The letter was written in a room where a yellow fever patient was in bed, and the person who received the letter was attacked by the fever. All these facts are not authenticated, but their publication widens the dismay and tends to make the people believe that the yellow fever town should be treated as the outcasts of the world.

According to the statements of a physician who had experience in the plague of 1878, when from ninety to 100 persons died every day for months, the fever is in itself not nearly so dangerous as the panic which accompanies it. If the people would not become overcome by fear more of them would be saved. He says that probably 10 per cent. of all those who have the disease are likely to succumb to the fever itself, but when the plague is accompanied with excitement and panic the death rate runs up to 30 or 40 per cent. of all those who show the symptoms at all.

When people have become inured to the scenes of the disease and death and can look upon them without a feeling of panic or unusual excitement, the greater part of the danger passes away, and so it is that after any community has experienced disease for a short time the ravages are abated. If, when the first symptoms appear, the patient is given a hot foot bath and a strong dose of castor oil and put to bed where he can sweat out the poison, the great chances are that he will recover within a short time. The disease is at its height nine days after the first symptoms appear.

The presence of yellow jack in New Orleans and the consequent quarantine is killing the business of that city now. This is just the season of the whole year when the shipping trade is at its height and the precautions of the health department will be a crushing blow to the interests of the merchants.

UNITED STATES MARINE HOSPITAL AT NEW ORLEANS.

SCALE IS ADOPTED.

State Convention of Illinois Mine Workers Take Action.

The Illinois State convention of the United Mine Workers at Springfield completed its business and adjourned. A scale was adopted by the convention which is said to be satisfactory to all coal miners in the State. The scale is based on the Pittsburg settlement scale and is about 6 per cent. below the scale adopted by the convention held in August.

A resolution was adopted by the convention which gives all miners the authority to return to work as soon as the operators agree to pay the scale. This resolution also provides that all miners who return to work at the scale price shall contribute 10 per cent. of their wages to the miners not working. Another resolution was adopted which censured the position the operators of the State had taken in not meeting with the miners to effect a settlement of the strike in Illinois.

TREATY RATIFIED.

Hawaiian Senate Adopts Annexation Measure.

The treaty of annexation with the United States has been ratified unanimously by the Hawaiian Senate, sitting in extraordinary session. There was but one opinion on the subject, and the result was that the vote on the ratification was unanimous.

There was never any difference of opinion as to what the Senate would do. This body was elected after the revolution with the one idea of working for the annexation of the islands to the United States. From the time in 1893, when the queen was dethroned, there has been no subject on which there was more unanimity and there has been nobody with more of the feeling than the Senate.

The meeting at which the ratification of the treaty took place was the most largely attended of any in the history of the government, not excepting the trying time of revolution. There were always in the senate chamber large crowds of the best people of the islands, for the call for an extra session was made the call likewise for an assembling at the capital of the leading people from all the islands, and the social side of the republic was at its best.

As soon as the fact was made known that the Senate had agreed to the ratification there was great enthusiasm all through the city. It had been planned to make the occasion the excuse for the most elaborate ceremonies that have been carried out since the republic came into power. There was nothing lacking to the appropriate celebration and the people joined in the ceremonies and jollification freely.

SECTION 22 IS KILLED.

Attorney General McKenna Holds It to Be Inoperative.

The long opinion of the attorney general upon the operation of section 22 of the tariff law was made public Tuesday after being considered for a second time by the President and his cabinet, and after Senator Elkins of West Virginia and Mr. Richard C. Kerens of St. Louis had made a most determined but futile effort to persuade the President and the attorney general to accept their construction of the law.

The attorney general construes the section as not imposing a discriminating duty upon foreign merchandise imported in bond through contiguous countries, and holds that section 4228 of the revised statutes has not been repealed. Therefore, goods purchased abroad and imported in bond by way of Canada or coming to ports of the United States in British bottoms will not be subject to a discriminating duty of 10 per cent.

The opinion is a disappointment to some owners of American merchant vessels and to those interested in the transcontinental railroads of the United States. There is no doubt that it was the intention of the framers of section 22 as it became a law to discriminate against the Canadian railroads and foreign ships. Senator Elkins, who claims to be partly responsible for the added words which called forth the opinion, admits as much, and exerted his influence to the utmost to convince the President and the attorney general that such was the intention of Congress.

The methods adopted by the advocates of the discriminating duties are said to be in a way responsible for their faiure. Fearing to make their object too plain while the tariff bill was under discussion they framed a clause which they believed would have the desired effect and then had it inserted in the section while the measure was in conference.

Senator Elkins has for some time advocated a bill to impose a discriminating duty upon merchandise imported in vessels of foreign register, his object being to encourage and build up the American merchant marine. Realizing that such a measure could not be passed at the last session he endeavored to accomplish his object by having the substance of his bill incorporated in section 22.

The Pacific railroads and allied lines desiring to divert to themselves the bonded merchandise intended for the United States now carried over the Canadian Pacific railroad are said to be responsible for the other new words in the section.

Having failed to impress their views of the meaning of the law upon the President and the attorney general these interests will carry the question into Congress, and will attempt at the next session to have the tariff law amended so as to incorporate the discriminating features they desire. It is understood that the opinion of the attorney general is entirely satisfactory to the President and the Secretary of the Treasury.

END OF THE GENERAL STRIKE.

President Ratchford Reviews the Victory of the Coal Miners.

M. D. Ratchford, President of the United Mine Workers of America, has given out the following authorized statement:

About 75,000 miners have resumed work in the bituminous coal fields of the central states. The strike generally has ended. This is the middle of the twelfth week of its duration. The mining situation is not likely to become disturbed again until the beginning of next year, at which time we hope to be able to settle wage differences amicably and without the necessity of a strike.

It is well understood that the fight will continue from the present time in all fields and against all operators who refuse to meet the rates. The greatest trouble will be found in West Virginia and a portion of Illinois. I am still hopeful, however, that the producers in those fields will conform to the change and put their mines in operation. Failing to do this, we will fight them as we have done until the beginning of next year, at which time it is said their present contracts will expire.

I am well satisfied with the agreement reached and feel that it is the greatest victory gained by trade unions for years. Of course, the victory is not altogether one of the miners. While they have done the striking, trade unions and organized bodies have supplied the necessaries, without which the miners could not possibly succeed. It is a victory for organized labor and not for any particular trade, and we want our friends who have helped us to feel that it is their victory as well as ours. I feel very grateful for the assistance given us by the American Federation of Labor and the kindly disposition shown us at all times by Mr. Gompers and the members of his executive committee.

FROST WILL NOT HURT.

Crops Are Now Said to Be Entirely Out of Its Way.

The weather bureau in its report of crop conditions for the week says: The week has been favorable for ripening and securing crops, but in the Central Mississippi and Ohio Valleys, Tennessee and over portions of the Middle and South Atlantic States, it has been too dry for fall-owing and seeding of fall grain.

The exceptionally warm weather of the first half of the month matured corn rapidly, and has placed nearly the whole crop beyond injury from frost. Owing to drought conditions in some of the more important States the grain, particularly the late crop, did not fill well, and the reports indicate that much will be chaffy. Cutting has progressed rapidly under favorable conditions. Cotton has continued to open very rapidly and picking has been vigorously carried on. The reports indicate the bulk of the crop will be secured by Oct. 15. The weather conditions on the Pacific coast have been favorable, the absence of rain in California being especially advantageous for curing raisins and drying fruit. In Oregon and Washington the damage to grain by rains of the two preceding weeks is considered light. State reports follow:

Illinois—Dryness and heat was broken the 14th, and slight frost in the north half Saturday and Sunday morning, with only slight damage to latest fields of corn. Corn, with late and early, dry and much in shock, with cutting completed this week; yield fair to good, but much light, chaffy corn and some late fields only fodder. Plowing and wheat seeding resumed under difficulties; drills still running in some fields.

Wisconsin—First of week warm, followed by well distributed rains and decidedly cool weather, with light frost in low places. Hot weather matured corn rapidly and two-thirds of crop now ripe. Late plantings require week to ten days. Cutting being pushed vigorously. Good crop now assured.

Michigan—Corn is good crop; nearly all safe from frost and cutting all under way. Buckwheat fine crop and cutting in progress. In six southern counties fall seeding is still delayed by dry spell, and rain is also much needed to germinate seed already sown. Late potatoes generally matured, but yielding lightly. All fall fruits except pears and grapes yield very poor.

South Dakota—Warm days and scattered light rains favorable for corn. The early and middling late well matured and a very good crop generally. The grain of the latest shrunken some in many localities by frost of 16th and 17th and preceding hot winds, but will make good stock food.

Nebraska—Corn maturing nicely, and most of the corn crop made and cannot be injured by frost. Frosts in northern counties, but generally light, and only slight damage done to late corn on low lands in a few counties. Large acreage of winter wheat being sown, and early sown coming up nicely.

Missouri—Good showers in some sections, but over large portions of state drought practically unbroken. Where good rains fell pastures improving and wheat sowing progressing. Rains too late to benefit corn; cutting completed in many places. Late corn very light and much of it chaffy. Frost would do little damage. Cotton picking progressing, crop greatly shortened by drought.

Iowa—Three days hot weather, followed by copious rains and sharp frosts. Greater part of corn crop being matured, the damage by frosts is not extensive. Potatoes and garden truck suffered greatest injury. Plowing and seeding of all grain progressing. Winter apples badly hurt by drought.

Indiana—Numerous local rains, and hot weather ended on Thursday. Light, harmless hoar frost formed Saturday morning. Corn matured and dried rapidly, most is cut and in shock and that still standing is safe from danger from frost. A fair crop of tobacco is being housed rapidly. Seeding wheat progressed slowly only; farmers are waiting for more rain.

Ohio—Very warm, sunny and dry until showers 16th; cool and dry since then, with light frost 18th in some places. Late corn, late potatoes, late tobacco, pastures, gardens, apples, grapes, and wheat and rye in ground badly injured by drought. Early corn about half cut, late generally beyond frost, but not nearly so promising as ten days ago.

ALTON NEGROES RISE.

Separation of White Pupils from the Colored Raises a Storm.

The fight between the Board of Education and the negro citizens of Alton, Ill., over the separation of the white children from the black is growing more fierce and the relations between the two are becoming more and more strained. The attendance at the Douglas and Lovejoy schools, the two buildings set apart for the colored children by the Board of Education, has been very small, and, on the other hand, the old buildings are overcrowded on account of the colored residents insisting on their children attending the same schools as the whites.

Superintendent R. A. Haight has given instructions that the negroes shall be admitted, but that no recitations shall be heard until they go to their own school. They are allowed to remain in the schoolrooms, but only as visitors. There has been no serious trouble, but several of the school buildings were surrounded all day Wednesday by colored men and women who were there to see that their children received proper recognition.

The members of the board are firm in the stand they have taken, and say that no pupils will be recognized or allowed to recite a lesson until they are in the proper building. The stand they have taken is that the city of Alton has been put into one large school district, and they, with the superintendent, have the right to assign pupils to any school they think desirable. They say they are willing, if need be, to have the matter tested before the courts. On the other hand, the colored residents oppose the separate-school plan, and are no less emphatic in the stand they have taken, and say they propose to fight the case to the end. Public meetings have been held and a large sum of money has been raised. They claim the scheme to separate the children is an illegal one. They do not admit even the point of discretionary power which the Board of Education holds is vested in the superintendent of schools.

"ONLY PAULINE."

BY ETTA J. WEBB.

The day was a cheerless one even for November. Perhaps it was for that very reason that the shabby little sitting-room looked so cosy. There was a bright wood fire in the grate diffusing a genial warmth and light. Katherine loved warmth and light, she loved roses, too; not the sweet, wan, fragile kind that overran the old garden in summer, but heavy, rich-scented crimson roses, such as Jack Donelson sent in great handfuls daily. There was a bowl of them now on the piano, making a blot of vivid color against the sombre background.

But it was not Katherine who stood on the hearth rug with fingers interlaced staring moodily into the fire. It was "only" Pauline. The warm glow lent a faint color to her olive cheeks and brought out a certain lustre in her hair that was not there excepting in a strong light. Too, it revealed a lurking bitterness about her mouth and in her eyes. Pauline's thoughts were not pleasant ones. She was feeling at odds with herself and all the world—that disagreeably antagonistic feeling that sets one's moral teeth so sharply on edge.

"Only Pauline!" Long ago—so long ago that it seemed to her sometimes as if it could never have been otherwise—she had become reconciled to the fact that Katherine and Katherine's wishes must always receive first consideration. But then Katherine was so beautiful that the best of everything seemed hers by right. It was not hard to yield to her as to a plainer person or one less charming. Beside, Pauline was not beautiful. Indeed, no one had ever gone so far as to call her good looking. Viewed in the light of Katherine's exceeding loveliness, she was plain even to insignificance. Pretty, vain Mrs. Ward had never been quite able to understand why her two daughters were so unlike.

"Katherine is all Morton," she was wont to say, "but Pauline——"

The sigh and deprecating little shrug were more effective than any mere words could have been in the completion of her meaning.

Pauline had heard the above remark times without number, and had given little heed. But when, one day, her mother made it in the presence of Wilton Eliot, she felt a sudden rush of rebellious feeling that brought tears to her eyes and a choking sensation into her throat. Did it need that to make him fully conscious of her unattractiveness? Surely he could see it without. For the first time in her young life the girl felt that she had not been treated fairly by her mother and Katherine.

It was the thought of this, and not the sunless, chill November day that gave to her face its touch of gloom. So absorbed in reflection was she that she did not hear when the door behind her opened softly and some one came into the room.

"Pauline!"

She turned to confront the slight, boyish-looking young fellow who had just pronounced her name.

"Oh, it's you, Jack!" she said, smiling a little. "I did not hear you come in."

"Your mother said I should find you here. What a nice fire!" He came and stood before her on the hearth rug. "Katherine—is she not at home?" he asked, unhesitatingly.

"No, she has gone to make some calls with Mrs. Westford."

He drew a deep, quivering breath, at which the girl looked sharply up at him.

"I'm afraid you think I'm not very hospitable, Jack. Won't you have a chair?"

"No, thank you. I can't stay long enough for that. Katherine promised to go driving with me this afternoon, but I suppose she forgot," he added, bitterly.

"I suppose so," Pauline answered, slowly.

Her eyes fell beneath his questioning gaze.

"Pauline, tell me!" he cried out suddenly. "Does that man still come here?"

"Do you mean Mr. Eliot? Yes, he still comes here."

A quiver swept his face.

"Will she—do you think—oh, Pauline, is she likely to marry him?"

The girl's hand, hanging among the folds of her gown, was clinched until the knuckles stood out whitely.

"How can I tell?" she answered wearily. "You ought to know Katherine well enough by this time to understand that she will do exactly as she pleases."

"But if she pleases to marry him! I could not bear it—oh, I could not bear it!"

The anguish in the young voice stirred Pauline strangely. She turned and laid her hands upon his shoulders.

"Oh, yes, you could," she said. "It would be hard, but you could."

"Do you think to comfort me by telling me that?" he said, bitterly. "You are very good, Pauline, but you don't understand these things.

He drew her hands from his shoulders and clasped them tightly together.

"No, I suppose I don't—as you understand them," she said, with a touch of sarcasm.

He looked at her in surprise.

"Why, I believe you are out of spirits, too, Pauline! Can it be the weather, do you think?"

"Oh, it must be. The weather is always to blame for everything, isn't it?"

"I think a drive would do us both good. Won't you take pity on me since Katherine has left me in the lurch?"

At any other time Pauline would have been only too glad to enjoy the delightful privilege of a drive behind Jack's handsome bays, but to-day she felt that even in so slight a thing as this she could not bear voluntarily to make herself second to Katherine.

"Thank you, Jack," she answered, gently. "But I'm afraid I'm too dull to make an agreeable companion. I think I'll practise for an hour or so, and see if I can't get into a more comfortable state of mind."

"Well, I won't urge you, Pauline. How dark it has grown within the last hour! There isn't an inch of blue sky to be seen anywhere," he added, glancing from the window as he turned to go.

Pauline accompanied him as far as the door, then came back and seated herself at the piano. She was still there, running over scales with feverish velocity when Katherine came in, flushed and a little tired from walking.

"For goodness' sake, Pauline, do stop that dreadful banging! It is enough to drive one wild! I wonder mamma has patience to endure it," she exclaimed, fretfully.

She went over to the fire, and sinking into a low chair began impatiently to remove her long gloves. Pauline left the piano at once, and came and stood beside her sister.

"Did you not have a pleasant time, Katherine?" she asked.

"No—yes! Has any one been in this afternoon?"

"Jack has."

"Oh, Jack!" Katherine said a little contemptuously. "Any one else?"

"No one."

"Hasn't Mr. Eliot——"

"Why can't you understand, Katherine," Pauline interrupted, sharply, "that 'no one' includes Mr. Eliot the same as every one else?"

Katherine looked up at her tall, young sister, half startled. Pauline was not wont to speak thus to her.

"I think, Katherine," Pauline went swiftly on, "that you ought to feel ashamed to treat Jack Donelson as you do. He is entitled to a little consideration, at least, and when you promise to drive with him of an afternoon and then go deliberately off without a word to make some unnecessary calls, it is not considerate, to say nothing of its being downright rude."

A slow angry flush rose in Katherine's beautiful face.

"Dear me, Pauline," she cried, scornfully, "you are really quite dramatic! Would you mind saying that again a little more slowly? I'm afraid I did not fully understand it."

It was Pauline's turn to blush.

"Be as scornful as you please, Katherine," she said, "but it's true, and you know perfectly well that if it wasn't for Wilton Eliot's money you would never give him a second thought. Why, even Jack would be preferable in that case."

With that she went swiftly out of the room, too angry to trust herself farther with words.

The atmosphere of the house seemed to stifle her. She felt that she must get into the open air. To think, with Pauline was to act always. Five minutes later found her walking rapidly in the direction of the river. It was a dark, swollen flood that crept along between the shelving banks on either side. By-and-by, when the ice had formed on its surface, it would be the scene of many a gay skating frolic. But now, as Pauline stood beside it, watching absently a few fluttering snowflakes fall one by one into the sluggish current, the river seemed to typify her own dark mood.

A step sounded behind her, and she turned to meet the grave, questioning gaze with which Wilton Eliot was regarding her.

"Miss Ward," he began.

"Only Pauline," she corrected, smiling a little bitterly.

"I beg your pardon for having startled you, but I was taking the short cut to the station, and seeing you in the distance, I thought I would stop and say good-by."

"Are you going away then?" Pauline asked in surprise.

"Yes. I find my affairs have been getting into some confusion through my absence or my neglect, and demand my immediate attention. It may be many months before I am in Sterling again."

He scanned her face eagerly.

"I am sure—we all shall miss you," she said, trying to make the words contain the proper amount of polite regret and feeling that she had failed miserably.

"All!" he said. "You?"

"I, of course, Mr. Eliot."

Pauline was getting more and more uncomfortable every instant under that keen gaze. She wished he would go away, and yet——

"But you avoid me on every possible occasion. I never see you when I call. What can I have done, Miss Pauline, to merit your disapproval?"

"You have done nothing, and indeed, Mr. Eliot, I do not avoid you," Pauline said, very earnestly.

"Then it must have been my fancy. Since you have nothing against me, Miss Pauline, you will surely shake hands with me and wish me good luck at the end of my journey?"

He held out his hand, and Pauline could not choose but put hers into it.

Far down the river a trailing line of smoke marked the approach of the train.

"You'll have to hurry," she exclaimed.

"How anxious you are to be rid of me. Well, I shall come again, remember, little Pauline." He looked down into her face with a curious smile. "And now, good-by."

He lifted her hand to his lips, then dropped it and hurried away.

Katherine wondered not a little at her sister's subdued and preoccupied manner that evening. She wondered, too, that Wilton Eliot should have gone away without so much as bidding her good-by, for Pauline had given a matter-of-fact account of her chance meeting with him by the river. But she had no mind to make herself unhappy over it, especially as she had just received a letter from the aunt whose namesake she was which enclosed a generous check and the request to use it in the replenishing of her wardrobe. Katherine's elasticity of temperament was one of the most delightful facts about her.

A week later Sterling, the social portion of it, at least, was startled by the news that Wilton Eliot had lost all his fortune through an unwise speculation. It was Mrs. Westford who brought the news to the Wards. Pauline, who had been for a walk, came in to find her mother and Katherine still in the first bewilderment of their surprise.

"Oh, Pauline, what do you think has happened to Mr. Eliot?" was the exclamation that greeted her as she entered the parlor.

Pauline turned perfectly white, but managed to control herself sufficiently to ask—

"What has happened to him, mamma?"

"He has lost all his money. Did you ever hear of anything so dreadful?" and Mrs. Ward drew a little fluttering sigh of sympathy and condolence. Her relief was so genuine that Pauline felt she must either cry or laugh outright. She chose the latter alternative as being the safest.

"Oh, is that all?" she said.

"Why, you ridiculous child!" screamed Katherine. "What more did you expect? For my part, I can't possibly imagine a worse disaster to befall a man like Wilton Eliot."

"I can—several," said Pauline, who had grown suddenly grave.

"What?" demanded Katherine.

But her sister slipped out of the room without replying.

For several days thereafter Wilton Eliot's misfortune was the theme of conversation in the Ward household—with Katherine and her mother, that is, for Pauline made no mention of the affair and did not care to hear it discussed.

Then the nine days' wonder ceased to be a wonder, and Wilton Eliot dropped out of the minds of everybody apparently.

So a few months glided by. One morning Pauline had been sitting at the piano a long time, playing mechanically, for her thoughts were not on the music before her. Suddenly her hands fell from the keys into her lap and a tear rolled down her cheek, splashing upon her blue gown. At that moment two hands were laid upon her shoulders, and Jack Donelson's voice, vibrating with happiness, sounded in her ear.

"Pauline—Pauline, guess what Katherine has just been saying to me! Katherine, my Katherine now, for she has promised at last to be my wife."

Pauline sprang up with a little joyful cry.

"Oh, Jack, has she really? Oh, I am so glad! Dear, dear Jack, you cannot know how glad I am!"

"Oh, yes, I can," the young fellow said, laughing and coloring, "for I am so glad myself." Then for the first time he noticed Pauline's tear-wet lashes. "Not crying, Pauline—surely not crying?"

Pauline laughed nervously.

"I don't know but I shall—for joy. Let me go, Jack; I want to find Katherine."

And she rushed out of the room in search of her sister.

Katherine was in the parlor, gazing abstractedly out of the window at the snow-filled street. She turned about as Pauline entered.

"Oh, Katherine, Jack has just told me! He is so happy. Are you?" Pauline threw her arms about her sister, and looked affectionately into her face.

"Of course I am, silly pate! Jack is a dear boy, and with money enough to make one very comfortable. After all, that is the chief consideration."

Pauline's arms fell heavily to her sides.

"O Katherine!" she said.

"There, you needn't look so woebegone. Of course I'm fond of Jack, and I do not doubt we shall make a most devoted couple." And Katherine bent with a softened look in her beautiful eyes to kiss the grave young face.

So it had all come about as Pauline once thought it never could. Jack's happiness—I will not say Katherine's—revealed to her the sad longing of her own heart. Whether Wilton Eliot loved her or not she loved him with all the strength of her nature. As the winter wore into spring she wondered vaguely if his promise to come again would ever be fulfilled, or if in the great crisis through which he had passed he had lost all thought of it—and her. She was glad that the preparations for Katherine's wedding in June took so much of her time, and worked feverishly until even Katherine was compelled to bid her take a rest lest she fall ill. And then came the first sweet month of spring—March, not cold and stormy as was its wont, but warm and bright.

Daily Pauline stole away to walk by the river, where the brown sedge grasses were changing to palest green, and there one sunny morning Wilton Eliot found her.

"You see I have not forgotten my promise," he said, as he took both her hands in his, and looked anxiously down into her suddenly pale face. "What! Not a word of welcome for me? Only tears? Why, Pauline—Pauline!"

Nevertheless he understood her silence better than words. Presently, when he had soothed her into something like composure, he asked—

"Shall you mind marrying a poor man, dear? I am rich no longer except as being rich in your love. Tell me, Pauline!"

"Shall I mind?" she said, "I who have been used to being poor all my life?" Then she laughed her bright, sweet laugh. "It is you who ought to mind marrying so insignificant a person as myself, Mr. Eliot, for to the end of the chapter I shall be "only Pauline."—Waverley Magazine.
